TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 12, 1871.

The Advent—Pre-millennial.

In two previous articles, the writer endeavored to show that the kingdoms of this world were controlled by Satan; that the Christians firmly believed that Christ would set up a kingdom on the earth; that Christ did not correct their views, but encouraged them, and that the kingdom now in existence will be destroyed, and not absorbed. In the present article, arguments are used with a purpose to show that a millennium, under the present dispensation, is impossible.

And first, we would remark that the signs of the times indicate the destruction of the present governments of the earth. That wickedness sits in high places and rules with a high hand, is acknowledged by evangelical Christians. The most sanguine believers in the doctrine of the subjection of the world, by the preaching of the gospel, admit that a dark picture presents itself from which the eyes would gladly turn away. It is painful to look at the corruption of the Church, from which we derive all the blessings the world has ever enjoyed, in the dispensations, or will enjoy in the present one. Popery presents to the world "a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." With all charity we say the Lutheran Church, in the Old World, has scarcely enough Christian life to enable us to decide whether it is anything more than a dressed mummy. The Church of England, with all that may be said in its favor, is so thoroughly permeated with the spirit of popery, that a continuance of Christian life, except by separation, is impossible. In the United States, while the gospel light is shining with greater effulgence the Church is sadly defective, and for the conquest of the world. Here and there we find an earnest Christian worker, but the mass of Church members are almost wholly given to the world.

Yet Christians will fold their hands, and sing the glorious strains of joy in prospect of the Messiah's reign, which is to be introduced, in their opinion, by the corrupt and lifeless Church. Such views as this are not the results of faith, but presumption. "No," say the post-millennial adventists, "we believe the Church will be purified, and become more energetic before the introduction of the reign of Christ." Then let entire consecration take the place of spasmodic effort, and half-way Christianity.

Now, let us look at existing facts as history and observation set forth the victories of Satan, and judge wherein our strength lies. "The large mass of the Protestant population of Europe have gone over to infidelity, the very clergy being the expounders of it, while the multitude upon whom the Romish superstition has lost its hold, is swept into the same devouring vortex."

The executive Council of German Radicals, appointed by the Frankfort Diet, which sat in 1849, representing all German liberalism, showed the spirit by which the nation is animated. "We declare, (said the Council) "the supreme power of the State, over all economical and social relationship, as

"Religion, which must be banished from society, must vanish from the minds of men." "We do not desire liberty of belief but the necessity of unbelief."

That such is the truth in that country, the influence which that people have exerted in this country is evident. Of some sixty journals published in this country in the German language, the majority assail every form of Church institutions, make light of historical Christianity, deny the personality of God and the immortality of the soul. [If that were all, they would be in harmony with the Bible: but they deny a future life. ED TIMES.] In Cincinnati, joining hands with Papacy, they demand the expulsion of the Bible from the common schools, and in Chicago the abolition of the Sunday law, and full license to sell and drink poisonous liquors to their hearts' content. The infidelity of that people, practically showing itself in drunkenness, licentiousness, profanity, Sabbath desecration, and lawlessness, forms a picture sickening to the Christian heart.

Other nations of Europe are drifting toward the same vortex of destruction. After the failure of the revolution of 1848, Lamartine wrote that lack of conscience, in the French character made the establishment of a successful Republic impossible. In 1832, Cassimir Periere, said "the thoughts of the people are not the thoughts of a civilized race; their imaginations are those of a savage tribe."

With all the boasting of Americans, we must confess that though sometimes under guise of Christianity, bears rule. Boldly is the claim set up that religion and politics must be divorced; the former to be committed to ministers, the latter to the people and politicians. For many years before the late conflict the cry resounded from all parts of the land, "let political preachers be put down, and let the people rule;" and nearly all the people and a majority of the ministers said "amen!" Many who opposed slavery said the preaching of the gospel will banish the evil, but God destroyed it in his anger.

Now many say preaching will destroy the existing evils, but so it does not appear to the writer. These abominations must come to an end, but like Papal Rome, will be overthrown by God's own hand. God says to the nations, "acknowledge my Son as king or perish;" and all the nations have responded, "we will not have this man to reign over us."

We sometimes hear of the transactions of Christian nations and wonder if such nations really think they are living under the authority of Christ. Take this country as a specimen and we will find the most ungodly practices, not only permitted, but openly advocated. Does Christ license the sale of intoxicating liquor to fill the country with misery; or houses of prostitution? Does he select infidels and prize-fighters to represent the people in Congress, or profane swearers and drunkards to fill the highest place in the government? Does he preside in the courts, where men under the influence of strong drink, or by means of bribes prevent the ways of justice? Drunkenness, profanity, Sabbath-breaking, adultery, disregard of law; the love of covetousness, and dishonesty are not the blessings of the kingdom of Christ. No one can look upon the face of society and deny that many of these evils are on the increase at an alarming rate. Neither political party dare take up the temperance principle and make it a party issue. Popery, infidelity and intemperance hold this nation by the throat, and all the poor sickly government can do is to tremble and promise "your demands shall be respected."

Every vessel which lands upon our shores gives us another installment of this godless element. How long will this government stand in the hands of practical atheists? The destiny of the nations is recorded in the second Psalm in which God threatens to dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. "If God spared not the natural branches take heed lest he spare not thee."

In the second place, we would endeavor to prove that the promises of blessing in connection with the reign of Christ show that the millennium cannot occur previous to his advent. Those glorious privileges are not to be enjoyed under existing facts. Post-millennial adventists are unwilling to give the words of promise their full import. "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be," is a promise which cannot be fulfilled until the return of the Nobleman, who shall and the harvest, when the tares shall be burned. In fact, those who deny the personal reign of Christ on the earth experience great difficulty in finding a millennium. The continual growing of the tares and the persistent rebellion of the enemies of Christ are insurmountable obstacles in the way. The strongest hope they entertain is that the wicked will be held in subjection.

This is the doctrine of a millennium with the millennial reign of Christ left out. In the 37th Psalm and in Christ's sermon on the mount the promise to the meek is that they shall inherit the earth. To find a fulfillment of this in the possession of the land of Judea, which was but a temporary residence, and which—even if the Jews shall be restored to their native country—will be but an insignificant item, is like reversing the telescope and viewing objects through the small end. Besides, it was not Judea, but the earth that God promised to Abraham. The promise was made in Christ, not to seeds as of many, but of one. So argues the apostle: "If ye are Christ's ye are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Again, Christians are "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, to an inheritance in heaven." How exactly the language of Daniel. where he speaks of the saints of the Most High possessing the kingdom which is agrees with the explanation of Paul. In the fulfillment of these predictions, wickedness is to have no place. "The earth is to be filled with glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." "All are to know him, from the least to the greatest." To admit of anything in the form of wickedness in that kingdom is limiting the "holy one of Israel" and using the word of God deceitfully.

In the third place, we would remark that the Scripture connects the destruction of the wicked with the restoration of the righteous. In Mal. ch. 4, the wicked are to be stubble, to be burned up, that neither root nor branch are to remain; but the Sun of righteousness is to arise with healing in his wings to the righteous, and they are to tread down the wicked under the soles of their feet in that day. In Revelation we read of the sounding of the trumpets, which are followed by disaster; but after the seventh trumpet has sounded, voices are heard in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of Christ. In the sixty-third chapter of Isaiah the coming of the Messiah to tread down the wicked is also for the purpose of receiving his own people. "For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come."

By this theory, light is thrown upon 2 Pet. ch. 3. The term promise, at which the wicked scoff, is not as threatening to the ungodly, but encouragement to the righteous. The coming of the Lord is a delightful thought to the Christian, but scoffers regard it as a delusion. "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."...."Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," is a prayer which will not be answered unless God's kingdom shall be set upon this globe.—H. A. Barclay, in Interior.

When our blessed Lord comes, all creation will be purified and resurrected. Some think this earth has become so vile that the sooner it is extinguished the better. They think that it is unworthy of God to retain an orb so poor and so sin-stained, and that it had better be cancelled and a lovelier placed in its orbit. There is no prediction of such a catastrophe in the Bible. The deeper we penetrate the arcana of nature, the clearer is the proof that annihilation is not possible, and certainly is not fact. But apart from this, would it not be a grevious loss were a world of so historic antecedents as ours expunged from its orbit, and dismissed over the depths of oblivian forever? What! shall the atmosphere breathed by the incarnate God cease to exist? Shall the flowers that those eyes looked on, and the sweet sounds of brooks, and waves, and winds, those ears heard, be all extinguished forever? Shall the Mount of Olives, from which he rose; the Mount Tabor, on which a transient gleam of his glory rested, be thrown down? Shall Calvary and Gethsemane be only names of things that no longer are? I cannot believe it; all the instincts of my nature revolt against the idea, and the instinctive desires in our hearts to perpetuate those historic scenes of the past, are ripples from the great tides of eternity, and in their measure they tell us God will not destroy scenes that superstition may in this imperfect economy pervert, and Christians treat only as as they deserve when they reverently remember them. To destroy the earth would be to acknowledge and seal the success of Satan. What was the devil's attempt? To get the earth, and us with it. What is he now? He is the prince of the power of the air. We don't see him, but he walks in our homes; he is here or there—for he goeth about seeking whom he may devour. He or his servants may now be whispering, "Oh, it is all nonsense;" "Don't believe those things; "You have your business to attend to, you must not enter into religious speculations." But whatever he or they may say or suggest, God tells us that Satan shall be cast out of this earth into the bottomless abyss, where he is tormented in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone for ever and ever. If he is to be cast out of this earth, surely it will not be cast after him. He has no right or claim to the possession of it. Such a result would interrupt or reverse the great process that God has constantly pursued, and end the analogy that runs through all inspiration. The great law in revelation is not to destroy, and create other things instead, but to take old things and purify and restore them, so as to make them what they were or should be. All the Savior's miracles are indications of this. When he opened the eyes of the blind, he did not take out the old orbs, and put in new ones, but he renewed the old ones. And when he unstopped the ears of the deaf, or laid the fever of the sick, or made the lame leap as the roe; or when he quickened the dead—these, and indeed all his miracles, were restorative and benificent, as well as miraculous and divine. And therefore we believe the earth will not be destroyed. Indeed, Scripture expressly promises "a new heaven and a new earth." John does not say, "I saw another heaven and another earth," as he would have said if it had been something substituted for the old. But does not "new" mean "another?" Certainly not. For instance, we read, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Does not that mean that that his identity disappears, and that he becomes another man? Not at all; he is changed, regenerated, transformed, and become new only in the noblest and intensest sense of that word. So this earth will be made a new earth; it will be disinfected and purified; the last fire will refine it as gold and silver; and Jesus, the Great High Priest, will wave his priestly hand over it, and on that earth which has shared in our descent and has become corrupt, literally, I believe, not figuratively, its deserts will rejoice, its solitary places will blossom like the rose, the lion shall lie down with the lamb, and a little child shall lead them. These are not stray fancies, but sacred facts and prophecies that must be accomplished. God has so written it in his holy word, and he ll so arrange it in his providenc —Dr. Cumming.

Amboy Camp Meeting.

To those who were not attendants at the Amboy camp meeting this year, I would say that you lost a rich feast. It was an unusually excellent meeting, and the general feeling expressed by those present was that they received a great blessing while there.

The meeting struck a spiritual vein in the commencement, and continued to rise higher and higher unto the close. No jangling or strife; cliques or clans were not so much as once thought of on the ground during the meeting. In fact I want right here to bear my testimony that such things do not exist very much among Adventists, in the West any way, and when they are seen it is mostly by those who see double—and you know what Christ says about the eye being single, etc. The power of God was with his people at camp Amboy, and the saints of God felt it and shouted for joy.

Eld. Samuel Thurber came on a day or two later than he was expected, and found a rising interest. He took hold like one experienced in 'tending holy fires, and soon the meeting was all ablaze. There was deep feeling among the unconverted and many were constrained to give their hearts to God. Eighteen were baptised during the meeting and many others were under conviction of duty at its close. I trust they will yet yield to the truth and obey God. They might have done so at this meeting, and their neglect of it admits of no excuse. Among the immersed was little Aggie Henry, a sweet child of nine years, and the simplicity of the gospel is manifest in this, that a child of tender years can so fully comprehend its primary truths as to understandingly obey its ordinances.

The attendance from abroad was about the same as last year, but I apprehend that if time lasts and circumstances are favorable, the attendance next year will be much larger. And it does seem to me that a new impetus is given to the cause of Christ among the Adventists of Illinois by this meeting. The memory of it to me is sweet and blessed, and my prayer is that all who so enjoyed the spiritual presence of God at camp Amboy may enter the general camp of the saints at the coming of our Lord.

The great law in revelation is not to destroy, and create other things instead, but to take old things and purify and restore them, so as to make them what they were or should be. All the Savior's miracles are indications of this. When he opened the eyes of the blind, he did not take out the old orbs, and put in new ones, but he renewed the old ones. And when he unstopped the ears of the deaf, or laid the fever of the sick, or made the lame leap as the roe; or when he quickened the dead—these, and indeed all his miracles, were restorative and benificent, as well as miraculous and divine. And therefore we believe the earth will not be destroyed. Indeed, Scripture expressly promises "a new heaven and a new earth." John does not say, "I saw another heaven and another earth," as he would have said if it had been something substituted for the old. But does not "new" mean "another?" Certainly not. For instance, we read, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Does not that mean that that his identity disappears, and that he becomes another man? Not at all; he is changed, regenerated, transformed, and become new only in the noblest and intensest sense of that word. So this earth will be made a new earth; it will be disinfected and purified; the last fire will refine it as gold and silver; and Jesus, the Great High Priest, will wave his priestly hand over it, and on that earth which has shared in our descent and has become corrupt, literally, I believe, not figuratively, its deserts will rejoice, its solitary places will blossom like the rose, the lion shall lie down with the lamb, and a little child shall lead them. These are not stray fancies, but sacred facts and prophecies that must be accomplished. God has so written it in his holy word, and he 'll so arrange it in his providenc —Dr. Cumming.

Amboy Camp Meeting.

To those who were not attendants at the Amboy camp meeting this year, I would say that you lost a rich feast. It was an unusually excellent meeting, and the general feeling expressed by those present was that they received a great blessing while there.

The meeting struck a spiritual vein in the commencement, and continued to rise higher and higher unto the close. No jangling or strife; cliques or clans were not so much as once thought of on the ground during the meeting. In fact I want right here to bear my testimony that such things do not exist very much among Adventists, in the West any way, and when they are seen it is mostly by those who see double—and you know what Christ says about the eye being single, etc. The power of God was with his people at camp Amboy, and the saints of God felt it and shouted for joy.

Eld. Samuel Thurber came on a day or two later than he was expected, and found a rising interest. He took hold like one experienced in 'tending holy fires, and soon the meeting was all ablaser. There was deep feeling among the unconverted and many were constrained to give their hearts to God. Eighteen were baptised during the meeting and many others were under conviction of duty at its close. I trust they will yet yield to the truth and obey God. They might have done so at this meeting, and their neglect of it admits of no excuse. Among the immersed was little Aggie Henry, a sweet child of nine years, and the simplicity of the gospel is manifest in this, that a child of tender years can so fully comprehend its primary truths as to understandingly obey its ordinances.

The attendance from abroad was about the same as last year, but I apprehend that if time lasts and circumstances are favorable, the attendance next year will be much larger. And it does seem to me that a new impetus is given to the cause of Christ among the Adventists of Illinois by this meeting. The memory of it to me is sweet and blessed, and my prayer is that all who so enjoyed the spiritual presence of God at camp Amboy may enter the general camp of the saints at the coming of our Lord.

Increase of knowledge:

OR OLD TIMES AND NEW.

Turn back with me a hundred years ago:
See, how the world moved on, so very slow!
But lo! a change is wrought, and now we find
Increase of knowledge, and of every kind.

In olden time regarding works of art,
Not much of knowledge could the world impart,
But has progressed in fifty years far more
Than in so many hundred years before.

Then, Cities which the ancient Fathers filled
Took many centuries to plan and build;
Now, springing up, the massive structures rise,
And glittering spires go towering to the skies.

Then men to go on foot were well content.
Or in the slowly stage coach often went:
Now, whirled away by hurrying steam and lo!
They think the lightning train, by far too slow.

Then, women toiled by hand to card and spin,
And weave the clothe with which to dress them in:
Now, buzzing spindles fly with mighty power,
And do up years of labor, in an hour.

Then, all who sailed a distant land to seek,
Were months upon the ocean's briny deep:
Now, steamers ply the mighty waters o'er,
And millions speed across, from shore to shore.

Then, people thought the art of war complete:
That nought could with their flintlock guns compete:
Now, through the world are deadly weapons sent,
Which all the powers of hell could help invent.

Then, posts were sent on horseback, by command,
And thus the news was carried through the land:
Now hurrying steam is far too slow to bring—
They bid the lightnings quick the message wing.

Then, books and papers were in slow demand,
For very few were printed in the land:
But now, the world is filled with every kind,
In every style, with which to store the mind.

A few past centuries ago, 'twas known
It cost a fortune, to a Bible own:
Now piles on piles, sold cheaply here and there,
Like autumn leaves, are scattered everywhere.

The holy scriptures, writ by God's command,
The Fathers could but vaguely understand:
Now all is plain, in this enlightened age,
For heavenly light illumes the sacred page.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Why in the aged past, by men of lore,
Were not these great inventions sought before?
And why, this mighty knowledge thus unfurled,
Which now we see diffused throughout the world?

If we but look within the word of God we find
The mystery may be solved, in every mind.
In Daniel, chapter twelve, the words are penned,
Fourth verse, from middle, onward to the end.

A hundred years ago they would have thought,
The man insane who all this progress taught;
But in this wondrous age, with active brains,
Men act as though the lightning coursed their veins.

"Truth Crushed to Earth Will Rise Again."

The above sentence is one of those rare exceptions in literature in which truth and poetry are blended in unison. That there is "more truth than poetry" or that there is "more poetry than truth" in this sentence, cannot justly be said. Both find utterance in it in beautiful and harmonious proportion.

But in what respect is it truer than when we apply it to the truth of materialism. This truth stands out as one of the oldest on record. Taking its date from the time that God forbade Adam to partake of the forbidden tree. "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." If any person doubts that God told the truth when he proclaimed Adam mortal, they have only to turn to Gen. 5: 5 to find upon record a verification of God's words.

Here in the year 4004 B. C. [Usher] we find the truth of materialism established. God is its author. Going on we find the patriarchs to be believers in this doctrine. Job. 14: 13; 17: 13; 21: 13; 33: 22; 10: 20; David in Ps. 76: 50; 88: 10; 88: 5, 30; & 49: 15; Solomon, in Prov. 10: 8; Eccl. 9: 10; Isaiah in ch. 38: 8; Hezekiah, in Is. 38: 10, 18.

Most plainly does Christ teach us that we are mortal, and the great need there is for us so to walk in this life as to be accounted worthy of a resurrection from the bonds of death, to an immortal life in God's kingdom. Remove from Christ's plan of salvation the idea mortality of man, and it becomes a wretched farce, unworthy the faith of the inquirer after truth. For it makes it but a bundle of contradictions, a series of nonsensical and needless ceremonies. If man is immortal and cannot die, how foolish for Christ to save him from death. If he is not dead how nonsensical to go through the farce of resurrection.

But, thanks be to God, Christ's plan of salvation is a glorious one, and one that the wisest man on earth can bless God for without stifling his reason; and simply because it all depends upon the truth of materialism.

Nor do we find the apostles an exception to the rule. They were as great heretics (?) as we are. For example: Paul in 1 Cor. ch. 15; 1 Tim. 6: 13–16; James ch. 5: 20; 1 Pet. 1: 3; (and by the way Peter was a rank Adventist, 2 Pet. ch. 3); Jno. 2: 25; 5: 11–12.

Turning to ancient church history we find the early fathers believers in this truth. Barnabas, who died A. D. 90; Clemens Romanus, in A. D. 100; Hermas in 104; Ignatius Martyr in 107; Justin Martyr 164; Theophilus of Antioch in 183; Ireneus Martyr in 202; Clement Alexandrinus in 218; all these early fathers of primitive Christianity we find to be believers in materialism. We find the first Christian advocate of immaterialism to have been Athenagoras, born A. D. 127, dying in A. D. 190. From this time onward the philosophy of Plato seems to begin to take the place of Christ's teachings. Christianity begins to honor Plato, and ignore the plain language of the Holy Word. Materialism is crushed to the ground by papal edicts, and decrees forbidding Christians to harbor a thought of its reasonableness.

Thus the truth lies down in Egyptian darkness, until the light of reformation once more reveals it in all its simple beauty. In the sixteenth century we find Martin Luther boldly denouncing immortal-soulism as a pernicious doctrine. But his light shines but for a moment, and all is darkness again, until a more recent date.

The truth of materialism has had its advocates through all time, but never since its fall has it risen so far from its degraded position as at the present day. Thank God! "Truth crushed to earth will rise again;" and the truth of materialism is rising in all its lofty grandeur. One Christian denomination has adopted it as the groundwork of its faith, and has received in consequence persecution enough to keep them close to the side of their Redeemer.

Fearlessly and irresistibly have they advocated this truth, until now the whole world is waking up to the question at issue. Take up most any standard periodical and you will notice that the great question in licence or theology is "materialism or immaterialism." Turning to scientific literature we find one of the leading houses in that department publishing Mr. Constable's admirable work upon "the Duration and nature of Future Punishment." Would they have dared to do this twenty years ago?

Prof. Huxley delivers a lecture upon the "Physical Basis of Life," in which if we may grant his argument materialism stands as scientifically proven. Yet Prof. Huxley does not profess to be a materialist. But his argument so certainly tends to favor materialism that James H. Sterling, in a reply to his lecture complains that "Mr. Huxley, after having exerted all his strength in his first part to throw us "into the materialistic slough' by clear necessity of knowledge, only calls to us in his second effort to come out of this slough again, on the somewhat obscure necessity of ignorance." Again: "Mr. Huxley while devoting fifty paragraphs to our physiological immersion in the 'materialistic slough' grants but one-and-twenty towards our philosophical escape from it; the fifty besides being so to speak in reality the wind, and the one-and-twenty only the whistle for it."

Prof. Geo. F. Barker, M. D., in his lecture upon "The Corelation of Vital and Physical Forces," says: "The more advanced thinkers in science of to-day, therefore look upon the life of the being form as inseparable from its substance, and believe that the former is purely phenomenal, and only a manifestation of the latter. DENYING THE EXISTENCE OF A SPECIAL VITAL FORCE AS SUCH THEY RETAIN THE TERM ONLY TO EXPRESS THE SUM OF THE PHENOMENA OF LIVING BEINGS."

Truly "Truth crushed to earth will rise again." Materialism is using every moment in the opinions of thinkers, and ere long will be replaced where but for heathen philosophy it would forever have remained.

J. D. JONES.

Disorganizers.

All enterprises will have drawbacks. It is useless to expect an uninterrupted continuation of absolute success in the history of any work. We shall be overtaken with reverses, and meet more or less failures. Especially so if we be engaged in good enterprises. This is an age of evil, in which evil schemes thrive and gain power with comparatively few interferences. Not so with the good!

One of the greatest evils that can infest the community of saints is that described in the caption of this article. To disorganize the forces of righteousness in the very camp of unrighteousness, is to strike a death blow at the success of the former and give unwarrantable courage to the latter. Without organization, poor and weak will be the effort. Societies may flourish for a season in a disorganized condition; but the united testimony of past history is that there can be no permanent and lasting success without centralization of elements and development of power by organizing.

While it is most cheerfully conceded to be the duty of Christians and especially of Adventists to watch with suspicious caution every thing that has the appearance of humanitarianism, whether it develop itself in dogmatic tenacity to certain stipulations of so-called organism, or whether it be developed in other directions; it is also maintained that persons should be treated as manifestly "suspicious" in their proceedings, who visit a neighborhood under the pretense of preaching the gospel and "doing good," and almost the first measure urged by them is the disbanding of the "old organization," and continuing in an unorganized condition, or, else, uniting under somewhat changed tenets from those of the former organization. I say such men ought to be watched, and such proceedings by all prudent and careful men will be regarded as "suspicious" in the extreme.

It must be evident to all reflecting minds that the motive in such cases is a sinister one. There must be design in it. To illustrate. Last spring I came to Amboy upon the call of the "Advent Christian Church" of said place, and became pastor of the same. Now suppose after being here a short time, I have proposed and urged the following course to be pursued by them: 1. You shall disband and cause to be null and void your old organization as an "Advent church." 2. You shall repudiate in toto and without any mental reservation the word "Advent" as a denominational distinction; for it is an offspring of a bigoted and Babylonish sectarianism. 3. This much agreed to, you are at liberty to unite yourselves as a "Christian church" to the "Northern Illinois Advent Christian Conference" (to which you formerly belonged) or remain where you now are, outside of said Conference.

What would be the most charitable interpretation that could be placed upon such procedure? My charity would make out about such a bill as follows: 1. The disorganizer has a selfish interest at stake. He desires to get that church out of the hands of the Conference, and where he can use it, when the proper time comes. 2. He wants a field in which he can promulgate his "peculiar views," though it be to the detriment of the interests of the common cause. 3. He makes himself the arbiter of the views of his more experienced and advanced brethren, by saying, "I am right and they all are wrong."

"There certainly is design in such proceedings as the above." And where it is practised the cause will wane, and ere long die an ignoble death. Such disorganizers are great fault-finders. They have many evil things to say about their brethren, and they very often vainly imagine that everybody is jealous of their brilliant talents and unprecedented attainments. (!) Brethren this will be a good sign by which you may detect men of this class. When men come into your neighborhood bearing some evil report of nearly all the members of the Conference, and claiming that they all are jealous of his great gifts, and persecuting him with the spirit of a Papal inquisition, you may take it for granted that such a man needs watching.

It is a hearty co-operation and unity of action that we need; not the disbanding and distraction of the feeble forces already gathered. May the Lord give us true union in these last moments of time. Yours for Scriptural order.

Our Tour West.

Leaving Eyota, my brother S. C. Wellcome, took me to Utica, Minn., again calling on several families, and intending to put up with Br. P. Ramer; but another Minnesota storm of wind, rain, hail and thunder came on, and we were glad indeed to remain in the comfortable home of Br. Cheatham for the night.

Aug. 8. We went on our next appointment, calling on Br. Saml. Bates, at Stockton, who, with his invalid wife, and sons, look for the Lord. Sr. B. is a great sufferer, but patiently trusts in God, and waits the coming redemption. Br. B. is engaged in the culture of fruit trees, and is proving what Minnesota soil will do in that line, with proper care. He has nearly 200,000 fruit and ornamental trees, over 100,000 of which are of the best and most hardy apple, from one to four years old, and as promising trees as we ever saw. Also a large orchard of bearing trees, together with 130 stands of bees, from which he expects three tons of honey this season.

Arriving at Winona, we put up with Br. J. B. Jeffries, who with his wife has embraced the blessed hope, and rejoices in the light of Christ's gospel.

This is a young but growing city on the Mississippi. The Adventists have a commodious chapel here, and a good field for usefulness, if they faithfully and unitedly improve the opportunity. We preached to the people two evenings, and visited several familes, found pleasant acquaintances, and found some old friends formerly of Maine. Br. E. T. Himes resides here and supplies them with preaching half the time. He being absent at the time we visited his family, we did not see him.

Aug. 10. We took a steamer for St. Paul, 160 miles up the River. This is a beautiful voyage for scenery unequaled by any thing we have yet seen. The water being low, we did not arrive until the 12th, in the morning. Having an hour to wait for the cars, we improved it in looking about this young but renowned city, and were surprised to find such extensive stone and brick buildings, and such extensive preparations for a large city.

We took the train and passing through St. Anthony—a beautiful place—we crossed the Mississippi into Minneapolis; and to our surprise found a beautiful city in an oak grove, spread out on a broad surface of prairie land with magnificent stone buildings, stores, warehouses, hotels, dwellings and play houses, and some 15,000 inhabitants. Two hundred houses are going up this season. This is material progress. There is a society of believers here, to which Br. O. R. Fassett and his faithful wife preach. They also preach in several other towns out of the city; and the Lord has given them success in their work.

We preached on Sunday in their hall, a. m., and eve. to an attentive class of hearers. Here we found Br. and Sr. Overlock, also Sr. Norris and several of her children formerly of Maine, with whom we worshiped years ago. They yet love the hope of Jesus soon coming, and gladly see the doctrine advancing. Our visit to this place and interviews with Sr. Fassett and these other old friends, and some new ones, was very pleasant.

We took the cars to Mankato and stage to Garden city, to spend a few days in visiting our aged parents, our brothers and sisters and families, where we preached in the district of Eld. M. Wellcome, on Sunday Aug. 20, to a class of hearers, who listened very attentively. Sunday Aug. 27, preached again in the grove in Shelby. Then bade adieu to the brethren and sisters, and to my parents, sister and family, expecting to see their faces no more until Jesus comes to gather his people.

I. C. WELLCOME.

The "Saint Peter."

This is the title of a Catholic paper published in New York city, and is "especially dedicated to the infallible Holy See." Consequently it cannot be otherwise but a firm supporter of the interests of the Papacy, and a determined advocate of its dogmas. Of late it has proclaimed the overthrow of the goverment of Italy, the downfall of Victor Emmanuel's dynasty, and the restoration of Rome and the States of the Church to the government of the Pope. All this to be done through the combined efforts of Catholics from different countries joining together and marching to the aid of the Pope, after the manner of the Crusades against the Turks for the recovery of the holy places.

That the readers of this paper may be better informed concerning this new Crusade, is the reason of my copying, for their benefit, some of the utterences of Saint Peter. After showing that the Pope is in captivity, and bound in chains of iron bondage, by the decrees of Victor Emmanuel, says:

> "Catholics, behold your Holy Father! And in beholding him, in fetters, as Christ was when scourged at the pillar, ask God to behold him and to emancipate him, for Jesus sake, with all the power of his justice, of his Omnipotence of his wrath. And something besides prayer is in order. A CRUSADE is in order. It is in the hands of the bishops and priests. If they call on the people to arise, the people will arise. In the name of the Most High God of armies let the call be made. Let it be made in every country—in every city—in every parish. The brutish invader from Piedmont is the lieutenant of hell. The vile, lustful, treacherous, excommunicated dog! Why should the Catholic nations suffer him to put the Vicar of Christ in fetters?"

Such is the language of its leader, of Aug. 5; and this is quite mild when compared with some of its previous articles. But as this one was the latest utterance on the crusade, I thought it best to copy. In an article on the condition of Napoleon, which is in its issue of Aug. 26, I found the following reference made to Victor Emmanuel:

"We are on the lookout for the 'behappening' of the vile King of Italy. It is slow: but there is a force behind it which will not be baffled in its office."

From its issue of Sept. 2 I copy as follows:

"Let us watch. The tempest of wrath will soon be heard. We wager for the temporal power. It is the purchase and chief agent of the cross, and the cross will be found more than able for the Piedmontese banditti."

But these extracts are enough for the present. If wanted, I will send more of them in order. Let us now look at the meaning of this talk. It is this, perhaps: That a crusade is preached wherever Catholics dare do it, that one is being formed; that it will be composed of men from every country within a reasonable distance of Rome; that the Pope expects it and is preparing for it, for in his last speech as reported by telegraph, (Aug. 31) he said in receiving the homage of the Papal Guards:

"I cannot name the day of our deliverance but the time is not remote when we shall issue together from our prison."

Also, that a census of the ablebodied men in the Catholic church has been taken, not only in Europe but in America, some proof of which has been furnished me, enough to show, at least, that we should notice this item. I give one extract from St. Peter on this point, as follows:

On the 24th ult., the President and Vice-presidents of the Society for the Protection of Catholic Interests waited on the Holy Father in order to present an address of loyalty and affection. It was signed by 27,161 Roman citizens, all of legal age, and resident in Rome. The signatures were contained in numerous volumes, and were arranged under the respective parishes of the signitaries, so that error is rendered impossible as to their genuineness.

By the above it will be seen that 27,161 men of Rome are in the interest of Papacy for its restoration to power. Recently Saint Peter announced that the German soldiers of Prussia were ready to go to Rome. Also, that the English Catholics were preparing for the crusade. Brethren, keep an eye on this moment, when it is inaugurated, I think Jesus will appear and put an end to all the pretension of the "cruel man of sin."

C. W. SARGENT.

Jesus is Coming.

Is that so? Yes, reader, that is so. And I rejoice, and my heart is glad with great joy that it is so. What? Jesus, the same who came near two thousand years ago, as the babe of Bethlehem, who after leading a life of toil and suffering, was finally condemned to die the terrible death of the cross. He coming? Yes, the same. Indeed! Pray tell us what reasons you have for your statement.

Certainly, with all my heart. First, then you of course are ready to admit that, he was once here, and that he ended his days upon the cross. Yes. And that he was taken down from the cross, and that he was laid away in the tomb. Yes. And that after three days he arose from the dead, and that, at the end of forty days of blessed intercourse with his disciples, he ascended into heaven.

Oh, yes! every body admits all this. Why? It is so plain in the Bible, you know, that we can't help but believe it.

Well, don't you know that this same blessed Jesus, a few days before his shameful death, told his sorrowing disciples, that, while it was painful for them to know that he was so soon to leave them, and go to the Father, nevertheless "if he went away, he would come again?" Now, if as you say, "every body" believe that he went away because it is so plainly told, why don't "every body" believe that he will come again? Is not that statement equally as plain? More than this: I suppose "every body" is ready to admit that heavenly angels are holy beings, and are therefore free from all charge of prevarication. And I am glad for your sake and mine, that the testimony of angels can be relied upon. Therefore you will allow me to introduce the testimony of at least two of them. You remember, as well as I the scene upon the mount, where he had led his loving and adoring disciples; and that while standing in their midst he was taken up from them, and a cloud received him out of their sight. You also remember that while they stood gazing after him, behold two shining ones (angels) stood by them, who said, "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus [not another Jesus, but this same Jesus] which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Now let me ask you could angels, or any other beings, have employed language any more plain and explicit than this, to convey to the minds of those wondering, anxious disciples that idea that they should see him again on his return from heaven to earth, just as they saw him go from earth to heaven?

Well, I must admit that such testimony is "rather plain;" yet, some how or other, I can't get the consent of my mind to fully endorse it. I can't see any necessity for him to come back; for I suppose that most every body believes that when we die, we, that is the good, go to heaven to be with Christ; and the wicked are sent to that world of torment, and thus the destinies of all are fixed to all eternity.

I am aware that many think thus, but, you will permit me to state, that such a conclusion is not only unreasonable, but unscriptural. I will therefore call your attention to one or two plain statements of Jesus, showing the object of his coming: then you can judge of its necessity. First, then, let me ask you to call to remembrance the words of Jesus, spoken by an angel, to his servant John: "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be."

Oh, yes! That is written somewhere in Revelations. I don't often read in the Revelations, it is so mysterious like you know, and—

Pardon me. But you will not claim that this language I have just quoted has any thing of mysteriousness: what can be plainer? "I come"—my reward is with me [when I come]—and then the object of his coming with reward to give to [not continue to] every man [righteous and wicked, living or dead] according to their works.

Come, friend, let me ask you in all candor, could Jesus have used words more plain, simple and easy to be understood than these, to convey to our minds the object of his coming.

And I do agree with you, that there can be no necessity for him to come again if "most every body" is correct in the supposition that "death is the gate to endless joys," or, the entrance into hell: for that, certainly would be giving to—at least every dying mortal, "according to their works:" while the Master says the object of his coming is "to give [not to perpetuate] to every man [not to those who die, but all, living or dead] according to their works. And the apostle Paul must have so understood the matter when he declared—"He shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and kingdom."

But as we must necessarily be brief in this conversation, I must postpone a further consideration of this subject until another time, hoping you will candidly and seriously ponder this subject until we meet again. Until then, a kindly good bye.

A Good Colored Sister.

A sister in Mississippi was very fond of going to missionary meeting, and singing with great zeal and fervor,

"Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel!"

But when the plates went around for contribution, she always sang with her eyes fixed on the ceiling. On one occasion, however, a brother touched her with the plate and said, "Sissy, its no use to sing 'Fly 'broad mighty gospel with your eyes fixed on the corner ob de ceiling; its no use to sing 'Fly 'broad' at all, unless you give something to make it fly."

Another poor colored sister wanted to help send the gospel to tell the poor heathen about Jesus, but had no money. "What can me do?" said she. Where there is a will there is a way. Before reaching her cabin the way was found. She had a few chickens, which she called her own. Taking one of the fattest and finest of the flock, she tied a piece of red flannel to its leg, and gave it to the Lord. "Sissy," said she to the chicken, "dis is de missionary mark. Now, you's a missionary chicken; 'member dat. All your eggs, dey's missionary; all your pullets, dey's missionary, too. Now go 'bout your business."—Sel.

The Way of Faith.

BY ELD J. R. PRESTON.

"This is the victory that overcometh the world; even our faith." (1 Jno. 5: 4.)

The way of faith, and its victory over the world, is a matter that all ought to understand. The glories of the cross of Christ are so interwoven with our faith, that without the one we cannot enjoy the other. Paul said: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of Christ." Why? we ask. Because I am thereby "crucified to the world." Here we discover that Paul's faith was not the result of feeling, but something that lived, as a reality in his own heart. Faith is, simply, a belief of and a reliance upon the record God has given of himself, his Son, and the origin, nature, and destiny of man, as presented in his word. It embraces, also, the sayings of Jehovah in the revelation of his good will to man, as the object of his love; and all the promises he has made it receives and appropriates; hence is a great blessing to its possessor. It is not dependent upon the feelings of its possessor, but lives, above all circumstances of trial, above the perplexities of the present time, above the power of persecution; and amid the severest storms of mortal strife and confusion brings to his heart the word of Jesus—"I will give you rest."

It is neither exclusively the act of the creature nor the gift of God; but a power which man posesses and is required to use, and which is greatly augmented by the direct influences of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said to his disciples (Mk. 11: 22): "Have faith in God?" as though it was an act that they were able to perform of themselves; but by turning to 1 Cor. 12: 9, we learn that faith is given by the Spirit. The helping influences of the Spirit are given to those who are willing to be saved by grace, and desire to walk in the path of obedience to God's commandments. God expresses his willingness to give his Spirit to them that ask it, and we are assured that the gifts of the Spirit are wrought by the power of the Spirit.

We pray—"Lord increase our faith," that is, help us to believe thee. Now the word of God assures us, that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin: but frail man says, "I cannot believe it." From what source then can that man obtain the assurance that he is a child of God? his heart is closed against the messenger of peace sent to him, and all is dark within, and must continue so, for there is nothing, save the word of God, that can give him light.

The believer on the other hand, though he sees that he is the chief of sinners, reads the blessed declaration and begins to praise God. Having enlisted in the service of God, and continuing in the way of obedience, as he learns it from the great Guide book, he finds that this is a "high way," and that it is an exalted privilege to be permitted to walk therein; for he has the assurance that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.

But I am asked "what is this assurance?" Is it something stirring us up in our sensitive feelings and making us believe that it is so, without any reason why? I answer, no. The assurance is from without. It comes to our ear. Faith comes by hearing the word of God. Then the assurance is this: God says it is so, and we believe him. We believe it because God says it!

But to realise a victory, faith must be active. There must be a laying hold of the promises of God, as the drowning man lays hold on any object that affords a prospect of support. To be able to lay hold of this hope we have a work to do ourselves. God requires us to "walk in the light." If we are strictly upright, we will not be ashamed of our way in the light, for we are willing that all men should see our works. If we are walking in the light of God, we shall do the will of God, as revealed in his word; and when we do the will of God we know it, just as any child may know when it obeys its mother.

If I have the promise of one dollar upon the condition that I chop a cord of wood, will any one suppose that I can chop the wood and not know it? And if I know it, do I not know, as well, that the dollar is rightfully mine? Then I have the assurance that that dollar is mine; and if I have confidence in my employer, I know I shall get it: and my employer (always having means on hand) pays me. So I have it.

The dollar was desirable. I knew the one who wished to employ me had it. I wanted it, but knew it was not mine. There was no possibility of obtaining it by theft. There was but one way to obtain it, and that was to perform the requirement. I may dislike to work exceedingly, but I want the dollar. The struggle, then, is between my disinclination to work, and my desire for the dollar. Finally the desire prevails. I consent to do the work, and do it. Now I have the victory. "Ah! but you haven't got the dollar yet! I am none the less victorious; for I have made his promise my own, and that is worth the dollar.

The sinner would like to live in the kingdom of God, but he is unwilling to do the work God asks him to do, as a condition upon which the kingdom is to be given. He would have rest from the fears that rise in his heart in view of his unreconciled state; but he is unwilling to comply with the conditions upon which, alone, rest and peace are to be his. When he does yield, he knows it. When he obeys, he knows it. And he may know just as well, that the victory is his. He has it by faith. "But the kingdom is not in his possession yet?" That has nothing to do with the victory of his faith. He knows God has it in preparation, and that he has made the promise of it his own.

The professor of Christianity should live in the enjoyment of the victory of faith. To do this he will find it necessary to be diligent. There can be no victory of faith without obedience. But however obedient we may be, we will find ourselves in heaviness, at times, "through manifold temptations;" and the question will arise in our minds—"Am I really a child of God? Am I cleansed from all sin? Am I an heir to that incorruptible inheritance?" Without victorious faith, we begin to say: "Ah! I do not know! I'm the weakest of all mortals! I'm such a sinner!" That may be: but the devil loves to tantalise you with it. Now do this: When Satan would wreck you on these rocks of helplessness, look up! Cry, "I know it! But I've an Advocate with the Father. I know my disease is malignant; but as I take this balm of Gilead, I feel in my soul that I am cured. Glory to God! I know right well that I am not capable of getting along without the great Physician, yet; but I feel that he does cure me, and that he will make me every whit whole, and that then, in the likeness of his glorious bodie."

'Arrayed in glorious grace,
Shall this vile body shine,'

The soul whose eye of faith is fixed on God, rejoices in all that pertains to God and godliness. In the doctrinal lecture, he sees God's purposes and plans set forth, and his heart is glad and his tongue is filled with praise. He sees, according to the divine plan, that

"The foe before this banner flies,
And victory is his."

His heart is full when he enters the devotional circle; for he feasts on royal dainties. In the songs of praise, he sings his victory, till it seems as though gravitation can scarcely keep him, even now, from mounting up, as on eagle's wings to meet his blessed Lord.

When he talks of the way of faith and its victory he talks of his own personal property.

When he talks of the kingdom of God, it is his future home. He finds delight in every description of it—Every room in that "Father's house" has a charm for him, while, to the eye of his faith, jasper walls glitter in the sunlight of that beautiful world till he is lost amid the glowing visions of that eternal home.

He starts from his reverie, like the Seer of Patmos, only to cry from an overflowing heart: Come Lord Jesus! Thy coming brings the final triumph, when the song of victory over sin and death will be sung by the redeemed host, in the land of everlasting rest. Oh! hasten the glorious day! Amen.

A Genuine Work of Grace.

And Zaccheus stood and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him four-fold!

It was not a statement of what he had done, or was doing, but of what he purposed to do. It was not merely the avowal of a resolution prompted by divine grace, but a confession of sin. The Greek reads: "Whatever I have exacted from any man by unfair charges I return—i. e., will return four-fold."—Sel.

Soul, or Life, in Mat. 16: 26, 26.

"Antallagma, the word rendered in exchange for means the counter-price, antithetic to the allagma, or price. The price which the earthly-minded gives for the world is his soul. But having laid that down as a price what has he for a counter-price to buy the soul back again?"—Lange.

"The Lord pursues the awful supposition further, to the verge of paradox and contradiction, but with terrible advantage to the force of this transcendent argument. A man may lose his present life, and yet live on and have a better life in lieu of it; but when he loses his eternal life he is himself lost, lost forever, and the thought of compensation or recovery involves a contradiction."—J. A. Alexander.

Gen. 3: 15. "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed."

We have not space for an elaborate exposition of the Old Testament passages, but must refer to the works of eminent commentators. The fulfillment of this promise is generally regarded as being found in part in the universal hostility existing between the human and the serpent race—each one aiming at the other's destruction. But chiefly is intended the permanent hostility between Satan (who employed the form of the serpent to tempt Eve) and mankind, especially as represented in Christ, our Head. The contrast between the bruising of the heel by the serpent, and of the head of the serpent by the woman's seed, is very significant. The former wound is remote from the seat of life, not fatal, but curable: the latter involves complete destruction of life. So the triumph of Christ over the devil, is glorious and complete. "He will bruise Satan under our feet."—Am. S. S. Worker.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 12, 1871.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

Freedmen's Conference, Morgan's Point on the Mississippi River, Ark., Sep. 13–17.

After this meeting I visit Memphis, and then go to Batesville, Ark., and the White River region, to labor for a time with Br. S. Rosebraugh.

A wide door is open in the White River region among the white people. They are poor and have small means; yet the poor must have the gospel. This people lost all by the war, and have not yet recovered. But are making the best of the situation. And best of all, they want the truth on the "blessed hope." The door was opened here providentially by Dr. Fletcher, and the word of the Lord has to some extent had a free course. They have been pleading for help for two years. I shall now visit them.

After this I shall visit the churches in Michigan, as I have promised Br. Wright and others. J. V. H.

'SLANG' should never be used by any Christian—much less by those called to be ensamples for the flock. Beware of the introduction of the habit.

WE are getting along in America. An Episcopal paper of New York speaks of the Bishop of New Hampshire as HIS LORDSHIP!! Spiritual Lords in America! What will be the next ecclesiastical folly?

THE latest modern improvement in religion is "Praise Meetings"—i. e., meetings for singing, accompanied by a brass band! a very pleasant way of spending a Sunday evening. The profitableness of such worship, however, is another consideration.

In her last novel Mrs. Stowe inveighs against the indelicate and dirty 'French Novels,' and on the covers of the same work her publishers advertise new editions of some of the most corrupting French stories. Thus, says an exchange, we learn how a boat can be rowed in opposite directions at the same time.

The Christian Union has a sharp paragraph on those who offer financial rewards for the production of passages—or one passage—of Scripture teaching the immortality of the soul: —but it does not give the passage. Calling the offer a 'betting argument' is a shrewd evasion; but after all 'chapter and verse' would be a more satisfactory response.

IMMATERIALISM is flourishing and multipliing and replenishing the earth with errors. Its latest offspring is a theory by a Georgian, who sends it out to the world in a work called War in Heaven, of which these are the leading points:

"1. Men once have lived in heaven. 2. Men as they exist on earth are these fallen angels who were cast out of heaven with Satan."

—Comment is entirely superfluous.

THE Baptist credits a point made by us to the Advent Herald, which is of no consequence, and adds—"It is a matter of profound regret to us that so many Baptists are so nearly spiritists." Dr. Graves made some excellent points against orthodox spiritism—we mean the kind prevalent in the churches—in his late debate with Watson: but he does not strike at the root of the error. Immaterialism is its foundation.

Without a belief in personal immortality, religion surely is like an arch resting on one pillar, like a bridge ending in an abyss.

—The above sentiment is an anonymous newspaper item, which we find floating about; and many a soul will read it and accept it as an axiom without further thought. It declares that there can be no true religion apart from the faith of inherent immortality in man, which is as false a sentiment as could be uttered. The only true religion, that of Jesus Christ, presupposes the mortality of man, and its burden is the offer of life—life eternal. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

'FOREVER, an essay on eternal punishment,' is annouced by the Methodist press as 'a valuable addition to Methodist theological literature.' Edward Beecher says of the doctrine it inculcates:

'The common theory of eternal misery involves God, his whole administration, and his eternal kingdom in the deepest dishonor that the mind of man or angel can conceive. The human mind cannot be held back from abhorring such a theory, except by the most unnatural violence to its Divinely-inspired convictions of honor and right.'

WE have a word to say in behalf of 'woman's rights.' She has the right to rebel against the demands of fashion, and dress with due regard to her own comfort, and without regard to prevailing style. What man can avoid a feeling of shame, if he sees his wife, daughter or friend yielding to the demands of the present 'style' of shoes for women, which is thus described:

The shoe worn by the young women of the period is surely one of the most abominable contrivances ever brought into vogue by the caprice of the sex. What need to describe it? Do we not all know the absurdity of its construction, and how ingeniously it has been designed for the destruction of all comfort, and ease, and grace in walking, and also of all semblance to a real woman's foot? When it first came into fashion, the ladies were told by a few sensible men that to put their feet into a machine with a toe like a bird's bill, and a heel three inches high brought under the instep, would insure suffering and deformity.

—Corns, bunions, enlarged joints, and other deformities are the certain results of this abuse of the feet, which is submitted to solely because it is the fashion.

We are hoping to see all women of Advent faith cutting the bands of fashion, and following their own taste and comfort in matters of dress. It is your privilege, your right, not to say duty, thus to do.

WE find the following 'puff' for a book by Rev. N. D. George, in Zion's Herald. The work needs the puff, for it has suffered severely in the damaging review by L. C. Thorne, of New York:

Materialism, in the form of Adventism and Soul-sleeping, is doing mischief in different sections of our land. Its advocates are busy spreading the poison of this baptized heresy. An excellent antidote and preventative may be found in Rev. N. D. George's volume of 310 pages, "Annihilationism not of the Bible," with a straightforward common sense, and that peculiar tact which has charaterized him in previous volumes upon other heresies. Br. George exposes the perversions of Scripture, lays bare the sophistry and high pretensions of the Annihilationists, and affords a valuable exposition of the principal texts involved in this controversy. Those who have to meet this form of error will find valuable aid in this work. Sold by J. P Magee, Boston.

?—We wish we knew what 'baptized heresy' means. In the Methodist theology baptism is, we believe, a system of purification, of cleansing from error and sin. 'Baptized heresy,' would be understood as a periphrastic expression, meaning a supposed heresy which turned out to be the simple truth.

We charge nothing for this advertisement. Mr. George's work is, also, for sale at this office. Price $1 50, post paid.

WE wish Winebrenarians could see where they are drifting. One of their leaders has been teaching them 'sanctification,' through the press. The following sentence opens one of his articles:

Finally, death will come—happy death! Who will deliver the Christian from this body of death. (Rom. 7: 24.) All his weaknesses and sinful imperfections will be ended, and he will then arrive at perfection in that eternal life where all that is done in part shall cease. (1 Cor. 13: 9–12.) And in pefection he shall ever be with the Lord. Hence, comfort yourself with those words. To him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever, Amen. (Jude 25.)

—It is truth that sanctifies—not error. And if our friends expect to reach sanctification through rejection of one of the basal doctrines of Christianity—the resurrection—they are profoundly mistaken. And the writer quoted above clearly denied the resurrection. He says that at death the Christian 'arrives at perfection;' and as any addition to perfection must cause an imperfection, we see clearly that the resurrection is done away. If a dead man is perfect(!), he surely needs no resurrection. Such teachers of sanctification had better learn some of the 'first principles of the doctrine of Christ' before they teach the advanced truths. Why, he would deny that Abraham, and all the worthies named in Heb. ch. 11 are among the sanctified: for Paul declares that though dead they are not made perfect, and will not be until 'we'—all the elect—are, also, perfected. Surely the ways of immaterialism are a maze.

QUERIES.

The late new work, Religious Denominations of the World, by J. Newton Brown, D. D., editor of the Encyclopædio of Religious Knowledge, says of Materialists, on page 435:

"In short, the three doctrines of Materialism, Philosophical Necessity, and Socinianism, are considered as equally parts of one system. The scheme of necessity is the immediate result of the materiality of man; for mechanism is the undoubted consequence of Materialism; and that man is wholly material, is eminently subservient to the proper or mere humanity of Christ. For if no man have a soul distinct from his body, Christ, who in all other respects appeared as a man, could not have a soul which had existed before his body, and the whole doctrine of the pre-existence of soul, of which the opinion of the pre-existence of Christ is a branch, will be effectually overturned."

On p. 431, the author quotes Dr. Priestly, as saying:

"This system [Materialism] gives a real value to the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, which is peculiar to revelation, on which, alone, the sacred writers build all our hope of future life: and it explains the uniform language of the Scriptures, which speaks of one day of judgment for all mankind, and represent all the rewards of virtue, and all the punishments of vice, as taking place at the awful day, and not before. In the Scriptures the heathens are represented as without hope, and all mankind as perishing at death, if there be no resurrection of the dead."

And, quoting 1 Cor. 15: 16-62—"In the whole discourse, he does not even mention the doctrine of happiness or misery without the body."

Dr. Priestly was wise, was he not Br. Himes? Why? Because the Bible does not say one word about happiness or misery without the body.

Please explain to us how Christ had glory with the Father before the world was: as one man says that we thus disbelieve the Divinity of Christ. They say that he must have had a soul or else he could not have existed before he was. J. S. LAWYER.

Our opponents gain one advantage over Adventists sometimes, in the confusion of thought resulting from the quite universal prejudice, or rather impression, concerning the meaning of soul. From earliest years we are taught that it is an intelligent entity, distinct from the body, although the Scriptures never once give it that sense, as we shall demonstrate in the 'Commentary on the Soul' now publishing in THE TIMES. Soul means life, person, or being, mind or feeling.

While we understand the Scriptures to clearly teach the pre-existence of Christ, we know of no passage that mentions his pre-existent soul. He does not say—"Glorify me, with the glory my soul had with thee before the world was," but with the glory had etc. We do not read, that though his soul was rich, his soul became poor; but he made the sacrifice. When he was formed in fashion as a man, his soul was exactly what the soul of any human being is. Sometimes it means his life, sometimes his person, sometimes his mind, or state of feeling, but never an intelligent spirit-entity, distinct from the body. If this assertion be not true, we challenge proof to the contrary. In whatever way the union of the divine and human was effected, it was not, we may be sure, by placing a divine soul in a human body.

There are those who affect to be able to explain the entire mystery of the incarnation. We are not of the number. Jesus himself said: "No man knoweth the Son but the Father;" and our deepest studies on that point have convinced us that he told the truth of the matter. We believe that he was divine, not because we understand his nature, but because he passed the tests of divinity, and is acknowledged by the Father to be such. But when our orthodox friends begin to tell us that with our theory we must admit, or allow, this or that or the other about the soul of Christ, they should be quietly informed that they are using a word whose true sense they do not understand. Soul never means intelligent or conscious being apart from an organization, in Scripture.

As to Materialism involving the doctrine of necessity—we would like to have some immaterialist prove that necessity is not just as likely to be necessary to his theory, as he asserts it is to ours. What does he know of the laws of immaterial substances? (?) Or, for that matter, what can he tell us of the nature of the ultimate essence of matter itself. Immaterialists talk as if they knew all about matter and its properties and powers; spite of the fact that knowledge in that direction has wonderfully increased of late. And it may yet appear, in spite of the assertions of theologians to the contrary, that if he will, God Almighty can so organize a material substance as to make it both conscious and intelligent. That he has done so the Bible declares; and for ought we know science will yet demonstrate that which revelation affirms.

DESERTED BY THE "KINGS OF THE EARTH."

"The cause of Rome" says the London Times, "has been abandoned by all the Catholic powers. Were there anywhere a Prince hesitating between a Concordat and the Common Law, with such modifications as it has now undergone in all civilized communities, he could nowhere withstand the tide of opinion so strongly setting everywhere against Papal Encyclicals and Syllabusses. The laity are everywhere asserting their right to freedom of inquiry, and they can see no reason why their religious teachers should embrace conclusions in flagrant contradiction with all the unconquered and unconquerable arguments of common sense. It is impossible for German straightforwardness to acquiesce in the triumph of Italian quibbles simply because, owing to the vicious organization of the Southern hierarchy, the Italian Prelates in St. Peter's outnumbered the German and other members of the Ecumenic Council. It is difficult to imagine how infallibility can find any partisans in Germany besides the Bishops, most of whom were among its most conscientious opponents in Italy, and who can allege no other ground for their conversion than the practical application of the very dogma in dispute—no other ground for accepting the Pope as infallible than the mere fact itself that 'the Pope has said it.'

Between the doctrine of infallibility and the arguments of the Bishops who now so preposterously attempt to enforce it, it is perhaps not difficult to foretell what will be Germany's choice; and, as we said, the attitude of Germany is not without influence on Austria and Switzerland, and on Italy herself. Reassured, indeed, on the score of the Temporal Power, Italy gives signs of abandoning that undignified policy which purchased peace by avoiding and even stifling all ecclesiastical disputes, and by accepting as the 'liberty of the Church' the most unbounded tyranny of the hierarchy over the mass of the clergy and laity.

In this abandonment by all the European powers of the poor pope, we see the end of the temporal power of the man of sin. Prophecy is fulfilled. The earth is glad. The day of universal freedom of Conscience is at hand. —N. Y. Observer.

—The above system of prophetic interpretation—the literal and the spiritualising—are on trial. There is no dispute between them as to the era we are living in; the only question is as to the nature of impending events. Both say—"Prophecy is fulfilled—the end is at hand." What interest, then, attaches to these latter days, and how carefully we should scan the prophetic word, that we may understand what things are coming, and not be taken by surprise. And we have no hesitation, that the literalists are right and the spiritualizers are wrong. Both agree that the downfall of the Papacy indicates the approaching reign of Messiah. And the Revelator declares (ch. 19: 7), that "the marriage of the Lamb" comes next; which is not the conversion of the world, but the final redemption of all saints, from Abel down.

Both classes of interpreters agree that the sixth trumpet is in the past, and that the seventh comes soon: and who, that is unprejudiced by education, can read Rev. 11: 15–18, and doubt that the literalists are right, and that the seventh trumpet brings the resurrection, the reward, and the kingdom promised to the children of God? Who is ready? If you are not prepared for these scenes, delay preparation no longer. Never was there such danger in delay as now.

LEFT OUT.

In the conclusion of an article upon the alleged interpolation in John's Gospel of the woman taken in adultery, the Christian Observer (of Louisville, not New York) tells a wholesome truth, as follows:

With this passage of Augustine's before us, it is perfectly evident how this passage came to be omitted in one-fifth the manuscripts extant, (especially those copied and kept by monks,) and passed over in silence in almost all the writings of the fathers. On the other hand, when we bear in mind the strong tendency in the third, fourth and fifth centuries to asceticism, it is impossible to explain how this, Christ's apparently most indulgent judgment of an adulteress, should have found its way into four-fifths of the existing manuscripts, on any other supposition than that of its undoubted genuineness.

MARK THIS.

The second Advent occupies a place in the New Testament scarcely second to any other doctrine there revealed. But as it is as unpopular in our day, with people generally, as the marriage institute was in the early church, it is scarcely ever referred to by most of our ministers, from one year's end to another. It does not, therefore, follow that the Scriptures speak not fully of it. No passage is, perhaps, more frequently quoted in prayers, sermons, etc., than "the grace of God which bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lust, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." None more frequently, unless it be the sequel, "Who gave himself for us that he might purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." But not once in a thousand times will you find, see, or hear anything of the golden link with which the Holy Ghost binds together these two parts in one precious whole—"looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." And why this invariable omission? The reason is identical with that in which must be sought the foundation of every fact alleged as invalidating the authenticity of the first eleven verses of the eighteenth chapter of John.

In brief, the modern church has left out the second advent, because it does not like it, and does not wish it to occur. And, by the way, this is one evidence we are nearing the era of the advent. Let the carelessness of others serve as an incentive to faithfulness to this central truth, on our part.

"FOR EVER."

An English corespondent of Zion's Herald writes that "destructionists and annihilationists have been utterly demolished." According to him Constable and Leask, White, and Davis, DeBurgh, Ker, Dobury, Warleigh, Goodwyn, Dennison, Mill, Minton, and so many others of brilliant parts have all fallen before "Rev. Mr. Randles," a young Methodist minister.

The heresy having been thus stamped out and deprived of life in Great Britain by this young David of immaterialism, we of this country are soon to feel the force of his theological weapons, and must consent, whether or no, to be likewise "demolished." Very well. If it can be done, no one desires more sincerely than ourselves that it may be done, and done quickly. If our views of Bible theology are unsound, we care not how soon they be overthrown. And if our Methodist brethren have found a champion in England who can do what their ablest men in America have utterly failed to perform, let him be imported—or, at least, his words republished—at once. We will do our share to aid its circulation; and by way of commencement copy the following 'puff' from the Herald:

"One of the most valuable and able books that has been issued by the Wesleyan Conference office, London, has just appeared. Its title is, 'For Ever, an Essay on Eternal Punishment. By Rev. Mr. Randles.' It ought to be in the hands of every young minister, and indeed of every old one. It is logical, conclusive, and unanswerable. Destructionists and annihilationists have been utterly demolished. Mr. Randles has rendered a service to truth, which every branch of the Catholic church will make haste to thank him for; and if he never publishes another work, this volume of 300 pages will give him a place in Theological History as an author which any man might covet. It is, however, only the first installment. It will be followed by other works from the same pen. Mr. Randles is yet a young man. He has worked quietly and unobtrusively, like all true workers, all really great men. No connectional trumpeter ever heralded his fame. Without any anticipatory announcement, he has produced a book, an unpretentious book, which places him amongst the very ablest writers of the age, and makes him at once famous. I have no personal knowledge of Mr. Randles. I write because I have read his work, and because it is a masterly effort. It devotes some notice to Universalism; and the notice, short as it is, will be very difficult to reply to. Your readers should at once procure a copy of this most able and scholarly work; and if so, they will thank God for giving to the English Methodism such a man as the Rev. Marshall Randles."

—In conclusion we only say—the idea of praising God that the dogma of eternal conscious misery is established! Do Mr. Randles and his eulogist endorse the once taught but now repudiated theological notion, that the woes of the immortal sufferers in gehenna will form one element in the happiness of the saved? Are they unwilling that God should destroy all the wicked? One might think so, from their evident enjoyment of the fancied demonstration of that dogma of which Wm. Archer Butler says:

"It would blanch the intellect, reduce the mind of the Christian to a state of idiocy, deprive him of life, were he but adequately to conceive it.—

" SOUL-SLEEPERS."

It seems from the following quotation, that our nick-name above is to be shared by others. We are willing to relinquish all claim to it,—and to prevent confusion, will allow ourselves to be called Soul-wakers, and will try to deserve the title:

This sect has representation in almost every one of our congregations. They have no written creed, but their faith is founded on a liberal construction of the fourth commandment. Their central doctrine is that the Sabbath is a day of rest. Their chief exercise consists in the singing of the doxology at the close of the service. They select the end of a pew as the most desirable place for their purpose, and perform nearly all their acts of worship with closed eyes, accompanied by deep-drawn, regular breathings. They invariably praise the minister, and remark on leaving the church, "What a good sermon we had to-day!" But the only expression of approval which they allow to escape them during the discourse, is a slight nod of the head. They are very meditative, and carry gold-headed canes. They are usually in "easy circumstances," and never more so than when in church.

THE CRITIC FLOUNDERING.

We have received the following note from the critic referred to in a late editorial, which we give without other note or comment than simply to remark that professed Christians should practice good manners toward all men. We gave his criticism, and fairly met it. This is his response:

EDITOR TIMES, Dear Sir: The inappropriate heading "Critic Caught" in in your paper of the 22d inst, and your attempts at ridicule, and entire evasion of the subject, place you in a pitiable position. If calling a mule a horse would make a horse of him, you would be a powerful reasoner. Until saying so makes it so, you will make just as sorry failures as you did in your "Critic Caught." Very much amused at your evident discomfiture, I am, &c.,

TRIP EAST.

THE SPRINGFIELD CAMPMEETING.

My chief object in visiting the East was to attend to the great campmeeting at Springfield. I had hoped to attend that at Alton Bay, also; but it was located at so late a date, that I was unable to spend the time.

My route was over the Michigan Central and Great Western Roads to Suspension Bridge. I commend this route to all travelers between the East and the West. It takes one close by the Falls of Niagara: and for the matters of speed, comfort and provisions for safety, is not excelled by any route. Ask for tickets "via Michigan Central and Great Western Roads."

My appointment for Aug. 20, at East Shelby, having been changed to New York City, I made my way to the latter place by way of Buffalo, and the Erie Railway. I spent Sunday forenoon and afternoon with the church at Grand St., and the evening with the brethren at 24th St. I could have obtained larger audiences in almost any hamlet in the land, than can be gathered at an Advent meeting in this vast metropolitan city. But I do not expect to find better brethren anywhere, than the faithful few who adhere to the faith, and to each other in New York city. Br. H. A. King supplies at Grand St., when no other preachers are in the city, and Br. T. J. Cox performs the same liberal service at 24th St. The brethren are looking with hope to the anticipated tentmeeting here, next season; and there is no reason to doubt that much good will be effected.

I found Br. H. A. King just home from Europe, in excellent health, and filled with a spirit of consecration to the cause of Bible truths known as Adventism. The Bible Banner is flourishing in his hands; and although he has not been able to carry out his plans for placing it before the people to their fullest extent, this year, the prospect is that by another volume he will be able to place it in every public and private reading room in the land, that will receive it, and in the hands of every person, not already an Adventist, likely to give it a candid perusal. He hopes thus to make it very useful in opening the way for the introduction of our weekly Advent papers.

For one, I feel assured that The Bible Banner will prove a blessing to the cause we cherish, and can heartily commend it to the patronage of all. From six to eight thousand copies are issued, already, monthly.

At the New Haven boat, Monday afternoon Br. King and myself found Brn. J. M. Dettra and John Hook, from Pennsylvania, and we were "right glad" of the company of two such excellent brethren. Br. Hook has had to endure severe affliction of late. May he never forget that trials are a seal of our sonship. They whom the Lord loves are chastened; and the design is, to purge us and make us clean; to free us from dross of the world and the flesh.

Midnight brought us to the campground, and by the morning light we found a hearty welcome from many old and some new friends. The frame erected for THE TIMES office two years since, still standing, was soon covered by our tent-cloth, making us a pleasant home during this great feast of tabernacles. The West was represented by Br. Fassett, Br. and Sr. Mansfield, Br. Holmes (of Minnesota) Br. E. McCullock and myself. Besides, Western New York was represented by B. P. Stevens, W. E. Brown and J. H. Whitmore, with some others. Canada (Quebec), Nova Scotia, and the South (the District of Columbia), also had delegates. There were one hundred and eighty-six tents on the ground, in which dwelt undoubtedly, upwards of one thousand souls, gathered from some fifteen Provinces and States.

In so large a gathering it would be strange if there were nothing to criticise, and stranger still if there were not much to commend; and of all the persons upon the ground, the Campmeeting Committee occupied the most unenviable position. For any errors in judgment were quickly noted; more readily I fear, than their hard untiring labors. Where so many interests are involved, there are frequent calls for prompt decision and firmness of action; and 'men of 'backbone' are needed. and we have them in James Hemenway, Hiram Munger, Geo. T. Adams, and the rest.

The business of the Eastern Association was attended to early in the week, and hurried out of the way as soon as possible, to make room for the purely devotional services. The old officers were re-elected, throughout, though with some considerable opposition in individual cases. One precedent was established, that it is perhaps worth while to make note of. Objection was made to any brethren who are members of and act with the Western Association taking any active part in the business meetings of the Eastern Society. No Territorial limits were defined; but the idea seemed to be that brethren West of New York should not vote, or act on committees.

I think perhaps this action is wise enough and may prevent difficulties in the future; although it is not constitutional: for the organization of the Eastern Association provides that all Advent ministers and churches, without regard to their locality, if they labor in harmony with it, shall have a voice in the conduct of its affairs. But we must be wise, and give no occasion for offences to arise. A Western Association and paper were not foreseen when the Eastern Society was organised, and consequently no provision was made for the exigency that has arisen. But there need be no difficulty in the case: a wise forbearance in the action on the part of visiting brethren from either section, attending business meeting, will ensure perfect harmony of feeling and action.

Let me make a confession—of how I was moved to shame for the West. In looking over the subscription list of The Crisis, in order to give some information to the clerk, I found many persons owing from one to five years subscriptions; and often they were individuals well able to pay. Others were receiving the Crisis FREE who have little more sympathy with its objects than they have with Mohammedanism. And still others—shall I say it?—who had declined to take THE TIMES, on the ground that they could not give up the Crisis, and could not afford to take two papers (a plea which we freely allowed), were owing for the Crisis sums varying all the way from $2 50 to $10 or $12. Allow me to say, emphatically, "these things ought not so to be." There is no excuse: for if you are poor and cannot pay, you can write and state the circumstances of your case so that the Business Agent may understand it.

I am glad to be able to say, however, that in spite of the carelessness of delinquents, the Crisis is prospering, and steadily gaining ground; and as nothing succeeds like success, it can cherish strong hopes of a prosperous future. It is now reaping the ripe fruit of hard work and sacrifices in other days.

The preaching was very good—much better than could be expected from 'that stand'—one of the worst places to speak in I ever saw. Imagine a minister enclosed by a wall more than waist high, except to the tallest, and some twenty feet away from the front line of his audience, except when the interval was filled with occupants of camp chairs. What could Spurgeon or Beecher do with an audience in such an enclosure. They, and all popular preachers get in amongst the auditors, where they can make their power felt. This cooping preachers in stands and pulpits, where they resemble cherubs, in that one can see little more of them than heads and shoulders, is a device of the enemy to weaken their power with the masses. Let us have simple platforms, where the speaker can appear before his hearers, and exert that influence which God has bestowed upon him to make it felt.

So far as I could judge, although some of the best sermons were from the stand, the most effective discourses and meetings were in the tents: and the rainy weather compelled these quite frequently, during the week.

One of the large tents was devoted to meetings in which holiness was made a speciality. These meetings were led by Br. Grant, and some that I attended were quite interesting. But I am not quite sure that I understood their drift and object, and it seemed to me that there was some confusion of thought prevailing amongst those who attended. For myself I believe in entire consecration to the service of God, so that extent that the governing motive of all our actions will be to glorify God. And holiness is the result of faith in Christ as a personal and effectual Savior from sin; and sanctification is "through the truth." And that the road to sanctification is the truth; and not, as I have heard some affirm, lead men into sanctification, and then they will come into the truth. My Bible reads the other way. Not that I believe that none can be sanctified unless they have received the whole truth. No man ever yet apprehended all the truth there is in that rich treasure-house, the Bible. He may begin with never so little knowledge; but he must know something of God before he can be sanctified. And then he may "grow in grace and knowledge." And I would there were more emulation among us in the direction of full consecration growing out of ever deepening conviction of the truth.

However I presume the only difference among us on this point arises from a misunderstanding of terms; and we shall all see eye to eye on the main question.

I have not time to finish this communication now, but may do so hereafter.

Not a Spiritual Death.

The death referred to in Genesis, and commented upon by Paul, is spiritual death, not physical, as every scholar ought to know, and therefore does not come into the category. Physical death marked the close of every eon, and will mark the close of the current one. Spiritual death, according to history, entered with the first transgression, on the seventh eon; it is the death which commentators say will exist when physical death shall be no more. Hence Scripture and science are not at war on this point.

So writes Mr. G. C. McWhorter in Appletons' Journal. He is a little too positive. "The death referred to in Genesis," as consequent upon the first transgression, is the death of man. "Physical death" may have "marked the close of every eon," but it is not yet established that man existed in any former eon. Whether "the death referred to in Genesis, and commented upon by Paul, is spiritual death, not physical," is a question on which "every scholar" is not as clear as Mr. McWhorter thinks. It becomes us to express ourselves modestly when so eminent an author speaks ex cathedra, but there are scholars who honestly think it takes a good deal of astuteness and some violence of interpretation to get rid of the idea of physical death in Paul's allusions to the fall of man.—Examiner.

A Clear Point.

Christ is to reign forever. Proof—"His dominion is an everlasting dominion." (Dan. 7: 14.) "Of his kingdom there shall be no end." (Lk. 1: 33.) "Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever. Heb. 1: 8.) The saints are to reign with Christ forever. Proof.—"And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:....:the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. 22: 5.) If it be impossible for the saints to reign with Christ a thousand years without mortal subjects to reign over, how can they reign eternally when "there shall be no more death," and consequently no mortal subjects to reign over?

—In conclusion we only say—the idea of praising God that the dogma of eternal conscious misery is established! Do Mr. Randles and his eulogist endorse the once taught but now repudiated theological notion, that the woes of the immortal sufferers in gehenna will form one element in the happiness of the saved? Are they unwilling that God should destroy all the wicked? One might think so, from their evident enjoyment of the fancied demonstration of that dogma of which Wm. Archer Butler says:

> "It would blanch the intellect, reduce the mind of the Christian to a state of idiocy, deprive him of life, were he but adequately to conceive it.—

" SOUL-SLEEPERS."

It seems from the following quotation, that our nick-name above is to be shared by others. We are willing to relinquish all claim to it,—and to prevent confusion, will allow ourselves to be called Soul-wakers, and will try to deserve the title:

> This sect has representation in almost every one of our congregations. They have no written creed, but their faith is founded on a liberal construction of the fourth commandment. Their central doctrine is that the Sabbath is a day of rest. Their chief exercise consists in the singing of the doxology at the close of the service. They select the end of a pew as the most desirable place for their purpose, and perform nearly all their acts of worship with closed eyes, accompanied by deep-drawn, regular breathings. They invariably praise the minister, and remark on leaving the church, "What a good sermon we had to-day!" But the only expression of approval which they allow to escape them during the discourse, is a slight nod of the head. They are very meditative, and carry gold-headed canes. They are usually in "easy circumstances," and never more so than when in church.

THE CRITIC FLOUNDERING.

We have received the following note from the critic referred to in a late editorial, which we give without other note or comment than simply to remark that professed Christians should practice good manners toward all men. We gave his criticism, and fairly met it. This is his response:

> EDITOR TIMES, Dear Sir: The inappropriate heading "Critic Caught" in in your paper of the 22d inst, and your attempts at ridicule, and entire evasion of the subject, place you in a pitiable position. If calling a mule a horse would make a horse of him, you would be a powerful reasoner. Until saying so makes it so, you will make just as sorry failures as you did in your "Critic Caught." Very much amused at your evident discomfiture, I am, &c.,

TRIP EAST.

THE SPRINGFIELD CAMPMEETING.

My chief object in visiting the East was to attend to the great campmeeting at Springfield. I had hoped to attend that at Alton Bay, also; but it was located at so late a date, that I was unable to spend the time.

My route was over the Michigan Central and Great Western Roads to Suspension Bridge. I commend this route to all travelers between the East and the West. It takes one close by the Falls of Niagara: and for the matters of speed, comfort and provisions for safety, is not excelled by any route. Ask for tickets "via Michigan Central and Great Western Roads."

My appointment for Aug. 20, at East Shelby, having been changed to New York City, I made my way to the latter place by way of Buffalo, and the Erie Railway. I spent Sunday forenoon and afternoon with the church at Grand St., and the evening with the brethren at 24th St. I could have obtained larger audiences in almost any hamlet in the land, than can be gathered at an Advent meeting in this vast metropolitan city. But I do not expect to find better brethren anywhere, than the faithful few who adhere to the faith, and to each other in New York city. Br. H. A. King supplies at Grand St., when no other preachers are in the city, and Br. T. J. Cox performs the same liberal service at 24th St. The brethren are looking with hope to the anticipated tentmeeting here, next season; and there is no reason to doubt that much good will be effected.

Robbery, theft, extortion are the order of the day. The citizens are making some feeble efforts for a reform. The conservative Nation seriously suggests a vigilance committee and lynch law; and it would really appear that nothing but the severe measures by which San Francisco was redeemed some years since, will suffice to cleanse the Metropolis.

- - - Last week a test trial was made before a committee of gentlemen of Louisville, between Mrs. Keigwing, the noted spiritualist medium, of Jeffersonville, and Professor Van Vleck, who claimed to be able to do without the aid of spirits all that mediums could do. After the trial the committee decided that Van Vleck's exposition was complete, and Mrs. Keigwing had made a total failure, the Professor doing every thing she did, and doing it better. The trial excited considerable interest in Louisville, where there are a number of native spiritualists, and the results is a serious disappointment to them, they having placed much confidence in the success of Mrs. Keigwing.

Abroad.

. . . Austrian correspondents represent that that country is approaching another great political crisis, and that violent commotions are almost certain to attend the next elections.

. . . In Germany the opposers of the infallibility dogma are known as the old Catholic party. Quarrels over church property are imminent, and the State will side with the Old Catholic party.

. . . A revolutionary society has been discovered in Russia, and sixty seven conspirators arrested, drawn principally from the upper ranks of society. The documents captured show that a grand insurrection was to have been attempted, intended to overthrow the present form of government. If ever crowned heads lay uneasy, 'tis now.

. . . It is suggested that Bismark would not disrelish a war with Russia, to humble her as France has been humbled, because it would check the socialistic movement among the working classes of Germany; and with that view, as well as for the satisfaction of a national desire to attain European supremacy, a Paris journal expects that Prussia's preparations for assailing Russia will be complete within the space of a few months. On the other hand it is said that military organization in Russia is now being pushed on at high pressure, the Prussian system of forced service without exception being vigorously carried out.

. . . The Republican Committee of England has to-day issued the programme of the of the party it claims to represent. It embraces the following principles: The application of the principles of federation to the Kingdom; the abolition of titles and privileges; the suppression of monopolies; the abolition of standing armies; compulsory education; the State to provide work for those laborers who are able to work and sustenance for those who are incapacitated from work; the nationalization of land; popular legislation and diffusion of republicanism.

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

The Illinois brethren have had the General Western Camp and Association meetings with them for many years past, and this being their first meeting alone, they, of course, miss the brethren and sisters of the Northwestern States. But the meeting is larger than they expected, and there is every indication of success. They have two large tents, and full as many small ones as they have had in other years, and all is hopeful.

Eld. Burington gave us a sweet gospel sermon this p. m., from Matt. 11: 29. And Br. Burr spoke on the inheritance at night. The rain did not injure the meeting. And, by the way, it always rains when we hold meetings in Amboy. It has become a common remark here in a dry time, "send for the Adventists if you want rain." And they have now had a long dry time, and have looked to our meeting as a time of rain. And sure enough there was a gentle shower last night, and what is better still we have had an outpouring of the heavenly Spirit, and all is comfortable.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 23. It has cleared off beautiful, the air is cool and refreshing and the camp is in good cheer. Elder Mabey spoke this morning on the duties of the embassadors of Christ. In the p. m., Elder Manning of Chicago, spoke on the atonement. In an interview with him after the service, he told me that he examined the Advent doctrine in the beginning of the movement in 1842, and embraced the general views, but did not come out of the Baptist church of which he was a member. He backslid from the faith, and left the ministry for a secular calling. Lately he had been revived, and preached some, and was feeling that he would labor as the door might open. We have need of all the workers we can enlist, and hope Br. M's gift will make way for him among us.

At the close of the p. m., service, a meeting for the children and young people was addressed by Brn. Lawyer, Childs and others. This meeting is to be continued every day. This is right. Our children should be cared for, and youth is the seed time.

At night I spoke on Paul's defence before Agrippa. Acts 26: 27–29. "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest." I showed what the prophets taught respecting Jesus and the resurrection, and urged the people to believe. Deep feeling but no break.

At the close, Br. R. W. Wilson of Clinton, Iowa, and Br. F. A. Childs of Jonesboro, Ill. were set apart by the laying on of hands and prayer, to the work of the ministry. Prayer by Elder J. V. Himes. Charge by Eld. F. Burr, and right hand of fellowship by Eld. Lawyer. These brethren are engaged in secular callings, but have been true and faithful in the work of the Lord. They have both labored and sacrificed for the Lord's cause, connected with his soon coming. And now they mean to do what they can to save men. Br. Wilson thinks of going to California in the coming year, to labor there, if the Lord opens the way.

Our camp is full of joy, union and peace. It is good to be here. All seem to feel that they must get nearer to God, and so be prepared to do more for the salvation of souls, and be ready for the judgment.

THURSDAY, Aug. 24. The camp was electrified last evening by the cry of fire. I had laid down to get a little rest just before the evening lecture, and fell into a sound sleep. Br. McCullock in the mean time hung up his kerosene lamp near where I lay, which exploded through the heat, setting some garments on fire, and also the straw near my feet. Just at this moment a sister saw it and gave the alarm, which roused me up, and with other help it was soon extinguished. A moment more and the tent and all within it would have been destroyed. There cannot be too much care about lamps in our tents.

Sr. Rathbun spoke this a. m., on Rom. 12: 1. Her subject was non-conformity to the world. It was a sound and faithful discourse. Br. Burr followed in some effective remarks. In the mean time Eld. S. W. Thurber of Sparta, Wis. arrived, and electrified the camp with some excellent and characteristic remarks. He said he was formerly of the Christian order, but received the Advent faith some thirty years ago. He was dyed in the wool and could not fade out. He was an Advent Christian out and out. This sentiment was responded to heartily. I do not think there was a dissenting one in the camp. We are Adventists, when we give up this feature of our faith it will be time enough to give up the name.

At 1 o'clock the children met at the stand, when Brn. Lawyer, Jewett and others addressed them, with hope of good. The prayer meetings were carried on as usual elsewhere. At half past two Br. Marshall McCullock spoke on the text, "Deliver us from evil," with good effect. At night Eld. Thurber, spoke for the first time among us in Ill. His text was faith and choice, Heb. 11: 24, 25. It was one of his best efforts. It took, and did the people good. It gave a new impulse to the good spirit and unity of the camp. "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Selfishness has no place where Christian love and unity prevail.

FRIDAY, Aug. 25. Early this a. m., the cry of fire was heard from the village. The best and largest part of the business portion of the town was burned down. The calaboose was also burned, with a prisoner, who was not got out in time to save his life. This was shocking to all. And the destruction of property is also a great calamity to the business community. They are an industrious community, and will no doubt rally and soon recover.

Br. C. W. Smith preached in the a. m., on the love of the brotherhood, a sweet and precious sermon. At the close I asked for a collection to aid Br. Sheldon to circulate his new work in the South. All are interested in Br. S. and gave him good help. We then went to the water, where Br. Wm. McCullock immersed three souls.

In the p. m., it began to rain again, heavily, and so we had two meetings. Br. Thurber preached to one, and I to the other congregation. Seven came out in the prayer meeting at the close, the Lord worked powerfully and gave victory. Bless God for the storm, it drives the saints to the good work, and invites all to seek the salvation of souls.

Br. Thurber spoke at night in the storm, and the good word still went on. About twenty came forward. God is with us. Duty now called me away to the Iowa camp, and conference meeting, and so I left the camp at midnight, and took cars for Dubuque Iowa.

SATURDAY, Aug. 26. Came to Dubuque, Iowa and was cordially received by Br. T. E. Cook, who is still faithful in the good cause. After taking a little rest Br. C., with his team, conveyed me over hill and dale, some twenty-five miles, to Cascade, Iowa. We arrived at the camp and found the tent and congregation all in readiness. A brother had just closed the first prayer. I proceeded to speak from Is. 44: 3–6. "I will pour water on him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." I showed that the fulfillment of this promise would make a glorious meeting here. And I looked for the outpouring of the Spirit, and a glorious time. This was seconded by many at the close. We have a good beginning. Praise God.

SABBATH, Aug. 27. Clear and pleasant, and the people are flocking in from all the region around. The hour of prayer was indeed a "sweet hour." I then spoke on the subject of personal peace in Christ, both in family and church relations. The hearts of many of the tried and sad ones were cheered, as were also the hopeful ones. Some of other denominations were in, and enjoyed the feast.

In the p. m., Br. Janes preached from Rom. 12: 1, 2, on the offering of our "bodies a living sacrifice," a good and acceptable offering to God. It was well timed, and faithfully illustrated and applied. We must have personal and practical religion, or we shall be but as "sounding brass."

At night I set forth the prophecies of the Lord's first and second Advents. I then pressed all the unconverted to come to Christ; but none yielded, though there was much conviction. How hard to get the sinner to yield to Christ! God stretches out his hand all the day long, yet none regard it. A day of reckoning will come, and come soon for us all. Are we ready for it?

MONDAY, Aug. 28. Cascade where we are holding our campmeeting, is an old town of about 700 inhabitants. There is a small Advent church. There are also Baptists, Methodists, and others; but the Roman Catholics are the most numerous sect in this region. They have a monastery, near this place, occupied by several hundred monks, who cultivate the land, are industrious and prospering. One rule of their institution, in regard to diet, is, that they shall eat no meat. They are vegetarians. They live well however, and are well cared for. It is doubtful if many of them would do as well in the outside world as here. Rome has institutions for many classes, both men and women, and takes care of most of them. Yet in Protestant countries, as in our own, our County Houses are filled with their poor.

We have had a heavy rain storm, and it has not cleared off yet, and we could not pitch the small tents to-day. Yesterday it was most clear and beautiful weather; but soon after the close of our meeting we had a tempest. The natural and moral elements are alike changeable. Nothing is stable here. We look to the kingdom of God for unchangeable good. Blessed hope.

In conversation with some of the preachers, I find that they have hard work to get along and support themselves. They have to labor to meet the wants of their families, and travel and preach, much of the time with little or no compensation. This thing should be remedied. "The laborer is worthy of his hire" and should be sustained. Paul said that those who received spiritual things from the ministry of Christ, should in turn impart to them of their carnal things. And all should give "as they are prospered," whether it be little or much. Give, and give freely, for the support of the gospel laborers.

When ministers organize a church, they should teach them the gospel rule of giving; and, also, that the duty of supporting the gospel ministry is like any other duty: neglect is disobedience to law, and is a sin. It is robbery. See Mal. 3: 10. A church that gives nothing dies. A covetous church is a curse to itself and others. It is "an empty vine," it bringeth forth fruit unto itself."

The times are hard with many of our brethren, especially the farmers. But the noble-hearted and liberal among them will share with their faithful pastors and evangelists, and not drive them from the field. The cause of God stands first and above all, with a true Christian, and will not be neglected. Brethren and sisters do not forget "those who labor among you in the Lord." Minister to them of your good things, as they may have need. "He that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully." We are poor, it is true, but the stewards of the Lord among us have ample means to give a generous support to all the faithful ministers.

I spoke at night from Rom. ch. 6, opening the plan of the redemption by Christ. It was a rich and glorious subject. Many spoke at the close, being stirred with the theme—endless life in the kingdom of God.

Indiana.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

It will doubtless afford you pleasure to hear from the very interesting meeting at Holton, which closed on Monday last. Dr. Field, in his usual masterly style, preached to us the everlasting gospel which not only comforted saints, but aroused sinners, bringing them to repentance and the acknowledging of the truth. The meetings were well attended, with many at the door who could not get inside; and on Lord's day the officers of the Christian church kindly gave us their house, which being large and comfortable, the community were entertained with a sermon on the signs of the times. It was a brilliant effort showing the period in prophetic history where we now stand. I wish from my inmost heart that the churches in general would wake up to the study of the prophetic page, that they might be better prepared for its fulfillment.

Our morning meetings were particularly interesting, and on one occasion more so than I ever saw before. I can fully realize how the jailor was converted and baptized "the same hour of the night." A penitent brother, who in a moment of weakness had been led astray, arose in the early part of the meeting, and out of a full heart, and with flowing eyes, gave vent to his feelings, asking the forgiveness and sympathy of his brethren and sisters, which was extended to him in marked demonstrations of love and welcome to their midst.

A young man of more than ordinary talent, but wholly unconcerned in divine things, was present and witnessed the interesting scene I have so briefly described, and being the grandson of our dear brother Morgan, who only a few weeks ago fell asleep in Jesus, and to whom allusion had been made, was so overcome by the divine influence, that he arose and in a most interesting manner, told his feelings: "that the sight of his eyes had affected his heart" that the prayers of dear interested friends had surely prevailed in his behalf, and that he now loved Jesus, and wanted to profess his name just then and there.

I can scarcely tell you in words the joy of the meeting at that period of its prayers. A hymn was sung and the young man came forward and professed his faith in Christ as the Savior of the world, and his desire from henceforth to love and obey him. He was very happy, and has been ever since. I cannot close without telling you that the dear little daughter of Dr. Cass, scarcely eleven years of age, was among those who professed faith in the name of Christ. She did it of her own accord, having asked her Father's permission, if she might join the church. She was conversed with to know whether she understood herself, and the important step she wished to take, and her answers all being satisfactory, she came forward as soon as the invitation was given, showing an earnestness that would well become others of mature years.

Another dear sister made profession of faith in Christ, and when buried with Christ in baptism, could scarcely restrain her shouts of praise to the Lord for the privilege of "going down into the water and coming up out of it" in imitation of his example. My own heart was greatly comforted, and I felt it good to be there, that by my presence and efforts I might somewhat aid those who love and long for the appearing of our blessed Savior, according to his glorious promise.

Oh! how I long to have those precious truths believed and understood as they stand revealed in the sacred page. I do rejoice that very many in all the churches are beginning to see their light as they never saw it before. May the blessed Lord speed the day when the Bible alone will be the rule of faith and practice of all who profess to love his name, that all m[illegible] and long for his appearing, and be numbered among his jewels when he comes.

MARY A. TIBBETS.

Minutes of a Discussion.

BETWEEN WM. A. FENN AND A. BURGESS.

Monday eve. May 8, 1871. Sixth session. Fenn's first speech.

My audience will remember that I placed a wet blanket over my opponent, the last evening of this discussion, in the form of a large number of positive proof texts in favor of the affirmative of the question. You doubtless remember the embarrassment he was suffering also, from the physiological arguments I brought to bear upon the question; which were not answered, in that they were simply unanswerable; and when crowded by the Scripture citations I furnished, he was suddenly in favor of an adjournment. I cite you to these facts that you may be better able to recollect the condition of the question as it stood when we adjourned.

Let me once more remind you, that the question we are discussing is not as to whether the spirit of man continues in existence between death and the resurrection, but, whether it continues as a real being possessed of rationality. I need not tell you that no proof has yet been furnished in favor of such an existence, and the reason is obvious; no proof is at hand by which such an idea can be sustained, else a man of the experience and ability of my opponent would have readily discovered it, and made the very best use of it.

Some remarks upon his recent criticism of my sermon on the rich man and Lazarus, may not be considered out of place in this connection, as I shall not attempt to say more on that passage, in the way of exposition, as you doubtless well remember my argument, a criticism of which was attempted last eve. [Fenn presented a sermon on this passage, after the adjournment in March, at the earnest solicitation of many of the citizens who doubted whether Mr. Burgess would ever meet him in debate again, which was reported and presented to Mr. Burgess, who occupied the eve. May 7 in an endeavor to answer it.]

You will remember that my opponent said that the Jews were the special friends of Christ, instead of being his enemies. This I deny, and refer you to the following proof, Mat. 26: 59. "Now the chief priests and elders, and all the council sought false witnesses against Jesus to put him to death." Does this look like friendship? Again, v. 65: "Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses, behold now ye have heard his blasphemy. What think ye? They answered and said, he is worthy of death. Then did they spit in his face and buffeted him, and others smote him with the palms of their hands."

Is this a demonstration of special friendship, that authorized the bold assertion that "the Jews were the special friends of Christ." My friends, such an assertion shows to what straits a man may be driven in a vain endeavor to contend against truth. Nothing can be more absurd to the mind of one who has any knowledge of the Scriptures, than the claim that the Jews were the special friends of Jesus. I did not wonder at the apparent astonishment of the audience when the assertion was made.

You will remember also that he said "Angels had nothing to do with the ascension of Christ." Let us compare this assertion with Scripture proof: "The chariots of God are twenty thousand even thousands of angels, the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the Holy place. Thou hast ascended on high; thou hast led captivity captive; thou hast received gifts for men." (Ps. 68: 17, 18.)

Now what this passage has to do with the ascension of Christ, we let the apostle Paul decide: "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men." (Eph. 4: 7, 8.) How did Christ ascend, according to this testimony? He ascended with the chariots of God, which are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels. Hence angels had much to do with the ascension of Christ; rather than nothing to do with it, as my opponent claims.

Were we to rest our faith on human assertions, we see how unreliable they might be. I shall say no more relative to this passage of Scripture, as I am quite willing to leave it with the exposition I gave you; as no single point I made has been disturbed, only in the way of assertions, the character of which you see, by the criticisms I just made.

Burgess' first speech.

Friend Fenn would have you think that I have furnished no proof for my side of the question. I assert that he has furnished no proof for his side of the question, from beginning to end of the debate. One assertion is as good as the other. I did not say the Jews were the special friends of Christ. I said they were his friends. I did not say that angels had nothing to do with the ascension of Christ. I said they had nothing to do with carrying him. [He then ridiculed the idea of angel chariots, and then proceeded with his rebutting arguments, reading from a pamphlet which he calls 'comments of an eminent divine.' He quoted 1 Thes. 5: 23—"I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Can God preserve a nonentity blameless? he asked.]

Fenn has given you only part of the definition of entity. Webster says it means, "being, essence, existence." I have furnished proof for the claim that the spirit exists; and my opponent admits it exists. And Webster says 'entity' means 'existence:' so you see I have gained the question. Where is the wet blanket now? I have got it over his head now; and you see him well packed in 'a wet sheet.'

I will now give you more Scriptural proof. 1 Pet. 4: 19—"Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." Gen. 25: 8—"Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man and full of years, and was gathered to his people," Did Abraham become a nonentity? No he was gathered home to the grand assembly of "the church of the first born, written in heaven." We have sustained our position by God's holy word, and the pious of all ages have taught the same doctrine.

Fenn's second speech.

My opponent has been very confident of success in that he has imagined me well packed in a "a wet sheet." But there is a vast difference between an imaginary packing, and real wetting down. Let us examine the character of his packing a moment. His argument is, "Webster says entity means being, essence, existence." Now, he says, "I have proved the existence of spirit distinct from the body, hence I have gained the question." Will my opponent please remember conscious entity, not simple entity or existence, the proof needed is in favor of conscious entity; and no such proof has been furnished. Hence, the 'wet sheet' figure is a fallacy, and I stand just as free and my position is just as firm as before my opponent thought he saw something when he really saw nothing. He has consoled himself with the thought that the pious of all ages, have taught his views of the state of the dead.

There have been many pious popes and bishops and priests that have taught views similar to those of my opponents; and a very large number have lost their lives who did not believe such teachings. I admit that the most eminent among heathen philosophers and papal divines taught the same doctrine, to say nothing about Mohamedans, Mormons, Swedenborgians, and modern Spiritists. And I might include in the category a very ancient sire of this doctrine, who began his labors in Eden, taking for his text—"Ye shall not surely die!" When we come to numbers, who have believed the faith of my opponent so far as the question we are discussing is concerned, he certainly is with the majority: and if this was proof in favor of truth I should yield the ground, but it happens that truth has always been with the minority; and my side of the question is strengthened by this very fact.

The invariable rule observed in the teachings of the Scriptures, in announcing the time of reward for mankind, has a strong bearing on this question. There is not a promise in the book of God, to a spirit or soul entity, independent of an organization. But we hear the Savior saying "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." (Mat. 16: 27.) We see that man is rewarded at the coming of Christ. Where did this man come from, and of what is he composed?

"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." (Gen. 2: 7.) Then we learn that man was created of the dust of the ground, first, and that he (the man) is to be rewarded at the coming of Christ. No provision is made for rewarding spirits, from the fact that they are only principles, and not conscious entities. Had they been conscious entities, and of vastly more importance than the man himself I suppose we should have had the fact plainly brought out in the Scriptures, and ample provisions made for their reward. What authority has my opponent for his claim that a small immaterial part of man is to have more than is claimed for the whole of him.

He has given us a few passages which are simply irrelevant to the question. But I may notice some of them before the debate closes. [Fenn here gave his ideas on the thief on the cross, as published.]

Burgess' second Speech.

I affirm that consciousness does not pertain to man's body but only his spirit. We fully believe the passage referring to the second coming of Christ, and do not claim that man gets his final reward till then. Fenn says the thief went to hades with Christ. In that Christ's soul was not left in hades it must have gone there. He says: my theory is that paradise is a part of hades. I never said paradise was a part of hades, I said it was 'the blissful side of it.'

The promise to John on the Isle of Patmos was, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) Can a nonentity wear a literal crown? The faithful are to receive their crowns immediately after death! [The 'prisoner' is again read, till the close of his speech.]

Dr. Brooks in Portland.

We are obliged to several correspondents for the following report of a late discourse by Dr. Brooks in Portland, Me. Coming from a Presbyterian clergyman the Transcript gives a fair report of the very doctrine it has often derided when taught by Adventists. But we forbear further comment. The Transcript of Aug. 19, says:

"Last Sabbath evening Rev. Dr. Brooks, of St. Louis, a Presbyterian clergyman of marked ability, who has supplied that pulpit two Sabbaths, preached a sermon at State St. church which attracted much attention. It was an eloquent argument to prove from the Scriptures that the second coming of Christ is to be his literal, personal coming, with his saints, to reign upon the earth. This doctrine he found so constantly taught through the New Testament, that he was surprised and grieved to find it so generally explained away and spiritualized by the church; the inspired word is too often taken as a Delphic oracle, not meaning exactly what it says. It was most evident that all the writers of the epistles took Jesus at his word and expected his return; they expected it during their lifetime, though they had no warrant for fixing any date. He believed it was the intention of Christ to keep his church in a waiting attitude, each generation of believers bequeathing to its successor as a precious legacy the hope of the personal coming and reign upon earth of their beloved Lord and Master. He argued the point at length that this second coming could not refer to the death of the believer, nor to the destruction of Jerusalem. This last hypothesis was abundantly negatived by St. Paul's epistles to the Thessalonians. They were Greeks, lived hundreds of miles from Jerusalem, and could not be supposed to have any great interest in the fate of that city. And yet twenty-five verses out of 136 are taken by the inspired apostle in assuring them of the blessed fact that this same Jesus who had ascended up into heaven was to come again and reign with his saints upon the earth. Some commentator had said that one verse out of thirty in the whole New Testament referred to this doctrine. The speaker had personally verified this statement. He found that one verse out of thirty directly enunciated the doctrine, and one out of twenty-five taught it directly or by implication. The disciples of the Christian church for 300 years were in the constant expectation of this second coming. Christ but once mentioned the subject of baptism, and the writers of the epistles but seldom alluded to it, and yet the church is very particular to observe the ordinance, while here is a matter so important that one twenty-fifth of the whole New Testament treats of it, of which the church is neglecting to take note. Is this the attitude of a bride awaiting the coming of her lord? The speaker said some Christians had told him that the idea of Christ's literal coming was so repugnant that their whole nature recoiled from it. What should we say of a wife who trembles in every limb with dread when told her long absent husband was about to return! He closed with eloquent practical remarks upon the elevating influence of this faith. This earth, the arena of Satan's own choosing, shall be the scene of Christ's triumphant reign. He did not believe that any predicted event except this now remains unfulfilled.

On the Other Side of the Water.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Dr. John Lord writes to the New York Observer under date of July 10, in the following strain. How long can things go on in this fashion? He says:

It is not the fashion in London to appeal to the intellect. Everything is in the way of amusement. The whole city seems sensualized. Of course, there are grand exceptions; but no man, except in Parliament, or in the court, or universities, rises to fame, in the popular sense unless he amuses. The novelists are sensational. Music is sensational. Preaching is sensational. Everything is sensational. More and more are all classes assimilating in intellect, with no towering men of genius. He who expects to be lifted up by profound thought and lofty, impassioned eloquence, will be disap[illegible] here, as in Antioch, or Cor[illegible], or Rome in the third century, men live for the present hour. An intense Epicureanism is the the only vitality, aside, of course, from machinery. Society is conventional when not luxurious.

NOT IN EARNEST.

I am, however, amazed at so much honesty, propriety, civility and decorum; while there appears to be so little of earnest thought or religious life. It is not preaching or reading that keeps the English people so respectable. It is moral machinery—custom, public opinion. Yet I cannot see how public opinion or conventional life can long be sound when there is so little interest in those subjects which pertain to intellectual growth and moral improvement. I anticipate a decline of those virtues in which the strength of man is located. I see no sources of renovation. And when I examine the heart of common life, I am amazed at the extent of demoralizing amusements. The shops shut at 6. Philanthropy—mechanical philanthropy—has effected this. But the clerks spend their evenings at low theaters, still lower saloons of vulgar pleasure, in coffee houses, in drinking and smoking. The gin palaces are still more splendid in gas than ever; the tobacco shops are greatly multiplied, and the streets as ever, disgraced by the class who walk in them till nearly morning with mincing eyes and outstretched necks, and where no stern prophet arises to rebuke the degeneracy. When and how will retribution come?—for come it must, or the God of Moses and David and Isaiah is not the same to-day, yesterday and forever.

GIVEN TO PLEASURE.

There seems to be a greater devotion to pleasure in London than with us. The lower classes, after their day's work, frequent the low places of amusement. With the upper classes, it is a perpetual round of banquets and fetes and operas—after the duties of the day are discharged. The day does not begin till 9 o'clock with scarcely any class, and sometimes much later, even when the sun rises at 4 or 5. At 7 in the morning the streets are deserted, except by hucksters and market people. The gayest hours are from 5 to 12 p. m. The streets are all animation at 12 o'clock. One is hungry in a country town in America at 2 o'clock, in New York at 6, in London not till 7 or 8. The The upper classes seldom dine till 7 1-2. Queen gave a public breakfast the other day, from 4 to 6 p. m.! It is an old story for parliament to sit till 2 in the morning; but it is not till 11 or 12 that balls or parties begin. Still I suppose there are thousands who do not bow the knee to Baal of fashion, but retire in good season, and commence work at 10 in the morning. The courts open at 10, and lunch at 1.

Not long ago we observed on the way to his pulpit, in this city, a Dr. of Divinity who, at every few steps, squirted from his mouth a dirty stream of tobacco juice. Comment is unnecessary. But such a mouth, we thought, was not fit to speak a pure word, or utter a beautiful truth. When will preachers learn to be decent.

Conference Minutes

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE OF NORTH AMERICA.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of this Conference, held on the Camp-ground, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 25, 1871, Eld. J. Couch presiding, prayer was offered by Eld S. G. Mathewson; after which it was Voted That the coming session of this conference be postponed one year.

After some talk relative to the place where the next session should be held, it was voted to adjourn sine die.

Michigan.

EASTERN DISTRICT.

Met at S. H. in Alma, Aug. 24, 1871, Members present, Elds. Mackie, Wright, Drummond, Snook; Brn. Durand, Cummins, Hicks, Wood, Doty, Sloan, Campbell, Williams, Histed and others. Visiting Brn. invited to act with us. Conference opened with Eld. Drummond in the chair. Brn. Mackie, Wright and Durand were appointed Business Committee. Brn. Hicks, Cummins and Mackie Nominating Committee; Brn. Durand and Wood Devotional Committee. Brn. Drummond, Wright and Mackie Committee on Ordination and License. Geo. Wright jr. was nominated for Chairman, and J. M. Snook for Secretary, and were elected.

By request of the Gagetown church the name was changed to Advent Christian Church at [illegible]'s Corners; also, the [illegible] to Almer Church. [illegible] was received as delegate from Campbell's Corners; A. B. Doty from Oak; J. Sloan from [illegible].

Ordination Committee reported in favor of receiving Brn. J. S. Nowlin and C. W. Leonard, both of Dearborn, and granting them license. Also, in favor of ordaining Brn. E. H. Durand and W. J. Cummins. Ordination service took place Sunday eve. the 27, by Brn. Wright, Mackie and Snook.

Church at Woerth was revived; thirteen members. Br. Shannon, elder, and Br. Wright Pastor.

The reports of the churches and brethren were very interesting, indicating prosperity, and the Lord's blessing. Some exceedingly interesting personalities were reported. The preaching found way to the hearts of the people, and some started out to serve the Lord. Eight were baptized by Br. Durand, and nine were added to the church. Br. Mackie remains a week with Br. Durand, who is much esteemed in all these parts, and of good report, his opponents themselves being witnesses. This is an exceedingly interesting field, and we hope for much fruit yet in this reigon.

Conference adjourned agreeing that the next meeting should be held at Lapeer, commencing Nov. 23, and holding over Lord's day.

WINONA DISTRICT.

The third meeting of this district convened at Utica, in Cheatam's grove, Sept. 1. Elders present: P. Mitson, M. Welcome, E. T. Himes, P. Rainger, S. C. Welcome, Sr. R. M. Rowell, and brethren from Rochester, Wasioga, Eyota, Viola, St. Charles, Utica, Lewiston, Winona, Elliota, and Burr Oak and Cresco, Iowa, and elsewhere.

In the absence of W. J. Bursell, Peter Mitson was chosen President pro tem.

Report of the Committee on preaching was called for. Br. Smith of Burr Oak reported on his part as a member of that committee, the other two being absent. He said there were several points destitute of preaching, and he had been unable to have them all supplied. Report received and committee discharged.

On motion Eld. I. C. Wellcome of Maine, and other visiting brethren were invited to seats in the conference.

On motion' the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to ascertain what preachers are laboring in this district, and in what capacity; whether as pastors or evangelists; and to what extent they are laboring; and report to the next Q. M. A. A. Gilbert, Winona, D. Cheatam, Utica; J. McCabe, Hesper, (Iowa), were appointed.

Application was then made by Br. C. Rima of Cresco, Iowa, for license to improve his gift. On hearing his statement, with the recommendation of the brethren, the request was granted.

On motion, it was resolved that an annual campmeeting for this district be held at Utica, in Cheatam's grove, commencing the first Monday in June, to continue over the following Sunday.

A campmeeting committee of three was appointed: A. A. Gilbert, O. Richardson, W. Baker. They were instructed to confer with the Methodist trustees in regard to the time of our meeting, and report at the next session whether the time we have adopted will be agreeable with their arrangements.

Voted, that our next session be held at the Nichols S. H., Canton Co., commencing, Friday, Oct. 20.

Resolved, That we hereby express our hearty thanks to the Methodist church for the use of their camp fixtures during this meeting; and to the community for the kind reception we have received in their midst.

A collection of $10 69 was taken up for the Conference Mission Fund.

The devotional exercises were participated in by different denominations, a spirit of unity and freedom prevailed. and the meeting closed with a glorious triumph for the cause of truth. Friday eve., the congregation was addressed by Eld. E. T. Himes on the subject of Christian unity. Saturday morning Eld. Geo. P. Mitson spoke on heart religion as connected with the hope of seeing Jesus soon. In the eve., Eld. M. Welcome spoke on the love of God to man as a reason why we should love him. A lively love-feast opened the services on Sunday, after which Eld. I. C. Welcome addressed a large congregation on the mission of Jesus to seek and to save that which was lost, and continued the subject in the afternoon, urging all to repent of sin and secure salvation. Sr. Welcome spoke at eve., concerning the coming of Christ and a preparation for that event.

An interesting and affecting baptism took place at the lake in the afternoon. Seven were buried in the likeness of Christ's death. Farewell greetings were exchanged at the departure to the Lord's table singing [illegible]

"We'll stand the storm, it won't be long,
We'll anchor bye and bye."

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 12, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Collins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

The Good Way.

The next regular issue of the Good Way, will be in October. Orders will be promptly filled in the order that they are received. 75c. a hundred. Special notices for any locality inserted, without extra charge, when not less than 300 copies are taken.

Send a Stamp.

When you write a letter which requires an answer, make it an invariable rule to enclose a stamp, to pay the postage on the reply. Editors—and ministers, too—find their postage bills a heavy tax on their pockets.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

Advertise "The Times"

We furnish envelopes and paper bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, at the following prices:

Twenty-five (25) envelopes, post-paid, 10c.—25 sheets flat note (2 pages) 15c.—25 sheets flat letter, 20c.—40 sheets of flat note and 25 envelopes, 25c.—40 sheets flat letter and 25 envelopes, 35c.—100 sheets of flat letter, 75c.—100 sheets flat note, 50c.

Rich Man and Lazarus.

We confess our surprise at the growing popularity of this new exposition of the parable of Dives and the beggar. By L. C. Collins, author of "An Address to the M. E. Conference of Minnesota." The first edition was exhausted ere we were aware. A new edition is now ready. 40 pp. 14c. by mail, pre-paid. By the quantity, a discount of 25 per cent. will be allowed. To those who wish a large number, strictly for distribution, we will make very liberal terms.

New Music,

A sheet with seven pieces, "I love to tell the story," etc. Price 30c.

"Jerusalem Forever Bright," by Amanda Bailey. Price 5c.

"Rest Over There," by Geo. H. Lee. 5c.

Praise Songs, 32 pp. of choice tunes. 15c.

Camp-Meeting Music, 16 large pages. 10c.

The four last named, to one address, 30c. For sale at this office.

Whitmore—Cheap Edition.

We are pushing this along as fast as possible. It will be better printed than the last, for our new press is doing good work. We are anticipating fresh and liberal orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies, by express, $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We once heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." We think this is cheap enough. Every one can afford to have Whitmore, and Collins, and Sheldon preaching, and that, too, in places the authors themselves cannot possibly visit. Buy and distribute, or lend their works.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained; with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists; and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

An Efficient Fire Department.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 11, 1871.

To N. J. Reed, General Agent Babcock Fire-Extinguisher, 26 West Fourth St.:

After a careful observation of the practical workings of the Babcock Fire-Extinguisher for several years past, I am fully convinced that their general adoption in manufactories, public buildings, hotels, residences, &c., would result in saving to our community annually large pecuniary losses, and also afford us far greater security from fire than we now enjoy.

They have already rendered valuable services in connection with our Fire Department in many instances, especially at the fire in the block of buildings on the corner of Vine and Fifth Streets, where, by their use, a heavy stock of clothing, hats, &c., was saved from damage by water.

A sufficient number of extinguishers, with a proper organization, would make an efficient fire department for towns and villages. I heartily recommend their general use as a protection against loss by fire and water. Very truly, R. G. MUNSON,

Chief Engineer Cincinnati Fire Dep't.

To Correspondents.

W. R. SMART. We have referred your request to the officers of the Eastern district. ...O. R. FASSETT. Wrote you at Portland, Me. ...G. GOUGH. The nearest church to you is Burlington, Iowa. You can write to Eld. G. W. Hurd, Hopper's Mills, Ill. ...E. T. HIMES. The Bible, post-paid, will be $4. ...P. MITSON. The spinning wheels are sold at $2.50 each; we have three left. ...W. F. FAHNESTOCK. Thank you. We may use some time. ...L. Z. LOTSPEICH. We think the text you quote answers your question perfectly. You will find an interesting article on the subject in the Advent Quarterly for April, 1871. ...E. A. MARSH. If you will take pains to read Dan. 7:1, your difficulty will vanish. The Book of Daniel is not written in chronological order. The original word for Satan means "adversary." It implies personality just as much as any other name does. Adam means red earth; but that does not prove that there was never any Adam but the red earth. ...C. E. DARROW. We did not refer to categorical questioning, as to what do or do not believe, but to questions calling out the reasons for our faith on given points. However, we will answer your queries presently.

Book Notices, Etc.

Littell's Living Age holds its place with vigor—and its place is the front of the selection. There is nothing else to compare with it in that line. The subscription price of this 64 page weekly magazine is $8 a year, or for $10 any one of the American $4 magazines is sent with the Living Age for a year. Littell & Gay, Boston, Publishers.

We only lately fell in with a copy of the Scottish-American Journal, but were immediately impressed with its merits as one of the ablest public journals of the day. The editorials are characterized by the native strong Scotch sense and clearness, and its digest of foreign news, especially Scotch, is incomparable. We copy on another page an article on the political condition of Europe, which will be perused with deep interest by all our readers.

The Scottish-American Journal is published by A. M. Stewart, 37 Park Row, New York city, at $3 a year, with the usual reduction for clubs.

The Guiding Hand; or authentic records of Providential Direction. pp. 360.

The Family Circle: Original and selected anecdotes. pp. 310.

These two volumes are composed mainly of the gems of articles published in the Christian, written, rewritten, or selected by H. L. Hastings. They are good reading, in some sort demanded at this time; and can hardly fail to do good wherever and whenever read. Price, $1.25 a volume. For sale by H. L. Hastings, 19 Lindall St., Boston, Mass., or at this office.

The Illustrated Christian Weekly. It was once supposed that the Harpers and Osgood & Co. would furnish the public with an illustrated journal which would be unobjectionable in morals, at least. But their issue of Charles Reade's late filthy novel has excited the loathing of all Christian people. We are glad in this juncture to call attention to the illustrated weekly published by the American Tract Society.

In the last issue the perils of a hunter's life in the Alps are graphically described and finely illustrated in the sketch entitled, "Between Life Death." "What the Yankees are doing in the East," tells us of the Robert College at Constantinople, founded by C. R. Robert, of New York, ten years ago. A charming illustrated poem, entitled "The Kitten's Sermon," will specially interest the children. Two fine engravings are given with the article on the "Temple at Jerusalem," showing the Temple restored and "Christ casting out the traders." The publishers desire agents, with whom they will make liberal arrangements. Address them at 150 Nassau St., New York.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 19, 1871.

Long Sermons.

Before I join in the present hue and cry against long sermons, I wish to know what we are to understand by the term. An arbitrary rule may be adopted, fixing the limits of a discourse as to the time to be occupied in its delivery. In this fast age the minimum would probably be ten minutes, and the maximum forty-five. Now I object to all arbitrary time measurements of sermons as being most absurd and unreasonable. Everything depends on the man, the subject, and the occasion.

Within a week, recently, I heard four sermons varying in length from one hour and ten minutes, to one hour and forty-five minutes each, and yet so earnest, energetic, and eloquent were the speakers, so interesting the subjects and the occasions, that I heard no one of the numerous auditors complain that any one of the sermons was too long.

On other occasions I have heard half-hour discourses condemned as too long. The preacher should observe the "eternal fitness of things." On some occasions long sermons, that is, sermons whose delivery occupies more than one hour each, may be most appropriate. On other occasions short ones are most proper. To solve the problem or to answer the question what constitutes too long a sermon? requires more factors than the one usually given—time. Tell me that the morning sermon occupied thirty minutes or ninety minutes in delivering, "only this and nothing more," and I can't tell you whether it was too long or too short. Time is but one of the necessary factors. I must know about the speaker, the subject, the occasion. Given the terms: (1) an interesting speaker; (2) an interesting subject, and (3) favorable circumstances, and the result will inevitably be an interested audience. On such occasions one never hears any grumbling about long sermons.

There are, here and there, instances no doubt where congregations are afflicted by tireless talkers in the pulpit. There are men who seem never to know when to stop talking. All hints are lost on them. Their audiences may gape, yawn, go to sleep or even go out, it is all the same to them. Their sermons resemble mathematical lines—they have length without breadth or thickness. They do not feed the people, and it is no wonder that thirty minute's talk from such preachers is preferred to sixty minutes; or that the latter would be denounced as too long. A thoroughly interested auditor never complains that the sermon is too long.

For my part I have no sympathy and but little patience with the feeling which in this fast age would confine the delivery of a sermon to fifteen or twenty minutes. A London minister it is said has become very popular by preaching ten minute sermons. If this be true, may not some rival for popular applause eclipse him by preaching five minute sermons? But who does not see that nothing could be more stupid than to measure the excellency of a sermon by the time occupied in its delivery?

The remedy for long and senseless harangues in the pulpit will never be found in sweeping protests against long sermons.

The reform needed is BETTER sermons not SHORTER ones! Let the subject chosen be an appropriate one for the occasion. Then let the preacher study it with great care, and arrange it in such a manner, that, with an earnest and impassioned delivery it will have its due effect upon the audience. Let this be done and there will be few complaints about the sermon being too long.

After all that may be said on the subject, the preacher himself, and he alone, must decide the length of the sermon. If he be a man of good sense, and fair capacity, he will not be apt to show off his "gift of continuance" to the disgust of all who hear him. Such a man will not, after driving a nail in a sure place and clinching it, hammer away till he breaks the head off or splits the board. As a general rule to which there can be few exceptions, a sermon that is continued beyond the point at which the interest of the people can be retained is by that much too long.

Whilst I admit, therefore, that many sermons are too long, I claim that the best remedy is not to be found in shortening the time of their delivery, but in improving the quality and manner of delivery. Let the preacher raise a high standard of personal excellence—both as a writer and as a speaker. Let him consult his watch less and his audience more. I never heard that Whitefield, or Summerfield, or Bascom of the last century, or Newman Hall, or Spurgeon, or Beecher, of the present, was ever censured for preaching too long sermons. I vote, therefore, not for shorter sermons, but for better ones.

Political Alliances in Europe—Foreshadowing of the Future.

For some weeks past it has been manifest that the hopes indulged so fondly by many, after the battle of Sedan and the subsequent fall of Paris, to the effect that the peace of Europe was, for another decade, at least, effectually secured, were in great danger of not being fully realized. Strange, and not unfrequently contradictory rumors have been in the air. Emperors with their Prime Ministers have been moving from place to place; great diplomatic meetings have been announced; and new and omnious alliances have been spoken of as more or less certain.

Suspense is at last relieved. We now know that something positive has been done. It is confidently stated that a thoroughly good understanding has been come to by the Imperial Government at Berlin. We are told that at Gastein a basis was agreed upon whereby Germany and Austria should assume a joint attitude; and it is reported on what seems good authority, that the Emperor William and the Emperor Francis Joseph will meet on an early day, either at Salzburg or Coblentz, to perfect and give Treaty shape to the arrangements. It is also stated with confidence that the policy agreed upon by the Goverment at Vienna and the Government at Berlin commands the confidence and support of the Government of Italy. A despatch to the London Telegraph puts the case more strongly by affirming that a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, has been concluded between Germany and Italy. On the other hand it is known that there has been considerable coquetting going on for some time past between M. Thiers, the chief of the French Executive, and the Russian Government. There are some who are not unwilling to believe that France and Russia have agreed to act in conconcert in the event of a sudden outbreak of hostilities.

The European situation is thus full of interest. Three of the greatest powers are allied and evidently intend to stand or fall by each other. It is difficult to see how any combination can be made strong enough to resist Germany, Austria and Italy. It is not our opinion that there is any reason to doubt that such an understanding as that we have stated has been come to by the three powers just mentioned. The attitude assumed by France on one hand and by Russia on the other has made such an alliance at once necessary and possible. It was impossible for the Italian Government not to feel during the recent discussions in the Assembly regarding the position of the Holy Father, that, if France had been to Italy a most useful ally, France might be to her a most dangerous foe. If France had had the power, she most certainly had the will, to stand by Holy Father against all the interests of the Italian Government and people. The language employed by many of the members of the majority in the Assembly was menacing in the extreme, and was capable of wounding the feelings of every Italian patriot. France might grow strong again and do now what she would do if she had the power. Even M. Thiers in his famous speech which removed the question of the Assembly, went no further than to say that to intervene in favor of the temporalities of the Pope meant to go to war with Italy, would in present circumstances be impolitic and unwise. He did not say that it would be wrong or that in other circumstaces it would be undesirable. It was time for Italy to look out for friends, and by every means at command to strengthen her position. The prevailing tone of the Assembly was scarcely less offensive to the German people. France must arouse herself, sharpen her sword and gird her armor round her, so as to be ready for her coming opportunity. The determination of the Assembly to maintain a large army was convincing proof to Bismark that the French Government and people accepted the situation only because they could not help it, and that nothing but a favorable opportunity was wanting to induce France to renew the conflict. Italy and Prussia had been useful allies before. Why not again? The alliance is mutually convenient.

Russia there is reason to believe, is not satisfied with the results of the late war. The whole truth is not yet known. It has more than once been stated, and on apparently the best authority, that Bismark made promises to Russia before the war, which, after the war, he did not find it convenient to fulfil. However this may be, it is evident that all is not quite as it should be with the two great Northern Powers. It is well known that Berlin takes a lively interest in the affairs of the Principalities, much more than Russia is pleased to know. The Prince Charles is a member of the great house of Hohenzollern; and the house of Hohenzollern is strong enough and plucky enough to stand by its friends. Austria knows and admits the state of feeling which prevails in Russia with regard to the whole territory of the lower Danube. Austria in fact knows that she stands between two great giants, both of whom would benefit by her destruction. Her interests are identified with neither. But all things considered, it is more natural for her to seek the friendship of the new German Empire than to lean upon Russia. Germany, and Austria, and Italy united, France must keep the peace, and Russia must abandon all ideas of acquiring territory in the South of Europe.

It is not impossible that Russia in the heat of her indignation may let slip the dogs of war, and that France yielding to her natural impetuosity may act as if she had found her coveted opportunity. It is not to be imagined, however, that separately or in combination they can make any headway against their powerful adversaries. It will be better if they keep the peace. If they do not keep the peace, the presumption is that the cause of order will be a gainer by the results. It is gratifying to know that Great Britain is little likely to be involved in any of these possible complications. It will only be in the event of Egypt being threatened that she will draw the sword. Let us hope that peace will be preserved. Let us hope that if war should break out, humanity and civilization will gain.—Scotish-American Journal.

The Great Tribulation.

Sir—In the following remarks on the subject of "The Great Tribulation," I do not wish to be understood as at all dogmatizing, but rather, that the subject may be more fully investigated and looked at from every point of view, I state what appear to me to be difficulties in the ordinary interpretation of the question.

It seems to me, then, a doubtful point whether the days immediately preceeding our Lord's coming will be days of tribulation and suffering, and I will briefly state my reasons for thinking so:—

1. In the parable of the laborers in the vineyard the first comers complain that the last had been made equal to them who had borne the burden and heat of the day. I conclude from this that, towards the evening of the world, the labors of the saints are not accompanied with so great suffering as at first.

2. In the overflow of Pharaoh's host, just before the morning dawns, God takes off the chariot wheels of the enemies of his people, so that they drive them heavily. Surely this is an exact representation of the state of things at present: persecutors cannot now press hard upon God's people; they drive their chariots with difficulty: and if the overthrow of Pharaoh's host be at all a type of the overthrow of the evil one and his hosts, we may conclude that the people of God will be less and less interfered with as the dawn of the day of God approaches; and that, like the Egyptians, the men of the world will say, "Let us flee from the face of Israel, for the Lord fighteth for them."

3. In our Lord's predictions concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, he says: "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." And that this refers to the literal Jerusalem is confirmed by the prophecy in Ezekiel 5: 9. "I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like." I conclude therefore, that there will not be before the end of this age any sufferings so great as befell Jerusalem.

4 (and perhaps chiefly). Our Lord compares the time of his coming to the state of the world in the days before the flood, and also to the state of Sodom in the days of Lot.

Now, we are told (Ezk. 16: 49) that the sin of Sodom was "pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness," and we certainly do not gather from the account in Genesis that Sodom was in a suffering state, but quite the contrary. With respect to the world at the time preceding the flood, our Lord states that they were "eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage," all which implies great outward prosperity. St. Paul also tells us that, when the world shall be saying, "Peace and safety, then sudden destruction shall fall upon them, and they shall not escape."

The conclusion that I draw then from all these passages is that, when our Lord comes, the world will be in a state of great outward prosperity: buying and selling and living in wealth and luxury. There are, no doubt, other passages in the gospels that lead us to infer that, at that time, men's hearts will be failing them for fear of those things that are coming on the earth; but this is because all outward reverence for authority will be almost gone, so that beneath that external appearance of prosperity there will be in the minds of all thinking men "distress, with perplexity and dread;" but this is perfectly compatible with great external prosperity.

Nor is there, I think, reason to suppose that the saints will then be in a state of greater suffering than at any other time. In the days of Noah he was permitted quietly and peaceably to complete the ark, and to enter into it seven days before the flood came; and Lot was protected by God from the men who wished to do violence to him.

The "great tribulation" of Revelation I take to be the persecutions under the reign of the woman who sat on the scarlet-colored beast, which reign is now apparently all but over.

In conclusion I think we shall be all agreed that that glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus cannot now be very distant. The sea and the waves are roaring; the people are everywhere throwing off their former rulers, and in the body-politic the outward respect for authority is shaken. What manner "of persons therefore ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness?"—T. W. in Rainbow.

"An occasional absence from church or the prayer-meeting, a little shortening of private devotions, a trifle more time for social and a trifle less for religious duties, will do me no harm," reflected a youthful Christian. But in a few months she mourned.

"Where is the blessedness I knew?"

Through the little pores the vitality of her piety had oozed away.—

A man of property, who had just lost ten thousand dollars by fire and flood, remarked recently:

If I had been urged to give ten thousand dollars for the Lord's cause, I would have thought it utterly impossible, that it would quite ruin me; but the Lord has taken it away, and I am able to live still.

Why will not those to whom God has committed property learn their responsibility to the mission work without severe lessons?

We believe in the doctrine of sanctification as taught in the Bible; it is not so much a mere second conversion, as it is a ceaseless series of conversions. The child of God, justified by faith, comes more and more into the Savior's image every day he lives. The divine life reaches him and fills him completely as his capacities enlarge. Christ is his complete Savior from sin in the hour of his conversion. He then has peace and joy in believing. And as the time passes, the believer lives the life of God, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.—Alex. Clark.

Never Grow Weary.

Never grow weary! the clouds are now clearing;
Never grow weary! the prospect is cheering;
Oh! hasten quickly! repeat the glad story,
Our Leader is coming from heaven with glory.

Never grow weary! O Christian be careful;
Be patient, be cheerful, and ever be prayerful:
The time is not long, and many are sinning;
The broad road to ruin was never so winning.

Never grow weary in trying to teach them
To come to the Savior, O Christian beseech them!
Never grow weary; ne'er cease to give warning,
Heeding not those who are given to scorning.

Never grow weary, there are brows that are aching;
Never grow weary, there are hearts that are breaking;
There is sorrow, and sadness, oh! so much to do—
Never cease working with sorrow in view.

Never grow weary! The Master will bless you!
With this cheering thought, what can distress you?
Though the wicked may scorn you, and sinners may laugh,
Your Savior will come, to destroy them as chaff.

Never grow weary! endure to the end.
A merciful God your Redeemer will send.
And then never weary, in ages to come,
We will praise him, and bless him, in our sanctified home.

Can we be Saved From Sin?

Sin is always an injury. It is defiling in its nature, and killing in its effects. "When it is finished it bringeth forth death." Does the Bible teach us the possibility of having every wrong propensity of the heart destroyed. I am aware that some passages look at first view as though the continuance of sin in the heart was unavoidable. Let us give the more prominent of these a careful and candid examination. The first to which we call attention is found in Is. 6: 5. "Wo is me for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips." This is true of all, while in their natural unsaved condition; yet let us read on and we shall see that the Spirit of God, represented by a live coal from off the altar, touched his lips, so that his iniquity was taken away, and his sin was purged.

"All our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." (Is. 64: 6.) The Jews were to a great degree corrupted in the days of Isaiah. The prophet being alarmed at the wickedness of his people, confesses it in the first person, as preachers generally do on such occasions. It is the hypocritical righteousness, of the ungodly—a strict observance of the forms and liturgy of religion, while living in sin—that the prophet compares to filthy rags.

Job 9: 20: "If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me. If I say I am perfect, it shall also prove perverse." In this chapter Job treats of the majesty and holiness of God. In v. 15 he says—"Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my Judge." Before the purity of God he counted his righteousness as nothing, however he might lift up his head in the presence of his fellow man. Thus in the verse above, I understand Job to say—If I justify myself before God, mine own mouth in the prayers that I make for the mercy of the Lord, shall condemn me. He did justify himself most triumphantly before man, and repelled the accusations, which his friends, unable to reconcile his afflictions with the supposition of his innocence, had brought against him. "If I say I am perfect, prove me perverse." His perfect humility here manifested, justifies the testimony that the Lord, who cannot be deceived, gives in his favor: "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth; a perfect and an upright man—one that feareth God and escheweth evil?"

Rom. 7: 14, "I am carnal, sold under sin." In this connection the apostle speaks of himself in different stages of inward experience. (1) As an unawakened Jew I was alive without the law once. (2) As a convicted sinner; but when the commandment came to my comprehension, "sin revived and I died." My hopes perished. (3) As a believer in Christ. "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Now being made free from sin, and become truly the servant of God, he had his fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. That the apostle in the above passage refers to himself prior to his conversion, is in my opinion, the correct interpretation. Paul speaking of what he was naturally, says, "I am carnal, sold under sin." But did Paul stop there? By no means. He asks, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The reply is, "I thank God," or, "I am thankful, God shall deliver me through Jesus Christ our Lord." He then adds, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." But there would be condemnation if he was sold under sin.

1 John 1: 8: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." It is evident that this refers to man in his natural condition. The apostle is speaking about the power of faith in Jesus and his atonement to cleanse us from all sin. It is those who falsely and dangerously trust to their own morality and their naturally amiable dispositions, saying that they do not need to be cleansed from sin, to whom the apostle applies the above verse. But being convinced that we are sinners, both by nature and by practice, he assures us that "if we confess our sin, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." These are the strongest passages that are brought to prove the necessary continuance of sin. Look at them fairly and candidly, and you will be satisfied that we have given them their true meaning. But some may ask, "Must I be saved from all sin?" I answer, yes: not only from willful sin, but from the tendencies of the heart, that lead us to commit sin. If the fountain is not pure, how can the stream that flows from it be pure? Christ says: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Do we grow into this blessing, or do we obtain it by faith? Hear Paul's commission to the Gentiles (Acts 26: 18): "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith, that is in me." The possibility of attaining this blessing is argued from various considerations, a few of which only will be noticed.

1. It is the will of God that we should be holy. God cannot look with pleasure upon sin in any degree or in any place.

2. He has therefore enjoined holiness upon his creatures. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

3. He has provided for this in the atonement. "For what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." The object of Christ's mission, in part, was to cleanse his people from their sins, to destroy the works of the devil, and that part of his work that is secreted in our hearts or natures, too, "that we being dead to sin might live unto righteousness." "There are, therefore, given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world, through lust." (To be continued.) THOS. G. BAXTER.

WHEN a man has no design but to speak plain truth, he may say a great deal in a very narrow compass.

Jesus is Coming.—No. 2.

Yes! that's the theme. And are you still rejoicing in view of it?

Oh yes! and why should I not, since then I shall have the unspeakable pleasure of "seeing him and being made like him?"

That sounds like something I've read in the Bible—'made like him!'—Yes, I remember now. John says, "when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

You are right, and in addition let me remind you of what Paul says: "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned [made] like unto his glorious body."

Well, I must confess that you Adventists are a very fortunate class of people, in that you find so many plain Bible statements to sustain your doctrine. But since our previous conversation I've been looking into this matter of Jesus' coming; and you will remember that you quoted some very plain—at least they appear so now—texts, that clearly set forth the object of his coming. Since then I have found quite a number bearing upon the same point, one of which I will now mention. But as I may not be able to repeat the whole of the passage, I will tell you where it is—in Mat. 25: 31–46. Now almost "everybody" is ready to admit that in this chapter is a description of the last "judgment day." V. 31 plainly and positively affirms that the solemn scenes of that day will be introduced "when the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him." Now, while I was reading that chapter I got to thinking something like this—Here certainly is a description of the 'judgment;' everybody will admit that here, at the 'judgment, is a vast assemblage. "All nations shall be gathered before him." Surely this can't refer to man's dying and going immediately to stand before the bar of God as most everybody affirms—as that involves the idea of a continuous gathering of bad people, as well as good, up into heaven to stand before God, until it can be true 'All nations shall be gathered before him;' for certain it is, that gathered is one thing and gathering is another.

Then, again, here is the final separation. And if it is true, as I have been taught to believe in common with almost every body, that the good man when he dies is immediately and forever separated from not only sin, but sinners, because he has gone to that blessed world concerning which it is said that none can enter therein "whose names are not found written in the Lamb's Book of Life," how can it be true likewise, that all men, without regard to character, when they die, immediately go to stand in the presence of God that they may receive their just deserts. According to the description given in this chapter they will have to continue to wait until "all nations shall be gathered before him:" and can it be that all who have ever lived and died from Adam's day until the present, are up in heaven—their numbers continually increasing, by hundreds and thousands every day? What then becomes of the idea of an eternal separation at death. Surely they cannot be separated if they are all in heaven, standing and waiting in the presence of him who is to judge them.

But the last verse of this chapter is descriptive of the final separation "And these [on the left hand] shall go away into everlasting punishment. But the righteous into life eternal." Therefore from this language I must conclude that previous to this decision of the Judge the wicked are not punished nor the righteous rewarded, and of course could not have been eternally separated—pardon me, I am monopolizing this conversation.

Go on, I am right glad to hear you.

Well, with your permission I will only mention one more consideration, and that is this. Now thought I, this is plain so far. The righteous and the wicked are rewarded or punished and forever separated, when the Judge renders his decision. Now, is the point of time when the Judge is to give his decision as clearly given? and so my eye fell upon v. 31. I read—"when the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then" shall follow the solemn scene of the judgment. That little word when attracted my mind. When! Why here is a point of time which is to form an epoch for the commencement of that which he is about to describe Well when, what? What is the epoch that shall mark the point of time? "The Son of man shall come in his glory." What then is to occur? "Then" that which is described in the following verse, takes place. Now I must confess that to my mind that whole description hangs upon those two little words, when and then. Do not you think so?

Well, indeed I am glad to hear you express yourself so freely and candidly. Certainly we must admit that the coming of God's Son in his glory, attended with all his "holy angels," is an occasion of sufficient magnitude to form a date for great and important events, even such as are described in this chapter. And I will now express to you as my opinion, that a large proportion of those to whom you have frequently referred as 'everbody' never attach any special meaning to those two little words. I often think when reading the sacred word that a large amount of light is often embodied in little words, which, indeed, seems to have been your experience, and has led you to see somewhat differently from what you once did. But we shall be obliged, as on a former occasion to cut short our conversation; yet I hope, through the kindness of of our Editor, we shall meet again soon. D. O. HINK.

Hell and Hell-fire.

"And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

In order then to bring the subject at once before the reader's mind, we unhesitatingly declare that the text quoted does not prove eternal suffering, and that there is not a single passage in the whole Bible, which, when fairly construed, can be made to do so.

The candid reader will admit at once that the scriptures must agree with themselves, and that one part must not contradict another. And yet if the doctrine of endless misery is true, and is taught in the text above referred to, then many plain passages are made unintelligible and contradictory. For example, we might cite such passages as the following: "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be"—"the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away"—"the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." (Ps. 37: 10, 20, 38.) The ungodly are "like the chaff which the wind driveth away." (Ps. 1: 4.) "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." (Mat. 3: 12.) "Behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be as stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." (Mal. 1: 4.)

These texts, and many more that might be quoted of the same import, positively teach the utter and complete destruction of the wicked. There is not the slightest hint given in any one of them, nor can even an inference be drawn, that those who thus perish, consume, are destroyed, burnt up, &c., are to live forever in unutterable torment. These terms, made use of by the sacred writers, all express plainly an end of existence; and if we find anything in the scriptures which is not plainly and clearly expressed, which modern theology has pressed into its service in order to teach the horrid doctrine of an endless hell, we must bring such texts into the light of the plain and obvious ones, and then no difficulty will be experienced.

In Mark 9: 43, 44, quoted above, we do not find the doctrine of endless misery taught, but rather the reverse. The Savior was teaching his disciples that whatever peculiar or besetting sin it was which ensnared them, and was likely to work their ruin, it was to be cut off in order to save them. We frequently see this principle carried out in the practice of surgery. How often does it happen that individuals are deprived of some diseased member, in order to save the whole body. Perhaps mortification has set in, and the surgeon announces the fact that unless amputation is immediately performed, the person's life is in jeopardy.

The idea which runs through the whole passage is very plainly expressed in Mat. 5: 30: "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." The idea is that of perishing. It is better for one member of the body to perish, than for the whole body, as it inevitably must, if cast into hell.

The word rendered hell in the common version, is translated from Gehenna, the Grecian mode of spelling the Hebrew words which are translated "the valley of Hinnom." In this valley the children of Israel formerly sacrificed their children unto Moloch, and committed abominations in the sight of the Lord. King Josiah, however caused it to be polluted, by casting into it all kinds of filth, the carcasses of beasts, and the unburied bodies of executed criminals. Continual fires were kept in order to consume these, and what the fires did not destroy the worms fed upon. Hence the origin of the expression—"Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." It is probable that the Jews associated the idea of future punishment with this horrid place. That the reader may have a full view of what the Scriptures say about this valley, we copy the following arrangement of texts, from Bible vs. Tradition:

The locality of Gehenna is recorded in Josh. 15: 8: "And the border [of the lot of Judah] went up by the valley of the son of Hinnom unto the south side of the Jebusite; the same is Jerusalem; and the border went up to the top of the mountain that lieth before the valley of Hinnom westward, which is at the end of the valley of the giants northward."

Josh. 18: 16: The lot of Benjamin. "The border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the son of Hinnom to the site of Jebusi on the south, and descended to En-rogel." (Jer. 19: 2.)

Pollution of Gehenna. 1 Ki. 11: 7: "Then did Solomon build a high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem, and for Moloch, the abomination of the children of Ammon." 2 Chron. 28: 3: Ahaz "burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen whom the Lord had cast out before the children of Israel." 2 Chron. 33: 6: Manasseh "caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom; also he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger."

The destruction of Gehenna. 2 Ki. 23: 10: And Josiah "defiled Tophet, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Moloch." That Gehenna was afterwards made a receptacle for filth we gather from the Rabbins. We likewise read of the desecration of the brook of Kidron, that ran through the valley of Hinnom.

Gehenna was a place of punishment by burning. Lev. 20: 14: "If a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness; they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedness among you." In the 2d to the 6th verse, the people of the land were to destroy the worshippers of Moloch, which was probably done in Gehenna, where the image was placed. (Lev. 30: 9.) The daughter of any priest that profaned herself was to be burned with fire.

Jer. 7: 30-33: "The children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord.... They have built the high places of Tophet which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire.... Therefore, behold the days come saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the Son of Hinnom, but the valley of SLAUGHTER; for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place. And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away."

Let the reader here read, also, the following passages: Jer. 19: 1-13; 32: 35; 46: 8; Isa. 30: 30-33.

In Gehenna the army of Sennacherib was destroyed. (2 Kings 18: 35.)

Joel 3: 2: "I will also gather all nations and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land."

Eze. 38 and 39, and Rev. 17: 16, relate to destructions apparently to occur in other places.

From histories and prophecies we perceive that Gehenna has been, and is to be, a place of punishment; and as it has been, so it may be again, a place of punishment by fire; but it is not a place where the wicked are now being punished, nor will it ever be a place where the wicked shall be kept alive in perpetual torment. God surnamed the place The Valley of Slaughter. To affirm that the wicked are to be kept alive there forever, is to charge God with naming the place inappropriately!

In the New Testament the word Gehenna occurs twelve times. Eleven times it is found in the Gospels, and once in James 3: 6. In every place it was spoken to the Jews who understood its meaning. But in none of these passages will the reader find on examination any expression which indicates that the wicked will be kept alive in torments.

But some think they find this doctrine taught in the phrase, "The fire that never shall be quenched; where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched." But this is only a reference to the same thing that is expressed in the previous word—Gehenna. There continual fires were kept—fires not quenched, or extinguished. The prophet Isaiah asks: "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" Evidently no one without being devoured. As the fires of Gehenna consumed the bodies cast into them, so the "everlasting fire" and "the lake of fire," into which the wicked are to be cast, will consume or burn them up. The fire will be inextinguishable, or will not cease burning, till all the filth is consumed, and God's kingdom and earth is cleansed from the polluting touch of sin and sinners. But it is absurd to say, that, because the fire is said to be unquenchable, therefore that which is cast into it cannot be consumed or burnt up. And yet this is the argument of those who quote this passage to support their doctrine. In connection with this subject, we may quote the texts where it is claimed that hell-fire is clearly taught as the destiny of the wicked. This we shall not deny—only this, that the wicked will be capable of existing forever in that fire. Mat. 13: 49, 50: "So shall it be at the end of the world [age]; the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." This furnace of fire may be understood as the same as the gehenna of fire before mentioned. But we discover no allusion to unending life in this furnace. The "weeping and gnashing of teeth," is often referred to as proof of this; but it only shows this, that "the weeping and gnashing of teeth" will be prior to rather than after the execution of the sentence. Mat. 25: 41: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." It is the fire of the age—the punishment or condemnation of that age. This does not prove at all that those who are consigned to it will live in endless torment. Again in Rev. 19: 20; 20: 10, 15; 21: 8, we find a lake of fire mentioned, into which the beast and false prophet, the devil, death and hell (hades), and all wicked characters are finally cast. And though it is said of the devil that "he shall be tormented day and night until the ages of the ages," yet we know that it is positively revealed that even he shall be destroyed. (Heb. 2: 14.) And besides, this very lake of fire is called "THE SECOND DEATH." There is not one word about those parties doomed to this punishment living without any possibility of dying; but the very name which is given by the Holy Spirit to this lake of fire designates the office which it is to perform; viz.: to put an end to the lives of those who are consigned to it.

There is nothing more clearly stated in the Bible than that the wicked will be destroyed, come to an end, or cease to exist. The passages are too numerous to quote. There are more than two hundred plain declarations "that the wicked will be destroyed without remedy, body and soul, root and branch, all of them will become as nothing, they will have no existence." And whether this destruction is attributed to fire, or sword, or famine, or pestilence, it matters not. Any one of these agents can produce this result, if it be so ordered.

All the false reasoning and perversion of Scriptures by those who advocate eternal torment, arises from a belief in the immortality of the soul. This is the only foundation upon which is built the great temple of error. The soul being believed to be immortal, and of course capable of living after the death of the body, either in happiness or misery, it necessarily followed that new meanings had to be given to common words, in order to fit the doctrine. Hence, death in the Bible, when referring to the future state, means life; to perish or to be destroyed, means consciousness in misery; life means happiness, etc. So "the worm that dieth not," is the gnawings of a guilty conscience, which will torment those who are doomed to suffer the the pains of an endless fire, without the possibility of a release by death. But let a person accept the Bible doctrine of the mortality of man, his unconsciousness in death, and no future life for the dead, without a resurrection, and then no difficulty will be experienced with such texts as the one we have been considering. All will become plain, reasonable, and harmonious. Jehovah will then appear in his true character, as a being of love, mercy, and justice, and not as a monster, worse than Moloch, delighting in the eternal misery of the creatures he has made; and the Bible, the transcript of his mind, as revealed to man, will no longer appear contradictory, but become radiant with new beauties, heretofore obscured by the mists of error. —Sel.

Our Pulpit.

Follow After Charity.—1 Cor. 14: 1.

BY ELD. A. W. SIBLEY.

This injunction of the great apostle to the Gentiles, although uttered eighteen hundred years ago, yet stands out prominent, and is seen towering above many of the commands that are inculcated in the inspired Book of God; and it is one that we do well to consider. For the want of a practical adherence to this precept, many have lost that blessedness that they once enjoyed—the peace that once ruled their hearts, and caused them to soar above the things of time and sense; and also, that hope which was like an anchor, holding them amid the surges of life's rolling ocean, and that saved them from drifting down the rapids of the river of time, and being precipitated into the gulf of eternal perdition.

In a previous chapter the apostle has discoursed extensively upon this theme, setting forth its work negatively and affirmatively, or asserting what it does, and what it does not do.

The magnitude and importance of this subject may be seen when we consider the following points:

1. That charity is greater than faith or hope. (1 Cor. 13: 13.) 2. Since charity never fails: "Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." (1 Cor. 13: 8.) 3. Since it is the bond of perfectness. "And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." (Col. 3: 8.) 4. Since it covers a multitude of sins: "And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins." (1 Pet. 4: 8.) 5. Without it we are like sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." (1 Cor. 13: 1.) 6. Since it is most excellent in its workings: "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." (v. 4.)

In presenting some thoughts upon this subject your attention is invited to the following inquiries:

I. To whom, and when in the history of the Church is this text applicable?

II. What is charity?

III. The reasons why we should follow after charity.

I. To whom and when in the history of the Church is this text applicable?

This requirement when uttered by the apostle was especially adapted to the condition of the Corinthians as a church, as appears when we call to mind the picture drawn by the inspired writer, or the statement which he made concerning them when he said, they were "carnal and walked as men," and that there were divisions among them, so much so that some said they were of Paul, and others that they were of Apollos, etc., etc. There seemed to be a demand exhibited in their moral condition for this requirement to follow after charity.

The grand result of the observance of this divine precept would be the healing of the schisms, divesting them of their carnality, and constituting them the temple of God, so that they would "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of Christ." This more excellent way the Corinthians had not learned. They were babes in Christ, not having so matured as to be able to eat the strong meat of the gospel; a development which they must yet experience in order to constitute them men and women in Christ. It was very evident that this church was not possessed of the divine mind to the extent that God required, and that those moral excellencies which enter into the composition of the Christian character were not developed in them. Now if the condition of this church called out this inspired precept, may not the text apply to any and to all churches where the same elements exist that did among the Corinthians?

That this injunction in its application was not limited to the apostolic age, is evident when we consider the following propositions.

1. A precept embodied in a covenant continues valid and of authority until the abrogation of that covenant.

2. If Christians are required to develop the same moral excellencies in their character now as in the first century, then the same means must be employed now as then; for a like effect can only be produced by a like cause or by the same agents

3. If charity is the most excellent of all graces, can the church be presented to God without spot, wrinkle or any such thing while lacking this grace?

4. Since charity "never fails" but ever "abides," is it not evident that Christians can and must possess it now?

II. What is charity?

Many definitions have been given of charity, yet the facts as to what it is are clearly set forth. Viewing the question from a negative standpoint we say: (1) It is not benevolence, in the common acceptation of the term. That a person will be benevolent who enjoys that divine grace in his heart is true; for the most penurious have large hearts when pure and undefiled religion influences them: but it does not follow as a logical sequence that all persons who are benevolent have this heavenly treasure abiding in them; for great sacrifices of property and life are often made by persons for causes that could not be deemed good, who do not give any evidence that they have passed from death unto life; and who are consequently devoid of this precious grace. Besides, the idea is explicitly stated by the apostle that a person might give away all his earthly possessions, and even then be destitute of true charity. "And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." (1 Cor. 13: 3.)

2. This charity is not the offspring of the human heart. Some may ask if charity is not love; and does not love emanate from the human heart? To this we would reply that there are many kinds of love emanating from the heart; love of honor, of money, of praise, of the world; but the kind of love indicated in our text by the term charity, is of heavenly origin, and differs widely from any kind of love that springs from an earthly source. It emanates from Deity; consequently it is divine, and is graded in excellence as much higher than human love as heaven is higher than earth.

All kinds of love have laws by which they are governed and objects which they embrace. Human love embraces a class of objects that are earthly, and is graded in the scale of excellence in proportion to the objects embraced in it. Just as high as its objects are, morally, just so high is the character of the love.

In view of the affirmative of this proposition, namely, to show what charity is, we would call attention to an extract from Mr. Wesley's sermon on the subject. He says: "That St. Paul's word is agape, exactly answering to the plain English word love. And, accordingly, it is so rendered in all the old translations of the Bible. So it stood in William Tyndale's Bible, which I suppose was the first English translation of the whole Bible. So it was also in the Bible published by the authority of Henry VIII. So it was likewise with all the editions of the Bible that were successively published in England, until King James I. The first Bibles I have seen wherein the word was changed were those printed by Roger Daniel and John Field, printers to the parliament in the year 1649. Hence it seems probable that the alteration was made during the sitting of the Long Parliament: probably it was then that the Latin word charity was put in the place of the English word love."

The following translations of this passage read as follows: Wakefield—Follow after this love. Emphatic Diaglott—Ardently pursue love. Murdock—Follow after love. Whiting—Earnestly follow love. Macknight—Pursue love. American Bible Union—Follow after love. Wesley's Notes—Follow after love.

It seems from the different translations by the eminent linguists which I have given, that something more is implied in the Greek word, agape, than is expressed in the term charity. Divine love like the being from whom it proceeds is immutable—immutable in its nature, operations, and in the results of its workings. It is the same to day as it was six thousand years ago. It is the same as it was when it moved the Father to say in Eden, the seed of the woman should bruise Satan's head.

Charity, then, is a holy element or principle, coming from God, and, according to the inspired account, is an attribute of God. This precious grace underlies all the actions of the dear Redeemer in his mission on earth. Christ, from every possible standpoint in which he could be viewed was lovely—morally, intellectually and physically. He was lovely in person, in doctrine, in his promises; in precept and example; in patience, in meekness, in spirit. Indeed, he was "altogether lovely, and the chiefest among ten thousand." And if his professed followers would practice this heavenly grace to a greater extent than they now do, surely a different state of things would appear from what actually exists. Sectarian walls would no longer endure; Christian character, alone, would be the test of Christian fellowship, the Bible the only creed, and Christ—the Alpha and Omega—the only foundation.

III. Why should we follow after charity? Because the church can more effectually accomplish her mission.

The church of Christ sustains the same relations to the moral world the sun does to the physical. This fact is obvious when we consider the import of the Savior's declaration to his disciples—"Ye are the light of the world?" And since the church sustains this relation to the world, and since the world is morally dark, the more of this blessed grace she enjoys, the more light she reflects. Another item of the mission of the church is to seek the salvation of the lost. The divine grace brought to view in our text was the principle that moved the Father to send his Son into the world, to die on the Roman cross for the sins of Adam's posterity. The bosom of Christ was moved with pity towards the rebellious sons of this planet, and love for them caused him to "endure the cross and despise the shame," and led him on to triumph over his foes and achieve a glorious victory for humanity. Not that man merited this gracious favor, for he had no claims whereby God was obligated to confer such a gift as was manifested in the person of Jesus. But it was love for the world that caused Christ for our sakes to become poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. And in order for the church to effectually accomplish her mission, the mission that God has assigned her, she must have the same divine love for humanity dwelling richly within her bosom.

When Christians have their hearts fully imbued with divine love, they will be willing t suffer privations and hardships, especially when they come in consequence of disseminating truth and seeking the salvation of the lost. Many missionaries of the cross, in obedience to the great command—"Go ye into all the world," etc., have gone forth with the flame of divine love burning upon the altar of their hearts, penetrating every land, and proclaiming the good news to every people, from the wild Indian tribes of America, to the far off shores of China, and Japan, and from the lovely islands of the South Seas to the cold regions of Greenland and Labrador.

Doors have been and are open for the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom at hand, which have not been entered; and cries are coming up from every quarter for help. Very many places there are, even in our own land, where the gospel of the kingdom has never been preached. O Church of Christ, consider thy mission and bestir thyself! Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the fields are white and ready for harvest!

2. To have this grace is better than to have all the other gifts of the Spirit. "And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." (1 Cor. 13: 2)

The same apostle in another place speaks of the gifts of the Spirit, and places the gift of prophecy among the first. To prophesy primarily means to foretell future events, and in a secondary sense to teach in divine things. The apostle considered the nature of the prophetic gift, its importance to the church, and the extent to which it was exercised among primitive Christians, together with its relation and influence; yet he says, the person who had this gift and had not charity, was nothing. The apostle reviewed the subject of faith from every possible standpoint in which it could be considered; but concluded that though he might have it so as to remove mountains, if he had not charity, he would be nothing.

3. It is greater than faith or hope. "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." The importance of faith may be seen when we consider that by faith we are the children of God in Christ, that being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, that without it we cannot please God. Yet notwithstanding faith is one of the primary principles of the gospel and absolutely essential to salvation, when the apostle viewed it in all its relations, and contrasted it with charity, he pronounced charity first in importance.

Hope, made up as it is, of expectation and desire, and embracing the resurrection of the dead, immortality, eternal life, Eden restored, and an eternal redemption from all the moral, political and physical evils of our world; and distinguished from the hope entertained by persons who have their portion in this life,(1) by the excellency of the objects hoped for,(2) by the stability of the foundation on which it rests, and (3) by the influence it has over those who enjoy it, is nevertheless pronounced inferior to charity.

From these considerations, if there were no others that could be presented, we should seek with all our hearts to "follow after love."

Charity—never faileth: "But whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." (1 Cor. 13; 8.) But charity like its author, is incorruptible and eternal; and with the saints, in their incorruptible inheritance, it will abide forever.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 19, 1871.

The question whether there are 'D.D.'s' in heaven is up for discussion. A reference to John 3:18, or Acts 2:34 ought to settle the question. We daresay there will be 'D. D.'s' in the new earth, but their titles will have been left behind.

The New York Tribune remarks:

> A note from Joseph G. Tompkins of North Attleboro, Mass., expresses his annoyance at the inference, drawn from a recent statement concerning his religious belief, by many who write to him, calling him "atheist," "deist," "infidel," etc. His notion is that immortality is exclusively conferred on those who are saved in the orthodox way; the wicked have not any hereafter. Which is not so very bad after all —We think the world will by and by wake up to the truth that it is neither atheistic nor infidel to doubt the immortality of the soul. The fact is that more errors, infidelity and misbelief are founded upon that notion than upon any other. The immaterialists should remember the adage about residents in glass houses.

Many contributors to newspapers and magazines write 'we' for "I." And ministers sometimes indulge the same habit in the pulpit. This is an incorrect mode of expression, and in bad taste. It has become a universal custom for editors to use the pronoun 'we,' because, we presume, editorial articles are usually without signature, and the 'we' is more impersonal, and smacks less of the ego; and, besides, several persons are sometimes responsible for the sentiments uttered. But persons writing over their own signature should stick to the "I." It is in better taste.

The Scriptural Commentary on the Soul, commenced a few weeks since, will be resumed in these columns soon. We design giving our readers every passage in the Bible in which the original words translated soul are found. Such an exhibit is in itself an immense argument against the popular view. When men read of souls in whales, birds, fishes, beeves, asses, 'creeping things,' etc.; of sick souls, of slain souls, of dead souls; and never a word of immortal souls: they begin to think there is a mistake somewhere in the popular idea.

'Not much hope of the older ones, I fancy.' We could only sigh, that the sentiment was too true; for these were the words of a person who has taken great pains to circulate documents shedding light on the future destiny of man among the ministry. His experience is, that some fruit may be expected from seed sown amongst 'the younger members of the clergy; but not much hope of the older ones.' Ministers committed by long years of preaching to any dogma, are not apt to come out as Br. Phelps did, for example, and frankly say, 'I was wrong.' We wish it were otherwise; but so it is. All honor to those who do candidly investigate (that is all we ask) the theory opposed to all their past teaching. For what we complain of is not that ministers do not believe what we teach, but they do not consider this subject of such momentous interest.

That the Holy Spirit is 'an earnest' appears from Eph. 1:14. But of what? Ans. 'Of our inheritanc until the redemption of the purchased possession.' What is that? heaven? If so, when is it redeemed? Every time a saint dies? Absurd. But how consistent the language appears when we read it in connection with Rom. 8:11, and understand the possession to be the saint's inheritance—the new earth. We are sealed with the Spirit unto the redemption of the purchased possession. And 'if the spirit of him that raised Christ from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." And in vv. 19-23 we learn that this resurrection is the time when the whole creation will be delivered from the curse. The Bible theory of these things is plain enough. But the go-to-heaven-when-you-die theory is decidedly foggy.

In a private note, Mr. Ives, who has caused Mr. Constable's work to be re-published in this country, incidentally remarks that he has himself distributed nearly one thousand copies of the same. He further says:

> I consider our orthodox view of future punishment as the weakest—I might say the wickedest—point of our Christian doctrine. I regret to confess that as a layman I have done my best in time past to preach it. Now I am trying to make amends. Believing that the theology of the Bible is stronger, and will prevail, I remain, etc.

—We may add, that he is, indeed, doing noble service in the way of 'amends.' God bless him.

Mr. Chas. L. Ives, of Yale University, has conferred a favor on the people of this country, by republishing Prebendery Constable's pamphlet upon the nature and duration of future punishment. (See advertisement.) We once gave it in the Quarterly, and thought of republishing it in book form. But we are glad that Prof. Ives has taken hold of it; for being endorsed by himself, and issued by Chatfield of New Haven, it will find buyers and readers that it would not touch, coming from an Adventist. Let the truth be spread, by any proper means. We will rejoice in the success of all.

Someone, styling himself a 'Rev.' has applied to us to advertise that he will send FREE a prescription for a sovereign remedy for Consumption and a number of allied and other ailments. He discovered it in Brazil, while there as a missionary. Generous soul! To give it free, and pay for the advertising himself. He must have succeeded far better, financially, than most missionaries do. Did he get wealthy in Brazil, and conclude he could do more for suffering humanity at home by advertising 'recipes' free?

Will he allow us to suggest an improvement in his plan? That instead of advertising for people to send for his prescription, he just pay the papers for inserting the prescription itself. It would save a multitude of postage stamps, and many people from being humbugged.

It would seem as though this 'free recipe' advertising humbug was played out; but it seems people will still be gulled. Hence we again say to our readers—when you see an advertisement that proposes extravagant returns for a small investment, or to do you some favor free, set it down as either an open or a disguised swindle, and have nothing to do with it!

A WORD WITH WOMEN PREACHERS.

Not long since, at the close of a discourse by a woman who has achieved some success as a preacher, a brother who had been opposed to women's preaching remarked: "I like that. She makes no excuses about herself, for being a woman, but goes about her work." We commend this thought to the women who labor with us in the gospel. The opposition, not always fair, to preaching by women, has led many into the habit of prefacing every discourse by a kind of "apology and defence" for the position the speaker occupies. Now we would advise that women preachers rigidly make up their minds that they will not condescend to this any more.

A woman who is called a preacher, stands on precisely the same ground that a man with the same call occupies. And if any doubt her call, she should say—"Let my labors and their results bear testimony as to whether I have mistaken my calling." The best evidence of "a call" a man in the ministry can urge, is the fact that he can preach, and that he does fulfill the duties of a minister to the profit of the flock. And women preachers should make their hearers feel that they have no need to refer to Deborah and Huldah and Priscilla, or Philip's "four daughters;" but that their life and conversation, their preaching itself and the results attained, these are all the answer that is needed to opposers who would silence them because of their sex.

There are times, of course, when a defense of woman's occupancy of the ministry is necessary, and in place, but it should not be lugged in everywhere.

If you can preach, and God has called you to do so, go about your work, and make no apologies! Even when you feel the spirit of opposition in your audience—as is some times the case—hang like a heavy cloud upon your mind's sky, do not yield to it. Rise above its influence in the strength of your Master. Forget that you are a woman. Lose yourself in your subject. Determine that your audience shall see not man or woman, but the embassador of Christ! If you effect this result, you have accomplished that which every true minister seeks to do—have attained the highest pinnacle of success.

Wherever you go, act as if you took it for granted that every body was in favor of women preaching, and that you would be surprised if opposition were developed. Go right on with your work just as you would like to see any other minister do in the same position.

To speak plainly, much of the opposition to women's preaching arises from a feeling that in some cases the woman is put forward instead of the preacher. Exactly as some men seek the ministry, to air their learning, display their oratory, or bring themselves before the public. But men do not feel called upon to apologize every time they appear before a new audience because some other men have disgraced the calling. On the contrary, they purpose to show by witness that cannot be impeached, that they belong to another class of laborers. Let the women preachers do the same, and much irritation of feeling caused by continual "probing of the sore," will be allayed. And let us remember that in the work of Christ we all occupy common ground: fitness for the work, and not sex, is the required qualification for "preaching the word."

CALLED AWAY.

On the 17th I received a telegram from Br. P. Wexell to attend the funeral of his daughter, at Bishop Hill. I felt it my duty to comply with the mournful summons. But the needful preparation for absence from the office, has so occupied my time, that I cannot complete the narrative, commenced last week, of my visit East for this paper. But it will hardly be missed among the fascinating stories of travel and labor by Brn. Collins, Fassett, Whitmore, Reed, Howell, and others, which are presented, with other interesting matter, to the readers of The Times this week. The Times is much indebted to its contributors for its success; and we trust their favors, which are highly appreciated, will be continued.

A little more than a week ago I went to Bishop Hill to rejoice with the waiting ones in hope. Now I go again, to weep with those that weep, and comfort those who mourn. When will the temporal and ever changing things of time pass away and the eternal begin. God grant it may be soon. Pray for the afflicted family. W. L. H.

LETTER FROM PREBENDERY CONSTABLE.

To a brief note on business Mr. Constable adds the following remarks (he will pardon us for publishing, we are sure):

> I have now fully made up my mind upon the hades question. I have long been groping my way, and was for some time inclined to take up with the view of the soul's existence separate from the body, but in an unconscious sleep. I now see this to be utterly untenable, and have come to the view as held by yourself.
> "I have written a volume upon the subject, which I hope to publish before long. I think it is written so as to invite a great deal of attention. I have devoted a great deal of time to it, and have entered thoroughly into the review of our human nature, which really lies at the bottom of the whole question.
> "From my view of future punishment I have been forced back upon the question of hades. The easier and more proper way, I now think, would have been to commence with the latter, and go on to the former. But they are both inseparable parts of the one great question. An error on one part leads most strongly to error on the other.
> "You will see from the Rainbow, that we are much divided in opinion upon hades in England. The majority who agree with us on future punishment differ from us on hades. We must fight it out; but I have little doubt that truth will win the day.
> "We are decidedly advancing upon the question of future punishment, but have many enemies and strong prejudices to contend against.

—We wish some brother of means would enable us to publish this new work by Mr. Constable in this country. A part, and perhaps the whole of the investment could be repaid. Does no one feel moved to aid such a useful enterprise?

BR. FASSETT AND CALIFORNIA.

There is some misunderstanding relative to their California relations. They do not intend to "move" there, at least for the present. The climate may not agree with Br. Fassett's health, furthermore, they do not know what Providence may indicate. They will go, and remain as long, as duty may require. We have the pleasure of presenting to our readers the following private letter from Sr. Fassett, to her husband, in the East. She says;

> "Since the reception of the first letter from California (Vallejo), I have had but one mind relative to our duty. There are feelings clustering around home, and the resting place of our dear son that rise up in remonstrance of such a move on our part. But I feel the cause of Christ is dearer to me than our pleasant home; and if we are not willing when God calls to leave it, it would either be taken from us, or we perhaps have written against us "Ichabod." When I entered with you the missionary-field, I laid all on the altar, and with the same feelings in character, though not in degree that actuated Moses in his choice, having "respect unto the recompense of reward." And if now through love to earthly things, I lose my hold on Christ through whose merits alone I hope for "glory, honor, and immortality," I shall lose everything.
> I feel just as ready to-day to leave for California, as I did in the more early part of our pilgrimage to leave all for Christ; for everything connected with this move has had the indubitable evidence of our heavenly Father's will relative to it. I feel just like praising God for all his marked tokens of approval. Also, my eyes are improving, so that again on the Western and Pacific coast I may stand side by side with you, as I have in former years on the Atlantic side of the continent, proclaiming the glad news of the coming kingdom, and the reign of the Messiah. However unfaithful I may have been at any time in the past, I never felt a more earnest desire to be doing with all my might, what I can find to do in my Master's vineyard."

—With missionaries animated with such a spirit, who can doubt the results of their labors. They will go to our Pacific shore brethren in "the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ."

THE EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

The reports of this Society are very interesting. The receipts for the year were $21,950.33, of which $14,662.98 was for the Crisis. The whole number of subscribers is now 9,344—a gain of 570 during the year. The 'free list' contains 869 names. The total business in books and tracts, including those in hand, was about $10,000. The Young Pilgrim ran behind some the past year; but with its new dress and new management, must come up again and prosper. Tracts for free distribution have been sent out to the value of $864.55. A legacy worth some $1,000 has been received.

Among the items of 'expenses,' we find the following: Editor of Crisis $780. Corresponding Editor $210. Editor of Young Pilgrim $240. Treasurer and business Agent, $600. Clerk Hire $1,656. Type setting $2-510. Press-work and folding $1,698. Printing paper $6,253. Rent $550 Postage $352. To writers in the Crisis $104. For Books and Tracts, bought or made, $3,915.

The Society was never more prosperous, and never had wider doors open for doing good than now. We rejoice in its prosperity, and trust another report, should time last, will show more than ten thousand subscribers, including a vast reformation among the delinquents. The Crisis has gladdened many a home and fully deserves its success. No Advent paper has ever attained so large a subscription list, and its claim to be "the most widely known of all the journals devoted to the proclamation of the great truths of our time" is a just one.

Other extracts from the reports would be of interest, but we have not space for them this week.

READY—"IMMORTALITY."

The seventh thousand of Whitmore's Doctrine of Immortality will be ready for delivery in a few days. Those who pledged for the first cheap edition, and failed to redeem their pledges, will please do so now. And let all pledges be redeemed AT ONCE, that we may pay our bills for the books, and they be put in useful circulation.

Remember the terms: Four copies, post paid for $1. Five copies for $1, if sent by express. Thirty copies for $5. 100 copies for $16. Don't fail to send in orders soon.

PROPHETIC CHART.

The frequent calls for a map of the symbolic prophecies, for the use of lecturers, have led us to plan one more Prophetic Chart, which, if published, will be the finest thing of the kind ever offered to the church.

As a publication of this character involves a large outlay, and can, in any event, but little more than repay its cost, we propose to issue it upon the basis of a subscription, and shall not commence work upon it until a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to secure the Association from any loss.

All our experience in publishing charts, in the past, will be brought into play, to make this the perfect and complete chart. It will contain illustrations of Dan. ch. 2 (the image); 7 (the four beasts); 8 and 9 (the ram and he-goat and the 2300 days and prophetic weeks); Christ's great prophecy in Mat. 24; Rev. chs. 5-7 (the seals); chs. 8-11 (the trumpets, and two witnesses); ch. 12 (the woman, the child and dragon); ch. 13 (the leopard and two-horned beasts); ch. 16 (the vials); ch. 17 (the scarlet beast); etc., etc.

The prophetic periods will be illustrated, but not in a manner to confine them to any special dates. But they will be so arranged that any lecturer can adapt them to his own views of their rise and temination.

In short we purpose to make it invaluable to every preacher upon prophecy; a help to church and ministry that no Advent chapel can afford to do without; and that will be a preacher in every household where it is hung up.

We wish for one hundred subscribers, to ensure its financial success; but will commence work upon it as soon as FIFTY RESPONSIBLE NAMES are secured.

Terms.—$10 for a single chart; one half to be paid when work on the chart commences, and the remainder upon delivery.

We trust this liberal proposition will meet a prompt and equally liberal response. Let ministers bring the subject before the churches, and take collections, or pledges to secure its speedy issue. Let brethren who are able subscribe in behalf of preachers who are not able to buy one. Let us obey the prophetic injunction, to "write the vision, and make it plain upon tables," after a fashion that shall command the attention and respect of all to whom the chart may be displayed. Let us hear from all interested, at once.

Address, Advent Times, Buchanan, Mich. tf.

Tour East.

From Springfield camp ground I visited Worcester, Mass., and preached to the Advent society worshiping in that city, Sunday Aug. 27. Dr. H. W. Buxton kindly took me in his carriage to Br. Wetherbee's residence, (who has removed from Westboro), where I was kindly cared for. Br. W. is again unable to attend to business owing to ill health.

The church in Worcester is doing well. We had a good audience both morning and in the afternoon, considering the absence of many from the city at the camp meeting, and other places. Sabbath noon I dined with Br. Higgins, who conveyed me to his residence in his carriage. On our return to the chapel, however, as we descended at a rapid pace the hill to Main St., his horse stumbled, and fell, throwing him, with his wife, and myself from the carriage upon the horse, and ground. No harm was done to our persons, but the horse received a slight injury, and the carriage was somewhat damaged. I proceeded on foot to the chapel, reaching it in time to fill my appointment, thankful that the Lord had delivered us from harm and death. These are days of fearful calamities, and the disasters by travel greatly increase, making it hazardous for us to be on continual travel. Were it not that a kind superintending Providence was recognised by us, one would hardly dare to risk their lives in these days. But knowing this to be the case, and that I am prepared, as I hope, for my end in any way it may come by Divine appointment, I journey without solicitude and in quiet, feeling that living or dead I am the Lord's. Thanks be to his blessed name for this calm trust and sustaining daily grace while engaged in his work

PROVIDENCE R. I.

I put up here with my old friend A. W. Brown and his family. Our meeting was a pleasant one, after several year's separation. I had sent no appointment to preach in Providence, simply notifying the fact that I would be in Providence at a certain date. I had received no invitation from the friends there to preach for them, until I saw a few of them at Springfield. On my arrival, Br. Brown informed me, that notice had been given out for me to preach in the "Yahvah" church, Tuesday eve. This appointment I was glad to fill. And in the congregation were many Christian friends who in former years stood by me as I preached the gospel in this city. Some have fallen asleep.

Bristol R. I., is also an old field of labor; and one of the first fruits of my early toil was the gathering of a little company of believers there. I began in the chamber of a stable! and there was gathered one of the most devoted, pious, and intelligent churches in New England. It has undergone trial of every description conceivable, and death has made sad havoc with the little flock. But there is a remnant left. Eld. D. D. Reed, formerly of this town is now in California, preaching the gospel of the kingdom. The brothers Tilley have moved to Washington, D. C. However I was glad to see, unexpectedly, Br. Benj. Tilley, and a part of his family, here, who are spending the summer in town.

The rain of the evening thinned our congregation greatly; but our meeting was a pleasant one. Br. Gideon Gray, I was sorry to find under, I fear, a fatal disease. He is the main pillar of our cause here.

was next visited, with Wrentham, Mass. Went to see old friends, and call on some sick ones who are near death's door. Eld. Geo. H. Childs is pastor of an "Evangelical-Congregational" church here. He took me to see old friends, and visit his parish; and we had a profitable day talking and praying with the sick, and old friends who are still looking for the Lord. In the evening he urged me to preach to a congregation assembled for prayer and conference, which I did.

Westboro, Mass. was my next appointment, Sunday, Sept. 3. The church here needs a good pastor, and one of the right stamp would do good. It is a great pity that they are without such help; they having a fine chapel and all conveniences for permanent meetings. Moreover there are choice brethren and sisters in this beautiful village. The town is settling with new comers, who have no permanent meeting, and need to be looked after and gathered in. We had a good congregation during the day, and at the close of the afternoon service had communion—a blessed season, probably the last to be enjoyed together before we meet in the kingdom of God. Oh! [illegible] all be gathered there! I [illegible] Hastings and family. [illegible] em, and give them peace. [illegible] and family are in deep affliction, being bereaved of a dear daughter, suddenly snatched away by death from them, and from the embrace of a devoted husband after a married life of only five months. He too, is dangerously ill.

By request I visited

to attend a tentmeeting Tuesday Sept. 5. I found the meetings flagging in interest, from the absence of brethren who have preached the word and left to fill other engagements. Eld. Grant had been present, and had given five discourses on the subject of holiness, I understood, which were appreciated by many. Public notice being given I preached in the afternoon on the judgment, and in the evening on historic prophecy, hanging up the old chart to illustrate the subject. The large congregation listened with marked attention. At the close of the service tracts on our faith were demanded, and distributed freely to an interested crowd.

Eld. Boutell returned from an absence over the Sabbath, and was with us on Tuesday and Wednesday. The meetings closed on Wednesday eve. with an excellent sermon on the inheritance, by Br. Boutell, to an overflowing tent. It was a complete success, the citizens regretting the close of the meetings. Br. and Sr. Russell, formerly of Boston, kindly enterta[illegible] with others at their hospitab[illegible]

Though the Advent pre[illegible] in New England are more nume[illegible] han in any other part of the field, yet there is far greater demand than the supply. And I feel as I see this destitution, I wish I could supply all these multitudinous calls. What can be done? I see no other way than that the brethren and churches "pray the Lord of the harvest" to raise up and send "laborers into his harvest." I have tried to secure some one to fill my place, when I shall leave for California; but so far none are able to leave, nor feel it a duty to make the sacrifice such a call would demand. They cling to New England, and the more liberal churches in the East, forgetting that "the field is the world," and that their solemn message is world wide. (Mat. 14: 14; Rev. 14: 6, 7.)

Oh! that the Lord would make us all realize, both ministers and churches, the solemn demands of the hour upon our intellectual talents and material means, that we and ours may be all on the altar of consecration, and that with true holiness and zeal we may give the world the last solemn judgment message. Alas! the world sleeps amid the thousand voices of startling providences to alarm and arouse them to prepare to meet their God! And so they will sleep. "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

O. R. FASSETT.

From California.

The more I read THE TIMES the better I like it. You come out so plain and clear on the great advent truth, and are not afraid to own the name, but stand out, like a Paul, declaring all the council of God. There is danger in these last days of our getting a kind of one-eyed or squint-eyed religion, so that we can see only out of one eye. If ever there was a time when the church needed both eyes and ears open, it is now. The devil is wide awake and so must the Christian be.

I had the pleasure of attending the Methodist Tabernacle meeting this summer on this coast. Br. Inskip is a powerful man. The Lord is with him. He told the people they did not come to this coast to labor for the conversion of sinners; but to wake up the church to holiness. They see the backslidden state of the churches, and their great labor was entire sanctification and holiness of heart. I went in with them for this with all my heart. But did not stop here as they did; for they preach up a world's conversion. And their labor was, to first get the church sanctified, and then send them out as torches to convert the world. I think by the time they get the churches all sanctified, the world will all be converted. They were so zealous for entire sanctification, they would not have a word said about Christ's second coming in their meetings. When inviting those forward to the altar, who were seeking the blessing of entire sanctification, they told them distinctly, before they came forward to throw away their Swedenborgianism, Spiritualism and Adventism—thus classing these all together.

I thought it was a kind of one-eyed sanctification. Not Peter's kind, who says—"Seeing we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness." When they classed the blessed advent truth and coming of our Lord in with the corrupt system of Spiritualism and the mysticism of Swedenborgianism, I turned away with pity in my heart, and prayed the Lord to open their eyes.

As regards our labors in this country we can say we believe the Lord sent us here, and some fruit will be found in every place where we have labored. We have a blessed church in Vallejo. They are on the up-hill grade, sound in the faith and not one jarring string among them. The prospect is good for a large church. They have united with the church at San Francisco, and and raised money to bring Br. and Sr. Fassett to this coast to labor with them. The Lord's name be praised I feel to thank God from my heart that he is coming. We have labored together in years past, and the blessing of God has been with us, and I expect to see it again; to see the power of God displayed among the people once more. His coming will be like the "coming of Titus," to me.

Myself and wife have been laboring alone for nearly two years on this coast. Oh! how blessed it will be to meet those tried soldiers once more on the battle-field, and unite heart and hand in the great work of preaching the truth and saving souls. My heart leaps for joy at the glorious thought. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Last week I spent in San Fransisco, with the church there, and made the acquaintance of Br. Howell, whom I esteem very highly in the Lord, for his work's sake. He has stood manfully for the truth, and by the little band through the dark and stormy night which they have just passed. When Br. Grant left he wanted them all to join the Southern Methodist church, Br. Bailey, pastor. But there were some who did not see their way clear to do this, and they formed a church and chose Br. Howell as their pastor, and were getting along well, till the Saturday-keepers came with their tent and commenced meeting. Many of the converts thought it was the true advent church, until they commenced to put the Saturday yoke upon their necks, and stamp the mark of the beast upon them, when most of them got their eyes open to the error of the thing and went back to the Hall, where Br. Howell and a few had been holding on, glad to be freed from the yoke of bodadge.

The Advent church here is now prospering and doing well. I spoke to them last Lord's day and had a good time. In the evening eleven presented themselves, received the hand of fellowship and united with the church, after which we came around the table and partook of the Lord's supper, some fifty or more. It was a precious season and long to be remembered. Many more stand ready to join soon, and we expect to see a great work here.

Br. Bailey has left the Southern Methodist and joined the Northern Methodist Conference. If he could not stay there, how could the Advent truth stay there and live? There are some here that have not defiled their garments. Br. Howell has stood like a faithful man of God by the ship. The blessing of God be upon them.

Brethren pray for us that the word of God may run mightily and prevail on this coast.

Yours on the field of action.

D. D. and M. S. REED.

The Present Crisis.

In a recent sermon at Preston, the Rev. Dr. Howlett, Vicar of Astley, near Manchester, gave the following reasons for considering that the present time was a crisis or turning point in the Church's history:—In this our day, we have unhappily a flood of ungodliness issuing in drunkenness, which pervails to an alarming extent, as is manifest from the fact that the magistrates of Liverpool, only on Monday last, had to deal with 270 cases arising from drunkenness; moreover we find that the money spent in intoxicating drinks in one year in the United Kingdom is over one hundred millions, nor is this the only, though the most fruitful, species of ungodliness; sins against the sixth and seventh commandments are common in all ranks of life. Then, for those whose minds are of a different calibre, we have floods of intellectual conceits, each directly or indirectly assailing the truths of God's Word, and thus sapping the very foundations of the Christian's faith. Again, to meet the cravings of other minds, which must have something in the form of religion to satisfy the desires of a morbid conscience, there is a flood of Ritualistic observances commencing with the genuflections, postures, and man-millinery, indulged in by some in our own Church, and culminating in the golden throne of the Pope of Rome, and the adulation of his followers who are crowning him with infallibility, the attribute of the Most High. Another flood is that of disregard for God's most Holy Word, an attempt to disconnect education from religion, etc., in fact, every movement made by the legislature of late has had the tendency either to exalt the Papacy or to throw contempt upon the Christian religion. —Rock.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

A Worcester, Mass., correspondent says, that at the close of one of the services during Sr. Mansfield's late visit in that city, a man came forward of his own accord, desiring salvation and requesting prayer. He came out of curiosity, to hear a woman, but the truth broke his hard heart, and he would now give himself to God.——Br. J. S. Ames wishes some Advent preacher to come to Madison, Wis. and speak on the Capitol steps. They can have a good audience. He will care for any that come by rail or teams. Write your appointment to him.——Br. Mackie baptized four at Caro, Mich., week before last, and Br. Durand one at Grant.——The friends in S. W. Iowa consider their Campmeeting a perfect success.——Five more have been baptized, fruits of the Iowa (Cascade) Campmeeting.——Br. Holler (Nashville, Mich.) was recently challenged by a Baptist minister to discuss some points of our faith. But as soon as he accepted his opponent began to 'back out,' and the matter is now in a state of uncertainty.——A letter from the Lapeer Co. Poor House, conveys thanks for the TIMES, and says that its preaching to the poor people there has been a means of grace. "The poor have the gospel."——Br. John Hook baptized five recently in the Delaware River at Philadelphia. Others are seeking Jesus.——Eighteen have been added to the Chicago Church since June 1.——The brethren at Sanilac, Mich. are pushing the work upon their new chapel. Ten more have been baptized there, and more candidates are ready.——The Chapel at Auburn, Ill. will be dedicated Thursday Oct. 19. A feast of spiritual things will be held at the time, and all who can are invited to attend. See appointment.——Br. A. S. Calkins is on a visit to the East, but will return soon. He says his heart is in the Western field.——We only hear from Alton Bay that the meeting last week was excellent. We were sure it would be. It is a blessed spot.——Br. John Bower's health is quite restored, and he is prepared to devote more time than ever to the field. His address is Hinton, Mich.

- - - The census shows a terrible record of homicides in the United States in the year ending June '70. The total is 1,995. This is more than a thousand more than in 1860, and four fifths of the increase is in the Southern States.

- - - Fisk and Gould stole the Erie Railway. Tweed, Wood and Connoly undertook to steal the metropolis of the country, and came very near succeeding. This is a "progressive age." What next?

- - - The New York city debt is stated at $200,000,000. There is a report that the rogues who stole a large portion of the sum have "fallen out." If it were so, there might be hope. We fear it is only a new trick of the thieves.

- - - In popular phrase, abortion is called the crime of the period. Not that it is more practiced than for some time past, but that more of its consequences have been developed. The discovery of the corpse of a young girl in a trunk at a New York depot, followed by the suicide of her seducer, coupled with the murder of still another unfortunate by professional feticide, has stirred the public indignation deeply for the moment. Whether there is to be a reform, remains to be seen. Probably not, as long as such papers as the New York Herald are allowed to freely advertise not only that business, but also that of the procuress. Only last week a young woman barely escaped a horrid fate, who had been deluded by an advertisement offering positions to young women. What are we coming to?

- - - The New York Tribune, in speaking of the excesses of fashionable society, gives an account of a "children's hop" at Cape May recently. The unfortunate little victims assembled at nine o'clock in the evening, and entered the ball-room in a grand march. They ranged in age from five to fourteen years. The programme of the evening included all the fashionable dances. There were between three and four hundred children present. A list of the dresses of the little girls is given with as much detail as if they were fashionable women of the world. Is it a wonder that the world is filled with dissolute young men and women, when thus early childhood is initiated into the demoralization which results from fashionable life?

"stealing a whole city and county." Legal proceedings are going on to test whether the citizens can put a stop to further plunder. We confess to doubt of the effectiveness of any remedy less than a "Vigilance Committee."

ABROAD.

- - - Trains now run regularly through the Mt. Cenis tunnel.

- - - A new church is to be built at Rome, costing $100,000, to fitly represent "the American national faith." Which is that?

- - - Twenty-three thousand persons have emigrated from Strasburg to avoid German rule. They have gone to France, Switzerland or America.

- - - Bismark says—"With the French we can never be friends." But he says the French are to blame. But what difference does it make where the blame lies, so that the flames of discord are perpetually fanned?

- - - The impression gains ground that there is at least a verbal alliance between Russia and France, which has led to the combination of Germany and Austria. The Russian press is very outspoken against Prussia and her schemes.

- - - The Eastern question promises to become prominent again in European politics. Germany and Austria want the valley and mouths of the Danube. Russia wants the Hellespont and Constantinople. When either party is ready to strike we shall see another tremendous war.

- - - It is proposed to introduce a new telegraphic service in the German army for artillery in action. Experienced artillerymen are to be posted under cover far in advance of the batterries, to watch the effects of the cannonade, and report back by means of a small telegraphic apparatus.

- - - French affairs are a muddle. Theirs retains his position, and acts with great energy, if not always with wisdom. Intriguers abound. The National Guard has been disarmed—a wise step. As for France, it is better to await the course of events than to pre[illegible].

- - - The Chinese Government persists in hindering the labors of Christian missionaries in the most obstinate manner. The property of missionaries is outlawed, foreign women are banished, native women and children forbidden to attend meetings or schools, and the missionaries compelled to fulfill the most degrading exactions of Chinese etiquette.

- - - It seems that Bismark completely outwitted Russia, making large promises to secure her inaction during the late war. Now Russia has gained nothing; France, her most desirable ally, is broken; while Prussia has become an empire, and is the leading military power of the world. It is not too much to say that at present Bismark rules Europe.

- - - Italy has been invited to join the Austro-Germanic alliance, but replied that she preferred to remain neutral. A wise choice, one would think. But the Prussian statesman intimates that if she does not assist them, that Venetia and Lombardy will go back to Austria again. The moves on the great political chess-board of Europe are becoming very complicated and bewildering. What is coming?

- - - The Universe publishes the following prayer, which the Pope is said to offer up daily for France:—"O Mary, conceived without sin, look down upon France; pray for France; oh, save France. The greater its guilt, the greater its need of thy intercession. A single word to Jesus, reclining in thine arms, and France is saved. O Jesus, obey Mary, and save France."

- - - Bismark has commenced a vigorous campaign against papacy, and, as the first blow, has declared in Parliament and through his official gazettes that he regards the ultramontane church as hostile to the State; has broken off all relations with it not purely political, and has dissolved the Catholic department of the ministry of public worship. He is intriguing for the establishment of an orthodox Catholic party, which is the name applied to opponents of infallibility, and is actively supporting Dr. Dollinger, of Munich.

- - - "All is lost!"—"Only a miracle can save us!"—Such is the last message that has reached us from the Pope—the infallible Head of the Church of Rome! As a man, his anxieties and trials and political prospects entitle him to the pity of the world—though not to its sympathies. No man of his pretentions, claiming to be the infallible vicegerent of Christ in the church, can have any rightful claim to the sympathy of men or angels. The present is the most important crisis in the history of Popery ever witnessed.

- - - A programme has been published at Vienna by the "Catholics," or opponents of the Infallibility dogma, explaining the reforms which they wish to accomplish. Among these reforms are the following:—That the priests should be elected by their parishioners; that celibacy among the clergy should be abolished, every priest having the right of marrying, as during the first ten centuries of Christianity; that auricular confession should be abolished; that church holidays and processions which take people away from their work should cease; that the adoration of images should be discouraged; and that all deceptions practised by means of relics should be punished by the State.

- - - Famine and cholera are marching hand in-hand through Persia. From last accounts, the inhabitants were in dismay, and flying like sheep to escape their assailants. The famine in the southern provinces appears to have become worse than was at first reported. In Khorassan one-third of the whole population is said to have perished from it. At Ispahan twenty-seven thousand have died of hunger. Meanwhile, in many quarters where rice is the staple of life, the drouth has dried up the swamps, and caused a total failure of the rice crops. Ever since the Shah's visit to Kerbela, says the Levant Herald, a great curse has weighed over Persia. Cholera, typhus, small-pox, famine and cattle-plague have combined to ruin the country. The greater part of the oxen and buffaloes are said to have died, and substitutes in the way of food have been sought for in vain.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

IOWA CAMPMEETING.

TUESDAY, Aug. 29. While fitting up our camp, I gathered up some limbs and branches, with pieces of grapevine, and made a fire of them. It carried my mind to Palestine and its prophets. I thought of Ezekiel (ch. 15), where he compares the rebellious inhabitants of Jerusalem to a vine. (See the chapter.) The prophet says, the wood of the vine is unfit for any mechanical purpose. It has no strength, even to make a "pin, to hang any vessel thereon." How true. Here we have large vines of the grape; but they have no firmness and are fit for nothing, but to be burned. If the vine does not bear fruit, then it is utterly worthless. So with the inhabitants of Jerusalem. "I will give them to the fire for fuel." "And so it will be with the wicked in the end of this age. They will be gathered like the "tares of the field," or like "empty vines, to be burned." Let us all see to it, that we bring forth fruit unto God. For unless we do, we shall perish at the coming of Christ.

The storm has abated, and cool fall weather has come. We are all snug in camp, and the Lord is with his people to bless them. Br. Dutton spoke this p. m., on Esau's sale of his birthright. And in applying the subject he showed that every backslider, and unrepentant sinner, was in danger of losing theirs; exhorting all to see to it that they did not lose eternal life. At night I spoke on baptism for the resurrection of the dead; and some intend to obey their Lord's commandment.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 30. This a. m. Eld. Janes spoke on the personal coming of Jesus, and the necessity of personal holiness, in order to meet him in peace. In the midst of the service Elds. D. S. Clark and C. C. Marston arrived from the campmeeting in Amboy, Ill. Their presence cheered the hearts of the brethren. They gave us a report of the closing days of the meeting at Amboy, which were glorious, and triumphant. It is the opinion of all that it was the best meeting we ever had there. Br. Thurber's visit to Amboy was timely and a great help to cause. We like the help that unites and builds up. Br. Clark spoke in the p. m., on the "blessed hope." He is full of the Spirit and of faith and did us all good. God is with him. Br. Marston spoke at night on "the Rest that remains to the people of God." He showed that the land of Canaan was a typical rest, and the church of all ages were to have the real rest at the coming of Christ. A deep impression was made.

THURSDAY, Aug. 31. The Conference met this a. m., for business. The past year has not been as prosperous as they could have hoped; but they are united in good cheer, and look for better days. Br. Kenny spoke this a. m., on the "wheat and tares," Mat. 13. In the p. m., Br. Dutton, preached upon prayer, and its power. I spoke at night on the range of prophetic vision, from the fall to the restitution. I showed what was behind us in the fulfillment of prophecy, and then, what was before us: but little remaining to be fulfilled before Jesus comes. At the close six souls came to Jesus, and others desired baptism. The waters are moving, and some are stepping in.

FRIDAY, Sept. 1. The camp family is increasing in number, and the interest also, is growing. The Lord is with us.

I spent an hour this a. m., in looking over the Douay Bible, the version used, when they use any, by the Romanists. I will give some passages in which sheol occurs, with the notes of the Papists on the meaning of the word:

Gen. 37: 35: "I will go down to my son into hell mourning." Note. Into hell. That is, into the limbo, the place where the souls of the just were received before the death of our Redeemer. For allowing that the word hell sometimes is taken for the grave, it cannot be so taken in this place: since Jacob did not believe his son to be in the grave (whom he supposed to be devoured by a wild beast) and therefore could not mean to go down to him thither: but certainly meant the place of rest where he believed his soul to be.

This little bit of Popish sophistry has been too often copied by Protestant commentators. No intelligent person ever understood sheol to mean a tomb or single grave, but the state of the dead in general—whether drowned, buried, devoured or burned.

Gen. 42: 38: "You will bring my gray hairs with sorrow to hell." Note. "That is, to that place where the souls then remained" as in ch. 38: 35.

Gen. 44: 31: "Bring down his gray hairs with sorrow to hell." Note. "That is his person now far advanced in years. With sorrow into hell: the Hebrew word for hell is here sheol, the Greek hades: it is not taken for the hell of the damned: but for that place of souls, below, where the servants of God were kept before the coming of Christ. Which place both in the Scripture and in the creed, is named hell."

This idea of the "place of souls below," is of heathen origin, and did not exist till a much later date than the Patriarchal age.

Num. 16: 30: "And they go down alive into hell."

They add no note to this, and so leave it for the common reader to believe that Korah and his company went down into a burning hell. But it was into sheol, the grave—nothing else.

Deut. 32: 22: "The lowest hell." They give the same translation as King James' version. But it is sheol, or grave, and is used to denote the utter overthrow of the Jews, as the context shows.

Br. Clark spoke this a. m., on the subject of experimental religion and growth in grace, much to the gratification of the saints. In the p. m., Br. Marston spoke on the first Psalm. The audience was thrilled with words of truth—practical truth. At the close we went in solemn procession to the banks of the Maquoketa, where I buried five believing souls in its clear waters. It was a season to be remembered with joy. The presence of the Lord was with us. At the afternoon session of the Conference, they decided to have their annual camp-meeting next year, in or near Manchester: inviting all the Adventists in the State to take an interest in it. At night, Br. Clark spoke on the time and nature of future punishment. The audience was held for an hour, and a deep impression made.

I took leave of this dear people at the close of this service, as I depart on the morrow for Clinton, Iowa. I received many tokens of esteem. It is good to feel that our labors are appreciated. Brn. Clark and Marston continue here over the Sabbath. The Lord give them help.

SATURDAY, Sep. 2. Br. Chandler took me to Maquoketa, thirty-two miles, through the heat and dust, to the railway depot. On the way we had an interesting conversation on the state of the cause, and its prospects. He is interested in it, though he has to devote most of his time to a secular calling. He preaches some, and gives all his influence for the support of the Advent cause.

I arrived in Clinton at 7 p. m., and was cordially welcomed by F. McWilliams, late of Batavia, N. Y. He has settled here, and with his son, is doing a good business in the shoe trade. He has united with the Advent-Christian church in Clinton, and will help them as he may have opportunity. He is one of the old believers, always faithful, and with his family, looks with us for the soon coming of the Lord. It is pleasant to meet with old, true and tried friends, and receive warm greetings, and talk over the trials and joys of the past, and anticipate the glorious future.

SABBATH, Sep. 3. Met with the church this a. m., and spoke on 1 Cor. ch. 15: At the close Eld. Wilson took me to the banks of the Mississippi, where I found a good congregation waiting, and four brethren waiting for immersion. The day was beautiful, and very warm. The people were solemnly impressed, and it was as quiet as it could have been in a church. God was with us. It was a glorious time to me. I have always enjoyed seasons of immersion, but never more than now. It seems to bring heaven down to earth. It brings the resurrection and immortality plain in view. Buried with Christ, and raised with him to newness of life now; soon rise and put on immortality. Hallelujah!

In the p. m., I spoke by request on the inheritance of the saints. Of course I told them that plain truth, that it was the New Earth. At night I spoke on the "signs of the times," in reference to the soon coming of Christ, showing that it is the next grand event in prophecy. Brn. Wilson and McWilliams endorsed the argument when I closed. They have no faith in the futurist theory, that would undermine our faith and hope. And I am glad to find in my travels that very few indeed have been affected by it. They like the old wine best. They like the name, Advent, and the truths it represents—especially the coming of Jesus.

The church here is small but united and true. Br. Wilson, lately ordained, has been a father to them. He is about to leave them, to go to a distant field—to California. He will unite in labor with Br. Reed, and others, and do what he can to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. He, like Br. Reed, will largely pay his own expenses, and like Paul, be chargeable to none. Yet I hope these brethren may be aided by those who are blessed by their labors. "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

I have known Br. Wilson for a long time. He is one of the most reliable and faithful men among us. Let him be received without any hesitation by all: he will do you good. He understands the truth, and has a gift to proclaim it to others. He is young in the ministry, but will improve fast, and I hope will see that he does not labor in vain. The Lord go with and bless him.

MONDAY, Sept. 4. Left Clinton for the South. On my way, at Dixon, I fell in with Eld. H. G. McCullock, of DeKalb. He looks well and even robust. He has been at work out of doors, and has quite fully recovered his health, and is now fully able to preach with more power than ever, of which we are very glad indeed, for he was never more needed in the field than now. He has now a comfortable home for his family, and will be able to do more for the cause and intends to. He is one of our most effective and popular speakers, and we cannot spare him from our camp and tentmeetings any longer. The Lord open before him new fields of usefulness.

I failed to make the railway connections, and as I had to wait several hours, I spent the time in contemplation of the state of the cause in the West. I love it, and am intensely interested in its prosperity and success. I have given to it the ripest years of my long experience, and the best energies of the last years of my life. And I have given to it also, all the material aid in my power, and have felt a pleasure in denying myself, and those dear to me, many things, for the sake of the Western Advent interest. And in this interest I expect to meet the Master at his coming, or I shall lie down in the dust, to sleep until he comes. I am content to have it either way.

The last seven years have been years full of interest to the waiting ones scattered over the Western field. God has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. More has been done than the most sanguine dared to hope. We are now well organized, and the people have a mind to work and work together. Hence, I regard our future as hopeful. We have only to keep at the Master's feet, trusting and working, waiting and working, giving and working, praying and working, and all this unitedly, in order to see greater things.

Our late camp and conference meetings in Illinois, and Iowa have been attended with special blessings. I have never seen more unity and love.

I took the freight train from Dixon to Amboy, and made a call there until the express came at night, upon Brn. Clark, and Marston, whom I left at Cascade to close up the campmeeting. They give a glorious report of the last two days in the camp. Five more were immersed into Christ by Eld. Clark. The cause has received a new impetus, and all hearts are hopeful.

From C. C. Marston. Chicago, Ill.

Praise the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever. We have had a most precious day in the service of the Lord. It was the first privilege I ever had of meeting with these dear brethren. Many were out to hear the word, and we enjoyed much liberty in talking about the blessed hope, and the glories of the world to come. Our communion with the saints was sweet and we felt that it was good to be there. In the p. m., I went to the Lincoln Park Mission and had a pleasant season of worship with the "strangers" and "passers by." Br. Burr is much beloved by the brethren, and under God is doing a great work in this city. May the Lord bless him and give success to his efforts in building up a pure Christianity in this stronghold of sin. I was kindly cared for by Brn. M. Morrison and L. C. Rice. The Lord reward them for their labor of love.

AMBOY.

The campmeeting at Amboy was a grand success. Seventeen were baptized, mostly converts. A deep interest is around among the people. Praise the Lord!

IOWA CAMPMEETING.

After spending a day at home, I started in company with Br. Clark for the Iowa campmeeting. Arrived on the ground Wednesday a. m. There were a goodly number of tents erected, and the meeting was fairly under headway. Br. J. V. Himes had been present from the beginning, and remained with us until Saturday morning. His sermon on Thursday eve on prophecy was a most timely and able effort. Br. Himes is emphatically one of the leaders in the great Advent movement. God bless him in his declining years. How it cheers my heart to be with and listen to the old veterans. Their many years of experience aptly qualify them to give wholesome and useful counsel to the younger members. I esteem it a precious privilege to receive words of kindly admonition from my elder brethren.

Yesterday and to-day (Sept. 2 and 4), were decidedly the best days of the meeting. The attendance was large and the people were orderly and attentive. Saturday eve was a most precious season. It was truly a "love feast" to the waiting ones. During the meeting eleven were baptized.

The Conference, which was in connection with the campmeeting, was one of the most harmonious and peaceable convocations of the kind that I have attended. The votes were unanimous! "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

I have formed many happy acquaintances with the dear brethren in Iowa, which will not soon be effaced from memory. God bless the true men in Israel. Our sojourn of five days among the hills of Northern Iowa has been, we trust, mutually pleasant and satisfactory to all concerned. We expect to return home to-morrow.

From Frank M. Dudley, Holton, Ind.

I have united with the little Advent band at Holton. I have been heretofore an active disciple of the evil one; but the prayers of those who are very near and dear to me have prevailed, and bless God I have put on an armor which I feel I must never lay aside until the trials of this life are ended. I believe I know my duty. I am aware of the trials and temptations that await me on every side. But dear brethren and sisters have promised to remember me in their prayers, and thus with reliance upon the blessed promises of our Savior, I hope to endure until the end, and be among the happy number who will at his coming receive the gift of immortality.

From R S Foster, Parish of Avoyelles. La.

At no time in my life have I experienced in so strong a degree as now, the truth conveyed in the following lines:

> "God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform."

I had been furnished with a cabin passage to New York on one of the merchant steamers, with the intention of assuming charge of a public school in Rhode Island, in the ensuing fall, when I heard of a vacancy existing in this parish, for one desirous of teaching a colored school. I applied for and obtained the situation. I, in the first place, was ordered to Holmesville. On my arrival there I found none but the colored people and a Scotch gentleman who would greet me. Through the kind offices of the latter, I obtained temporary shelter with a family, once rich, still very proud, and famous for their courage, as that term is commonly understood at the South. It was finally concluded to give me permanent board, inasmuch as I was separated from all political affiliations and aspirations. But from wise considerations, I turned over the school to a colored man, and was transferred to this school district, where comparative tranquility prevails.

It had leaked out, however, that I cherished new and strange religious themes, which both whites and blacks were anxious to listen to and hear about. But my sudden removal hither prevented. I agreed however to preach to them at some future time. To-day I preached a sound Advent sermon to an attentive congregation, from the words—"What is truth?" Next Sunday morning I have engaged to preach at Moreauville, about four miles distant.

Thus my coming here, in place of going to my dear native home and kindred may finally redound to the glory of God. It is perfectly disgusting to see how the colored people are used by some designing men from the North. The primary political meetings are fit types of pandemonium. Drunkenness, filthy and profane talk, card playing and fighting, sometimes culminating in bloodshed, are the accompaniments of the aforesaid meetings. The white men (some representatives in the Legislature), leading the way. Some of these same members made $30,000 last session. The state of things here is frightful.

From A S Corey, Topeka, Kas Sept. 1:

Since your visit to us on Middle Creek, there has been considerable interest felt among the people in all this region, especially at those points where meetings were held. Some unfriendliness has manifested itself, and a local preacher has taken occasion to reply to your sermons at Morris' Grove. We all turned out to hear the reply. It was a complete failure, and outsiders declared that a few such efforts would turn all the people to Adventists. Among other things the preacher said that the preaching of the coming of Christ had never been the means of converting sinners. At the close of the sermon we were glad to stand up and bear testimony to the fact that the proclamation of the soon coming of the master led us to forsake our sins and yield obedience to the gospel.

In our immediate neighborhood two have made a profession of religion, and were baptised last Lord's day. One joined our church, at our communion season, and the other will do so at the next opportunity. There are others who have expressed their desire to be baptized and join with us. They will soon come forward and stand with us in this glorious battle for the truth. We are all hoping we shall receive another visit from you ere long; but in the meantime we intend to stand up for the truth and the coming King.

From D S Clark, Amboy, Ill. Aug. 28.

This morning found the camp meeting closed, and brethren and sisters leaving for home. By noon all had left but Br. Wm. McCullock, who staid to help close up all matters in connection with the meeting. After getting in all of the bills, we had plenty to meet all demands that were brought against us. We think we have a great reason to thank our heavenly Father for his goodness to us in this meeting. It was one of the best meetings, and I might say the best, I ever attended. Oh! what love and union.

This meeting will have a lasting effect on the people who had the privilege to be here. Br. Thurber was with us. He is truly a man of God. How good to see Br. Himes and Br. Thurber so much engaged in trying to save poor sinners. May the good Lord bless them and spare them for the work till Jesus comes. After having such a good meeting at home, I made up my mind to go to Iowa, in company with Br. Marston to enjoy a feast with them. Bless the Lord! I was not disappointed. We found the same good Spirit in this meeting that we had at Amboy. The good Lord is with the Adventists in Iowa. He will bless his people where they are not ashamed to hold out their colors. May we all live so that the people may see by our works that we do believe that Jesus is soon to make his advent to earth. Oh! may we all be ready.

The Lord was with us in all of our meetings, in power. We left Sunday night, to get ready for the tent meeting at St. Charles, Ill. Br. Marston and myself arrived at St. Charles in time to get up the tent and commence the meeting on Wednesday eve. The meetings have been increasing in interest up to the present. We expect to see good done here. Brethren and sisters remember us in your prayers.

Minutes of a Discussion.

BETWEEN WM. A. FENN AND A. BURGESS.

Sixth session, Fenn's third speech.

Burgess made a bold dash at my arguments with one of his overwhelming assertions. He says, "consciousness does not pertain to man's body, 'y his spirit." That assertion does [illegible] harmonize very well with the physiological arguments that have been produced since this debate began. We should like to have him reconcile this assertion with the examples of unconsciousness furnished by physiology, resulting from indentation, etc. If the body has nothing to do with consciousness, how is it that indentation of the skull produces unconsciousness? Why do physicians say of one who has fallen from a building and fractured his skull; "he was unconscious nine hours." No one questions the propriety of the expression till we come to theology. Then it is affirmed that unconsciousness is impossible, and that "consciousness does not pertain to man's body." When we look at man from a physiological standpoint, we conclude his body is a very essential thing to his existence. But when we hear the theologian dispose of humanity, we should conclude the body to be an accident, and a very sad one at that. Br. Burgess, at one moment tells you that man gets his final reward when Christ comes, and the next moment he quotes, Rev. 2: 10, and says, the faithful are to receive their crowns immediately after death. He very shrewdly asks if a nonentity can wear a literal crown? I will inquire if "an immaterial, intangible uncompounded spirit, without form or parts, interior or exterior," can "wear a literal crown?" Now if he is not as deep in the mud as I am in the mire, I fail to see the nature of the soil he is traversing.

He denies advocating the theory that paradise is a part of hades: but he says it is the blissful side of it. He has bettered the matter in his own mind, doubtless; but I presume you fail to see the difference. How can paradise be the blissful side of hades, and not be a part of it? Perhaps he will tell us.

Paul tells us when he expected his crown: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only but unto all them, also, that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 8.) Here is a special day, in which the apostle and "all that love the appearing" of the Lord are to receive a crown of righteousness. What day is here referred to? We go back to v. 1, and we find the desired information: "I charge thee, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Ah! we see that at the appearing and kingdom of Christ is the day, in which the crown is given. Now we understand when the Revelator will get his crown of life: for he loved the appearing of Christ: and those that love his appearing are to get their crowns, "at his appearing and kingdom." Besides all this, the judgment must be before rewards: and the judgment is not till "his appearing and kingdom." This makes God's ways consistent, and his word harmonious; and is, also, at agreement with physiological facts.

Burgess' third speech.

The gentleman's arguments are all very easily disposed of when we see that it is a crown of life that was promised at death, and it is a crown of righteousness that is referred to in 2 Tim. 4: 8. Did you see how adroitly he slipped over that fact? You will have to watch him very closely, or he will make you think that he has got all the truth on his side, and Br. Burgess, is in the dark. Now don't let his sophistry and eloquence deceive you. There is a vast difference between a fine declamation, and the searching truths of God's holy word. I have piled up Scripture testimony before you, and with a very few exceptions he has given it the go by. He says they are irrelevant to the question. Suppose I should say his passages are irrelevant to the question: would that make it so? I take up every one of his passages, and deal with them faithfully.

His arguments are now all noticed, and I proceed with my rebutting arguments. [Reads from his primmer.] Fenn says:—Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to interrupt my opponent, and inquire who the author is from which he reads. Mr. Burgess refused to tell. But on being requested by his own special friends, he announced that it was Rev. Alvin Burgess. [Laughter.] Fenn then asked him to reconcile that fact with a statement made the night before, viz.: "he had never published anything relative to this discussion." He remarked that he never published his victories. (This remark was made the night previous, while commenting on something relative to the discussion which was published in The Crisis from Fenn's pen.) Fenn was willing to let him off on the consideration that what he had published was a failure instead of a victory. Fenn then asked for a copy of his pamphlet, as it contained the rebutting arguments in a discussion held at East Randolph, between Burgess and Fenn, and was published (or written) before the discussion began. This request was refused: but a promise was given that Fenn should have one at the close of the debate. Burgess was then allowed to read from his primmer till the close of the session.]

From San Francisco.

I write a few lines to you to let you know how we are getting along in San Francisco. We hold services every Sunday in Excelsior Hall, Mission St., near Third. We have a very good attendance. I preach morning and evening. The brethren here are very much interested in the speedy coming of Christ, to establish his kingdom and reward his people.

We have much opposition from other churches; but the Lord is smiling upon us, and blessing our efforts. Last Sunday week we had a very precious time in commemorating the Savior's death. We had a long table covered and seats arranged all round so that we sat together, as one family. The testimonies were short and to the point. All testified of their love for Jesus, and of faith in his soon coming to reward his people.

Eld. Cornell is here, trying to make us believe in the Seventh-day Sabbath. A few have become a little wavering. but most of us hold on to the glorious truth, that we are not under the law, but under grace. I have done my best to show the people that we are under the law to Christ, that the "law was our school-master to bring us to Christ." "If we are led by the Spirit we are not under the law." Paul says: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live. Yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live, is by faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."

If we depend on the law in any sense whatever, we must take the penalty with it. We have all broken it; therefore we are under the penalty. But "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." "There is, therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made us free from the law of sin and death." Huntington of England says: "We retain the whole morality of the law, by enforcing holiness by the Spirit of God; the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us by the faith of Christ; and love to God and the Brotherhood, by the love of God shed abroad in the heart; and all beside this is devilish."

Journeyings.—No. 1.

On the 5th of September I left Winona for a tour of 350 miles. My first stopping place was Warren; but owing to the heavy rains and the dark night, with bad roads, we had no meeting. I found a home with Br. Zenas Thayer, from the East. He is a member of the Baptist church in this place, but has been a firm believer in the coming of Jesus and his reign on the earth, ever since he heard Wm. Miller, near thirty years ago. There are a number in this community who are now interested in the Advent doctrine, and are searching the Scriptures with much interest. I passed on the next day, stopping at Utica, where I was greeted by Br. I. C. Wellcome, and others, some of whom like myself were just starting out for their appointments, and some returning to their homes from our Q. M., just closed. Our services at St. Charles were prevented; but I enjoyed a social season with Br. Leonard's family, and some others that came in. These little gatherings are often very profitable. Sr. Leonard has fitted up a little Bethel at her house for prayer meetings and preaching. They are endeavoring to secure regular meetings here, and preaching by Br. S. C. Wellcome, (he having closed his labors at Utica.) The tide of opposition is rising against them, as in all other places where the "present truth" is held up to the people. Though Br. W. is young in the work of the ministry, he is an old soldier of of the cross, and while the church will find a faithful pastor, the community, as well as those who oppose themselves, will find a friend in him, as he prosecutes his work in their midst.

I enjoyed an interview with Br. Baker and wife, of the Utica church, who are young in the cause, with a number of others whose voices were heard in the recent meeting at that place, as they gave in their earnest testimonies on the Lord's side. Our proposed camp-meeting next June is anticipated with much interest. Utica being a central point for this part of the State, and the scene of so many general gatherings in the past, seems to be the most appropriate place that could have been chosen; and the fact that we have here a strong and growing organization, is a consideration which no other convenient locality could present. Sr. Rowell now has the care of this flock, and may her faithful labors among them be blessed in the future as in the past.

To make a camp-meeting a blessing to all, every one should arrange to go, and so far as possible go prepared to camp on the ground, and provide for themselves. Going away from the ground to stop at night breaks up the camp family, and makes a scene of confusion in the morning, which interferes with the worship. If each member of the family take care of themselves then none have heavy burdens to bear, and all have time to share the blessings of the meeting.

We concluded our interview with a chat on the subjects of faith and feeling. The evidence of forgiveness of sins is often sought in ways which God has not promised. The Lord says—"Ask and ye shall receive." A penitent person after having offered up this petition is to believe, and though he cannot see the face of the Master and hear him say with an audible voice that his petition is granted, yet faith says, the work is done; and believing we rejoice. and receive the Spirit, whereby we cry, "Father!" Now the fact that young converts often afterwards experience different shades of feeling, and even pass under gloomy clouds, should never make them doubt their acceptance with God, unless they are conscious of having knowingly sinned.

They are tempted to believe that their sins are not forgiven: but what evidence is there to prove it? None at all. Faith again speaks and says—"I know my sins are forgiven; for God's word which changes not, says so; and I know that my faith is genuine, for it works by love, it purifies my heart. I am in trial it is true; the clouds have overcast my mind's sky, for some cause unknown to me; but this cannot change the relation I sustain to my Savior. I am still a child of faith, and love my Father and Savior, and all the members of the family. I will trust! I do believe! Sunshine or darkness, God changes not.

Let faith and feeling both and each occupy their proper spheres and there will be no difficulty in harmonizing this matter.

Greenwood.

The grounds of this famous cemetery, comprising four hundred and ten acres, situated on Gowanus Hights, Brooklyn, are undulating in surface, forming, even if unadorned by art, the most picturesque and beautiful burial places. From the breezy eminences which dot its broad area the most delightful views are obtained of the city and bay of New York, of Brooklyn, of Staten Island, and the distant ocean itself from Sandy Hook to Rockaway Beach. Its vast extent of forest trees, its delightful dales and swelling hills, its ridges covered with luxuriant shrubbery, its valleys, lanes and shady groves, its broad, smooth and well kept avenues, its numerous carriage ways and footpaths leading alike past humble and unlettered graves, rich obelisks, stately statues, and tall monuments, its smooth lawns and fragrant flowers, render this home of the dead the most beautiful necropolis of America. The various avenues which lead in all directions to every part of the grounds, shelving into the valleys, and winding about the hills, are said to comprise a total length of sixteen miles. The whole number of burials in this cemetery since it was first opened twenty-five years ago, is shown by the official records to be nearly 150,000—so that this city of the dead is about equal in point of number of inhabitants to Buffalo or San Francisco. Nearly 20,000 burial lots have been sold, and the revenue derived from these sales has been devoted to beautifying and improving the grounds. The best artistic and engineering talent has been employed, and the result is, that nature and art by joining their richest productions have made this cemetery unequalled by any other in the country. Greenwood, like other cities has its aristocratic quarters, its fashionable avenues, marble, granite, and brown stone edifices. Like other cities, too, it has its poor, who here rest in humble graves, but whose repose is as perfect, and whose sleep is as sweet, as that of their wealthy neighbors. That which interested me most as a work of art was the elegant monument erected to the memory of Charlotte Canda, a French girl, who was killed by a fall from a carriage on the seventeenth anniversary of her birth-day. This beautiful piece of white marble with its associated group of statuary constitutes one of Greenwood's principal attractions. A few feet in front of the tomb is a marble tablet, on which are chiseled the following expressive and beautiful lines:

"So sinks from sight eve's golden star,
Lost in the watery depths afar:
Yet still does the fair planet burn.
Not hopeless is our Charlotte's urn:
In God's own morn her orb will rise,
Once more a star of Paradise."

It is said that during the French Revolution of '89-'93, infidel Paris caused to be engraved over the gateway to her beautiful Pere la Chaise, the words "Death is an eternal sleep." The Christian visitor to Greenwood will be glad to notice the Christian motto over its principal entrance. In golden letters cut deep in the brown stone arch he will read these precious words: "I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live." And on the opposite side he would read: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

May New York never be ruled by atheists; and may Greenwood never exchange Christian for infidel mottoes.

Things Revealed.

A late writer quotes, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him," to prove that we know but little or nothing about the blessedness in store for the people of God.

It appears strange to me that under the strong illumination of the gospel light, some are, comparatively, yet in the dark. This is giving license, in a measure, to the old theory that all Scripture is a mystery and that it must be spiritualized before it can be comprehended.

Why take this passage out of its connection? Why give the dim side when the glory shines forth on the other? Says Paul in that connection, "But God has revealed them," they are no more a mystery, neither are they hid.

At the time this Scripture was first penned the whole was a mystery, and therefore Paul says, "As it is written." The scheme of redemption was not yet fully made known. The Israelite was commanded to look forward to the coming age, to the Messiah who should come, and to the glory that would then appear. The beauties, the happiness and the grandeur of the new heaven and earth were yet kept a profound secret in the Divine mind. "But," says Paul, "It is now revealed by the Spirit."

Of course, we do not know what kind of employment will occupy our attention there, but this is the only thing which Jesus has seen fit to hide from us. How can any Christian read and contemplate the glory described in the twenty-first and twenty-second chapters of Revelation, and then say, "The human mind fails to grasp or contemplate the magnificence of the eternal fields of felicity?" If a person should go to Australia and return and give us as minute a description of a beautiful city and country, which he saw there, we could comprehend and grasp the magnificence of those earthly fields. But could any tongue or pen describe an earthly paradise with more minutia than the angel describes, or John through the spirit gives of the paradise of God? The Spirit has taken much pains to describe the glory in reserve for the people of God. It runs through the whole scheme.

And then again our home is not in heaven. But Christ is to descend from heaven. The New Jerusalem is to come down out of heaven. The saints are to meet Jesus in the air, not in heaven. The earth is to be the abode of the redeemed. The idea that the saints are to go off to heaven is an absurdity.

Christ says, "If I go away, I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Where is Christ to be? "He is to descend to the earth," and the saints are to reign with him in the new heaven and the new earth. Now I am no person to find fault, but I only wish to stick to Bible language and teach the word, and therefore I never can sing, "My home is in heaven," or "Shall we sing in heaven forever?"

I believe in keeping the old maxim with which this reformation started out, "A thus saith the Lord."—A. W. Dean, in Chris. Record.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 19, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: } Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; P. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

The Good Way.

The next regular issue of the Good Way, will be in October. Orders will be promptly filled in the order that they are received. 75c. a hundred. Special notices for any locality inserted, without extra charge, when not less than 300 copies are taken.

Send a Stamp.

When you write a letter which requires an answer, make it an invariable rule to enclose a stamp, to pay the postage on the reply. Editors—and ministers, too—find their postage bills a heavy tax on their pockets.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

Advertise "The Times."

We furnish envelopes and paper bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, at the following prices:

Twenty-five (25) envelopes, post-paid, 10c.—25 sheets flat note (2 pages) 15c.—25 sheets flat letter, 20c.—40 sheets of flat note and 25 envelopes, 25c.—40 sheets flat letter and 25 envelopes, 35c.—100 sheets of flat letter, 75c. -100 sheets flat note, 50c.

Rich Man and Lazarus.

We confess our surprise at the growing popularity of this new exposition of the parable of Dives and the beggar. By L. C. Collins, author of "An Address to the M. E. Conference of Minnesota." The first edition was exhausted ere we were aware. A new edition is now ready 48 pp. 10c. by mail, pre-paid. By the quantity, a discount of 25 per cent. will be allowed. To those who wish a large number, strictly for distribution, we will make very liberal terms.

New Music.

A sheet with seven pieces, "I love to tell the story," etc Price 30c.

"Jerusalem Forever Bright," by Amanda Bailey. Price 5c.

"Rest Over There," by Geo. E. Lee. 5c.

Praise Songs, 24 pp. of choice tunes. 15c.

Camp Meeting Music, 16 large pages. 10c.

The four last named, to one address, 30c. For sale at this office.

Whitmore—Cheap Edition.

We are pushing this along as fast as possible. It will be better printed than the last, for our new press is doing good work. We are anticipating fresh and liberal orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies, by express, $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We once heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." We think this is cheap enough. Every one can afford to have Whitmore, and Collins, and Sheldon preaching, and that, too, in places the authors themselves cannot possibly visit. Buy and distribute, or lend their works.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists: and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

The New Chart.

We receive some encouragement for the proposed new chart. And the more we reflect upon the matter, the more we are convinced that it is really needed. Read the description of the plan in another part of this paper. Some have paid as high as $20 for charts not as complete as this will be.

There are many persons to whom it would, perhaps, be of no special use personally, who are well able to purchase one. We suggest that such should subscribe, and present the chart, when published, to some worthy minister, or to some chapel. Will you not aid this good work, and add your names to this list:

John S. Lawver, one; M. B. Geer, one.

Book Notices, Etc.

The Herald of Salvation, No. 2, is at hand, and fully sustains the promise of the first number. $1 a year. Monthly. W. Kellaway, Fairhaven, Mass.

Chatfield & Co., of New Haven, Conn., have republished Mr. Henry Constable's work entitled "the Duration and Nature of Future Punishment." We need not inform our readers that it is, perhaps, the ablest work upon that subject yet published, for they have had frequent tastes of the Prebendary's rich pen.

We had just imported a quantity of his work, when we learned of its republication by Chatfield. But we shall not in the least regret the loss entailed upon us in selling at the price of the American edition, which is within the reach of all. We wish all to have the work. Price, 40c., post-paid. For sale at this office.

The Bible Examiner, received, in a new form, and really beautiful dress, lies before us. The initial number is largely filled with personal matter, concerning the dissolution of the editor's relations with the Herald of Life and "The Life and Advent Union." It seems that "the Union" desired to impose trammels to which Eld Storrs could not submit: hence the separation, and a new paper. The question of difference was "the age to-come," and the question of restoration. The Examiner will now maintain probation and salvation of most of the race of Adam in the coming age. For the present it will be published semi-monthly, in New York city. Box 4696. $2 a year. It is now about half the size of THE TIMES; but will be enlarged should the enterprise prosper.

We are indebted to Munn & Co., publishers of the Scientific American, New York, for a neat little bound volume of 120 pages, which contains the Census of 1870, showing the population by counties, of all the States and Territories, with their areas, and the population of the principal cities. Also, the new Patent Laws, in full, with forms, official rules, directions how to obtain patents, copyrights, regulations for trade-marks, Assignments, how to sell patents, etc. Also, a large variety of valuable information relating to water-wheels, steam engines, and other mechanism, with many useful tables and recipes, 175 diagrams of mechanical movements, etc. Price, 25 cents.

Obituary.

ROBBINS. At Wataga, Knox Co. Ill., Sep. 4, 1871, Miss Mary Robbins: aged 23 years.

Mary had been a consistent Christian for a long time, and at the Amboy camp-meeting this year many will remember her as coming forward on Saturday night and expressing a desire for a deeper feeling of consecration, which was then and there granted her. She went home to carry out the work of her renewed consecration in her life, but her work was done, and she sleeps in Jesus. She had many friends, and a large concourse gathered at her funeral in the maple grove at Br. J. C. Shaw's, where I was permitted to address them from Rev. 21: 4—"And there shall be no more death." F. BURR.

HATTIE was one of the most affectionate children I ever saw, and was almost idolized by her parents, and loved by all. Now she is cut down by death's relentless hand, and we are left to mourn. Our hearts are made to bleed as we look back and view our loss. We can, in fancy, see our little rosebud standing at the gate, clapping her hand as her pa comes home, waiting for the fond embraces and kisses of welcome and love. Those little feet that brought her to the loved ones fond embrace, will carry her no more. That prattling voice, like music falling on our ears, is still. Those eyes that watched so eagerly for pa's return, are closed until the resurrection morn. O Lord! How long wilt thou delay?

"Hattie sleeps, but not forever;
There will be a glorious dawn:
We shall meet, to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn."

These lines are engraven on her tomb stone.

The second coming of Christ will be a glorious event. It will not only be glorious to look upon, but it will also bring glorious results to his waiting ones. Then we shall meet to part no more. Sometimes when I talk with others on the coming judgment, and see how they reject him and put it afar off, it makes me think they would prevent it, if they could. But he will come and fulfill his promise. Yes, even that great promise—"Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die." FRANCES WRIGHT.

Discussion.

There will be a discussion at the Baptist church in Money Creek, Winona Co. Minn., on the evenings of October 3, 4, 5 and 6, between Eld. C. F. Dikeman (F. W. Baptist) and Eld. E. T. Himes (Adventist).

QUESTIONS.

1. Resolved, That when man dies he remains in a state of unconsciousness until the resurrection."

H. affirms; D. denies.

2. Resolved, That the future retribution of the wicked will consist in banishment from God to endure the torments of endless remorse.

D affirms; H. denies.

The sessions will begin at 7 p. m. and continue two hours. The speakers will be confined to twenty minute speeches.

Notice.

All letters, communications and remittances for the monthly journal entitled Woman and her Work, should hereafter be addressed to Mrs. E. S. Jennings, No 74 Williams St., Rochester, N. Y.

AURORA COLLEGE

ADVENT TIMES---SUPPLEMENT.

VOL. I. BUCHANAN, MICH., SEPTEMBER 26, 1871. NO. III.

READ, CONSIDER, ACT.

There are various ways of seeking help, or as it is familiarly called 'begging.' One beggar importunes you, until, like the judge of old, you give something to escape the threatened weariness. Another simply turns upon youhis sightless orbs, or his withered limb, or exposes his sores, in a manner that moves you far more than any spoken language could.

At the last General Campmeeting in the West, it was clearly pointed out and demonstrated, that if every one who takes or reads THE TIMES would do something, the treasury for the work of the Publishing Association would be filled, and yet no one be burdened. Various schemes were then proposed for bringing about this desirable result, but none of them seemed practicable. But the writer being firmly convicted that this cause is of God; and that the truths we teach should be more widely proclaimed, and our presses kept busy in providing the silent, but effective preachers, from whom many who will read these lines received and by which they were stirred up to those studies that have made the Bible a new book to them; and have received an experience, which they can only describe as a new and happier conversion; conceiving, I say, that these preachers ought to be multiplied, and given out more abundantly (they could not be more freely), much has been said in the columns of our weekly paper about all taking hold of the work, by every one giving something, even as God has prospered them.

Still, as yet, only the few have responded. But we cannot hold our peace. The necessities of the cause are great. If we are importunate, why should we not be? If we were not, it would prove that we were not in earnest, and were, therefore, unfit for our position.

We have concluded in view of the necessities of our work to make

to all, and to each of our readers, and to so approach them, that they at least, could plead no excuse for withholding a word of good cheer—if that is all they have to give: for we ask no one to give what they have not, nor beyond the Gospel Standard—"as God has prospered."

And first let me clear away a little brush. At a recent Camp-meeting I was told by some that they could or would not give to the Western Association, because its means were expended by some of its officers in traveling about the country. THIS IS NOT TRUE. But it is true that some of its servants have worked for half or quarter, or no pay, and paid their own expenses, even when traveling solely on account of business for the Association. And we protest against the wheels of this glorious gospel car, being blocked by rumors and false reports concerning individuals. There is a way to deal with wrong-doers: but that way is not to scrimp the funds of the cause, and send the preachers out tractless, and cause a deaf ear to be turned to the cries for books and papers that come from every quarter. If any brother or sister has a complaint against any, let it be settled according to the gospel rule. If you make such personal difficulty an excuse for shutting your means from the cause, you surely do wrong. This cause must live. And you and I, weak, fallible as we are, may be instruments in God's hands of causing it to flourish. Heaven help us to be of a willing mind.

A CASE IN POINT.

While we were arranging the foregoing thoughts, we received a letter from Iowa. It was from a sister who had received copies of THE TIMES, with tracts, from friends in Shabbona, Ill. She had, she said, 'been out to washing," in order to get money to purchase some books, and to pay for THE TIMES for one year. And bitter was the disappointment she described, when the parties put her off, and at last paid her only a part of her wages, and refused her the rest. You who enjoy the paper every week, and perhaps other papers, can hardly appreciate that poor sister's feelings. But let me ask you, shall she go without her weekly teacher, visitor and preacher, because of her loss? Can you say, it is a matter of little consequence? No. It is the little things that make life happy or miserable. Her paper every week will be a constant source of pleasure that money could not purchase from her.

And yet this is only one case. We have many similar to it. In fact such appeals are reaching us constantly. Ask the ministers. Each know of cases of this character; and when the claims that each are conversant with, are all concentrated, or converge to a point as it were, at this office, the aggregate is far from a trifling matter.

When the brother whose crops have been beaten into the earth by the hail; or whose hopes have died away, like his harvest, before the drouth; or worse yet, his barns, and all in them have been consumed by fire; when the sick, the widow, the orphans, cry for the paper, must we say, 'No, we cannot send it; we have not the means?' We trust we may never have to do so again.

A COMMON EPPERIENCE.

Some of you will remember the time in your experience when the scale, so far as Advent truths are concerned, turned with you. You had, perhaps, attended a meeting; heard some truth; became interested; wen home thoughtful. But the impression was wearing away from your mind, when, one evening as you called for your mail, you found an Advent paper directed to you. You took it home, read it; your interest began to revive. You said, I will read and compare with the Bible, and see for myself, and have this question settled in my own mind. Week after week the paper stirred you up to thought and investigation, until at last you entered upon an almost new life. The unreal gave way to the substantial; the shadowy assumed definite proportions; the dimly defined was now clearly seen. You no longer

> "Beyond the bounds of time and space > Looked forward to a heavenly place," but read from the Savior's own dictation, and believed him, too—"The meek shall inherit the earth!" And you wondered how, possibly, you could have been so stupid as not to see it before, when it read so plainly.

TIMELY ASSISTANCE.

Perhaps it was a bundle of tracts that came to you through the office, or a larger work. Or they may have been given you at some meeting. How your faith had staggered all your life long at the idea of immortal sinners, of whose dread doôm you scarce dared think, even if you sang with Watts:

> "There endless crowds of sinners lie,
> And darkness makes their chains;
> Tortured with keen despair they cry,
> Yet wait for fiercer pains."

Or it may be you had sung that other hymn, as he originally wrote it:

> "A charge to keep I have;
> A God to glorify;
> From torture's lasting pangs to save
> A soul that ne'er can die."

Ah! it was hard to give up the idea that you were in possession of that divine attribute, natural immortality; but oh! what a glow of light lit up your soul when you were convinced that God not only consistently could, but would finally destroy all who were unfit to live. That sin and misery and distress, suffering and wo and anguish, and all the dread consequences o sin would forever cease, and God would have a clean universe, filled with "fulness of joys and pleasures forevermore." And that immortality, though not naturally yours, was nevertheless freely offered you as a gift, and you had only to accept it, in order, when Christ should appear, to appear with him in glory.

DO AS YOU WERE DONE BY.

Your heart glows as you recall these things. Did you ever think—Suppose I had not received that paper! Suppose those books and tracts had not been so freely bestowed! Somebody paid for them for you! Can you ever repay the debt? Can you better try to cancel it than in doing what you can to reach others in the same way? It is recorded in the gospel of a woman anciently, that she did what she could? Could we ask a fairer inscription to be written against our names in the Lamb's Book of Life? Let us do what we can. If it be but a little; let us do that little. If we have been blessed abundantly, let us not think, altogether at least, of larger barns, and added farms and stores and stocks or bonds, but of the demands of the gospel. And let what we do be done quickly, for the time is short!

I well remember receiving a letter from a young man in St. Johns, Mich., within the current year. He had heard a little of the Advent faith; was partially, at least, convicted; and wanted to know more. He was studying for the ministry—his language carried, to us, conviction of his candor. What should we do? We felt that certain works should at once be placed in his hands. Their price was over a dollar. Can we afford it? (Oh! what a question, to be compelled to ask, in an office devoted to publishing such all-important truths!)

A HAPPY RESULT.

But the books went. And the paper also. That young man is now proclaiming the near approach of the Life-Giver, and suffering persecution for the truth's sake, exerting a healthful influence on the side of Bible Christianity. He has given up fairer prospects, as the world goes, than he can hope to see again, and consecrated all to this work. And he asks (not directly; but by engaging in this mission) that he may be able to give to others as he travels, the same works which revealed the glories of God's word so fully to him. Is the claim an unreasonable one? Will you help him?

But he is only one minister. Said another, at a late Camp-meeting, "Can't you send me some tracts? I cannot possibly fill all the calls I have to preach these things; and what shall I do without tracts?" We sent a few! How beggarly the package looked as it started for North Eastern Michigan. It required great faith to believe that so little seed could ever produce much of a harvest. But we believe that those who bear "precious seed"—thank God, it does not read much—and water it with tears, shall doubtless come again with sheaves. We will do with a little, when only a little can be had. But is it not time that the seed was scattered in the vast Interior with a more liberal hand?

IF ALL WOULD DO THEIR DUTY.

A dime is a trifle—a half dime less. Yet a half dime a week laid by by each subscriber to THE ADVENT TIMES would amount to over TWO hundred dollars a week. An average of one dollar a year from each one would make over FOUR thousand dollars a year. And right here we fail. The man who can give ten cents wishes to wait till he can give a dollar; and he never gives anything.

He who could give a dollar easily, wants to give ten, waits, and waits, and waits, and the time never comes when he can spare it; and he gives nothing.

So the man who could give ten, waits to give a hundred, and never gets to it; and so only about one in fifty, perhaps, gives anything for this cause. And a few give, give, give, and get almost discouraged, waiting for a general response.

Shall we not reform, now—this fall of 1871? Shall we not in the next three months, every one give something?

OUR NECESSITIES.

What are our necessities? First we wish to pay off the debts we owe certain brethren and sisters, who have loaned us money in our times of need. "Can't they afford to give it?" you might ask. But we answer, you have no right to ask such a question unless you have first done your duty: and second, some of these parties depend upon the interest we pay them—it is essential that they have it. And as the Association has now reached a point where in all human probability it will never again need to borrow money to meet exigencies, why not every one put a shoulder under this burden, and lift it off from our publishing cause, and stop the payment of ten per cent. interest annually upon about one thousand dollars. It can be done easily, if we all, like the Jews anciently, "have a mind to work." But they were thoroughly in earnest! If you lay this paper down, and put off action till to-morrow, very likely you will never think of the subject again. Therefore now, while your mind is on the subject, make your resolution, determine what you will do, at least, and when the time comes, do not fail to act. This is important business, and should not be neglected.

We may add, here, that the debt spoken of above, is on our office building and engine. It is not money that has been 'sunk,' but we have a value to show for it to-day.

A MISTAKEN FEELING.

I find that some feel about after this sort. When an appeal is made, they are moved to give; and they say, almost or quite unconsciously, "There; now that is done with." And if afterward they find the same cause still needy, they feel—"Why I lifted there once. I didn't suppose that would need any more help." As if a seed could grow that had received one shower. As if God should ask us to put up with one day of sunshine in a year. As if he should give each generation only one harvest. No, no. He gives, gives, continually, and upon every hand. When on earth his Son was constantly denying himself that he might do good to others. Would we not be like—as much like as possible—our Redeemer and our Father in heaven?

Do not misunderstand. We do not mean that you should give all that you give for the publishing interest. By no means. You have local interests, and the ministry, and the poor of your vicinity, and your own families and friends. The cause of truth is not greedy; it only claims that it has a right with the rest of these; and that a share of your generous bounty should be given to it, as well as to them. Is the claim unreasonable? We think not. We would not urge the claims of this cause at all, but from the strongest convictions.

HOW TO HELP.

There are many ways to help the Publishing Association.

1. You can give outright, according to your ability.

2. You can pay for the paper to be sent to friends.

3. You can make a practice of buying books and tracts not only to read yourself, but to give away or loan to others.

4. We call attention especially to the cheap edition of Whitmore's excellent work, of which (to say the least) 5,000 should be scattered before Jan. 1, 1872.

5. You can use reasonable efforts, accord to the advantages of your situation, to ext the circulation of the weekly paper. A perm nent subscriber is a most desirable present, and is highly appreciated.

6. If you can do nothing else, give us your prayers, and your sympathy. But remember your prayers will not weigh anything until you have first done your duty. Remember the widow, who could not pray the Lord to give her a good wheat harvest, until she had first built the fence that her dying husband had left unfinished. She did all she could, and then betook herself to prayer. Remember the boy's reproof to his father, who prayed God to feed the poor. "Father," said he, "if I had your wheat, I would answer that prayer myself."

BRING IN THE TITHES.

I have no doubt whatever, if the Adventists of the so-called Western States, or in the field that we specially labor for and in, would come up as one man, and bring their tithes into the storehouse for the general cause, as well as local interests, that God would pour out upon us a spirit of revival and refreshing, and give us a power with the Lord and man such as we have never yet wielded. Did he not bless us five years ago, when we responded so liberally to the necessities of the hour? If four thousand of us should, as one man, send in our offerings, in many cases no doubt demanding self-denial and sacrifice, backed by a strong crying to God, to not only accept the gift, but to pour out his Spirit, and convict the people of the truth of our message; accompanied with a new consecration of soul, body and spirit to his service; with fresh petitions for the continual presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit—can we doubt what the result would be? No, not for a moment. The windows of heaven would be opened, and we should receive more than we had room to contain.

ADD FORCE TO PREACHING.

It is useless for us to preach, unless our practice corresponds to our preaching. If we believe what we profess as our faith, our life and action must correspond with it, or our message will have no weight. When the world feel that we are in earnest, and see us acting consistently, they will begin to hear us more fully, more patiently and more candidly.

As to the usefulness and fruitfulness of our work, we have only to appeal to the "Letters and Extracts" published in THE TIMES for abundant proof and reasons why our work should be enlarged. We could fill this sheet with extracts testifying to the happy results that have sprung up from our labors, or, rather, from the perusal of our publications. Not only have individuals been converted, but whole families have been led to God. Churches have been organized, chapels built, and flourishing local causes have sprung from seed sown by our tracts and paper; and in other cases these have watered and fostered interests planted by the preaching of the word by faithful men.

A NEW AND IMMENSE FIELD.

There is a great field opening in Missouri and Arkansas. We have received many letters from ministers in other denominations, in that section, in search of light for themselves and their people. That the ground is fully prepared for the seed is the universal testimony. Will we sow with a liberal hand? If we will, we shall by and by reap bountifully.

We also need new tracts—they should be published continually. Many valuable works by our own authors, and writers of great ability in England, should be placed before the public. We must agitate these questions. The flood tide of popular prejudices sets strongly against us. "It takes live fish to swim against the current." It is much easier to float down than swim up this stream. But we are not only to battle the popular current ourselves, but induce others to do likewise. To this end we must stir up the public mind—agitate, agitate! We may well dread a calm of any great duration. We have known a dollar's worth of tracts judiciously distributed, to set a whole neighborhood astir. Bibles were brought out; the opposition raged, and the truth flourished. But when the advocates of true theology settle down on their lees, or content themselves with an occasional feeble protest against error, while at the same time they give more or less freely to sustain its advocates, the enemy triumphs—there is no growth of the cause; the truth does not spread.

To some the work looks so great, that the little they are able to give seems worse than useless. They could give a little. But what is twenty-five cents, or fifty, or a dollar, when hundreds of dollars are needed. What is one drop of water in a time of drouth? But a great many single drops put together make a plentiful shower to moisten the earth, and cause it to bring forth abundantly. Besides, when those who can do but little, do it, it encourages and incites others to act. The following anecdote, a true narrative, we believe, is in point here:

TWO BRICKS TO BEGIN WITH.

In a city in Western New York, renowned for its crowded churches on Sundays, there was one called by the way of eminence, the Brick Church. It was the first church built of brick in the city. Its congregation had increased so that the church could not well accommodate the crowd. It was old-fashioned, and behind the times.

At length it was resolved to build a new church. Meeting after meeting was held, but the prospects for a new church grew more and more discouraging, until the most hopeful grew disheartened, and were ready to give it up. One morning, after a discouraging meeting had been held, the pastor's door-bell rang very early. On opening the door, the servant found a small boy, who inquired for Dr. S——. The servant told him he had not come down, and demanded what he wanted. "I want to see Dr. S——," answered the boy. Presently Dr. S—— came to the door, and found a small boy, with a wheel-barrow three times as large as himself, holding two bricks, which he said he "had brought to build the new church with!"

The doctor put on his hat, and walked out into the street, saying to every man he met, "The church will be built; the first load of bricks is already on the ground." And it was built—a large church, a beautiful church. Who shall despise the day of small things?

IN SEARCH OF LIGHT.

Just here, as we were writing this article, we received our morning mail, and opening it, found two letters, which we present as specimens of a class that we receive almost daily. The first is as follows:

Dear Sir: One week last Sabbath I listened to two sermons—the first of the kind I ever heard, that is, Advent sermons. I also learned that of you I could obtain papers and tracts upon the subjects I heard presented. I am twenty-two years old, and have always heard a very different doctrine preached. But I am desirous to know more about it.

We are out of some of our very best tracts, and need money this very day to purchase paper for more, in order that we may answer properly such appeals as the above. Possibly some might say—"If they want tracts or papers, let them pay for them, as I do." But this is not sound policy. Jesus commanded us to fish for men—i. e., use skill in so presenting our message as to engage the attention, and fasten conviction. Now while some will pay for tracts, others will not do so until they first become interested in reading those presented to them. Many who read these lines will confess that they did not care enough about the doctrine when they first heard of it, to have paid even thirty-five cents for the paper for three months, who now would not do without it.

HOW SHALL WE ANSWER THEM?

Within the past year we have had some 500 applications from individuals for tracts and papers, beside the applications for larger quantities for distribution. And we have often felt that our responses were not as complete as they should have been: yet we have done the best we could. Shall we do more in this direction? It is for you to say.

The other letter referred to reads as follows:

I know I am behind on my paper; but I hope you will pardon me for the present year, and if no bad luck comes, I will pay up soon. I have been very hard run to support my family for some time, being an invalid from the United States army. I am, also, deaf, and able to hear but little preaching, and so get but little comfort in that direction, in hearing from others, though I myself am trying to preach as I can. But this makes the paper the more valuable to me. We have a great deal of opposition; and our opposers say our mouths must be stopped. There are only a few of us, and we need help."

This comes from Missouri, a vast field not only open, but all over it men are uttering the cry of the "man of Macedonia." What should be done? Shall we stop this brother's paper? Would it not be better to send him a lot of them with tracts for distribution; with a quantity of larger works to be sold, or perhaps given away if circumstances demanded? So we think. But there are many similar cases, scattered from Western New York and Pennsylvania to the Pacific.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

The South, also, is a field scarcely entered as yet. Only a little while since we had an application for one hundred copies of Whitmore for South Carolina. The application was not in the way of a general loose statement; but from a responsible party, who knew whereof he affirmed when he declared he could do a vast deal of good with them.

Again we say, is it not time we were in a position to meet such demands as these, promptly, freely, and liberally? Will not every one say "yes?" Let us, then, have not only your assent, but let your actions 'speak louder than words.' It is not a time for us to be considerate of our own interests, only; but a time for self-denial, for large-heartedness, for sacrifices in behalf of neglected truths. Money flows without stint for pleasure, or to gratify pride. It is a time when we should carry out the principle of Bp. Butler's maxim, "that if we give more of our time and of our attention to ourselves and to our own matters than is our just due, we are taking what is not ours, and are guilty of fraud."

WHO IS HE?

No one will be injured by carrying out our suggestions. We were struck a short time since with the homely way in which an exchange struck at the the notion that people are injured in their true interests by judicious liberality. It spoke thus:

FIVE DOLLARS REWARD, will be paid for the discovery of the person, whether in the church or out of it, who has been injured, either in his temporal or spiritual interests, by contributing too largely to the benevolent schemes of the church. Such person has been heard of in various neighborhoods, but no one yet has been able to identify him. Should he be found and duly reported, the Editor is authorized to pay the above reward to the discoverer by

A RESPONSIBLE SUBSCRIBER.

There are many who can give through a premium, or a fair, or festival, or lottery scheme, or something of this sort, that affords sensual gratification in one form or another; but as the Advance says, "There is no way of giving that can compare with that simple, straightforward, stewardly way of pulling out the pocket-book and paying down the clean cash for the Lord's work. Serving him through self-indulgence is not the thing for a Christian."

That is Bible doctrine; and its practice will surely bring the blessings promised in the word of God.

STILL THEY COME.

Another mail brings us more letters appealing for help. One is from Louisiana. The writer details how, after manifold trials and dangers, he at last succeeded in convincing the people that he was no politician, except as a royalist, a follower of King Jesus; and now the door is open for him to preach and teach the gospel of the kingdom, and he says:

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20: 25.

"I want some books and tracts to circulate in the principal towns and villages of this Parish. And some copies of THE TIMES, also, for distribution."

Another writes from Lapeer Co. Mich.:

"I have been lending Whitmore on Immortality, and some tracts; and the result is one more has endorsed the faith."

More tracts are called for. And from Henry Co. Iowa, comes this missive:

"Dear Brother: I picked up one of your little tracts, which I have read, and I think it one of the best things I ever read in my life, except the Bible. Please send me copies of your paper; and if I like it as well as that tract I picked up by the roadside, I shall want it to read regularly."

The fourth letter is from Indiana, and runs thus:

"We have a large extent of territory unoccupied by any religious denomination. It was formerly Methodist ground. The Campbellites tried to work upon it, but got into confusion, and failed. Cannot you send some person to occupy the ground? If not, can you furnish books and tracts? Any sent to me, I will take special care to have carefully circulated."

LET OUR READERS JUDGE

for themselves how such appeals move us as we look into an empty treasury, and upon equally empty tract shelves. There is a continual drain upon our resources to meet these and similar calls for help. Will you aid us in this great missionary enterprise? How few, when they send for "tracts for distribution," imagine that the same mail which brings their request, may bring a dozen similar appeals from North, South, East and West, and often from over the great waters!

THE ADVENT-CHRISTIAN TIMES.

The day is gone by when we can with any consistency be called upon to give an excuse for the publication of THE TIMES. Its usefulness and efficiency in building up the cause of Advent truth in the interior, in connection with the labors of a self-sacrificing ministry, cannot be questioned. It is indispensable to the field it occupies.

Many influences have operated against us for more than a year past. Some of them we need not mention; but we may speak of our printing press, which became so badly worn, that we could not do good work upon it. But within a few months a new press has been procured, which will guarantee as good printing as any paper of its class can display.

Moreover, this press has been obtained, AND IS NOW NEARLY PAID FOR, without burdening the general cause. A few brethren—less than ten—quietly and unostentatiously assumed the burden, except about one hundred dollars; and now they plead that if the few could give the press, certainty the many can keep it constantly at work. And their plea is eminently just.

We now have a well-printed paper, faithful to the cause it advocates, and, we may be pardoned for saying it, worthy of the cause it maintains. We offer it at two dollars a year, though it contains more fresh reading matter than many $2.50 and $3 journals.

FOR THREE MONTHS.

For the purpose of enabling every one to send THE TIMES to a friend, we offer it on trial, for three months, for THIRTY-FIVE CENTS. Many have already taken advantage of this offer, with such results as encourages us to continue it.

YOUR OWN SUBSCRIPTION.

On the label which contains your name, which you will find on the wrapper of this sheet, you will see a date. It is the date TO which you are paid. For instance:

1 Jan. 72 means that you are paid to January 1, 1872.

1 Jun. 71 means that you are paid to June 1, 1871.

20 Dec. 70 means that you are paid to Dec. 20, 1870, and are consequently considerably in arrears.

The letter 'f,' or figures '330,' or simply the name, with no additional characters of any kind, mean that no charge is made for the paper. It is but just, however, to state, that some of our nominally free subscribers are among the best paying ones on our list.

Now we wish to hear from every subecriber, who is not paid in advance, before the first of January. Whether you can pay for your paper or not, please write us a letter, and tell us your circumstances, and your feelings in regard to THE TIMES and the cause. If you have nothing else to give, you can give us words of sympathy and encouragement in our work. It will cost you only a little time and a stamp. And may this be a continual reminder to you of our reasonable request, until you shall grant it.

Please, also, continue your efforts to increase our circulation. Lend your own paper, or send it to those who will read, and after a while suggest to them the propriety of themselves becoming subscribers. Patience and persistence will give success in time. In any event, be faithful in sowing the seed.

SOME FIND FAULT

because we do not stop every paper as soon as the subscription expires. We have experimented in this direction, and are satisfied, as is the whole Board of officers, that in consideration of the object for which the paper is published, that it is better to make some bad debts, than to insist upon a rule that would sometimes deprive many who really love the truth of their paper for months at a time. If the only aim of the Association were to publish a paying journal, the case might be different. Its object is to disseminate as widely as possible the sentiments we cherish. It is better that we suffer occasional imposition, than that any opportunity of watering the seed of truth should be neglected.

But we have little patience with those who after taking their paper from the office for long months, refuse to pay for it, on the ground that they did not want it. If they did not want it, they need not have taken it out of the office." They could have refused it—have said to the Post Master, "I shall not pay postage on this journal or take it out of your office." Then it would have become his duty to have notified us, without expense to you. But after taking a paper from the office, and paying the postage, and having the benefit of it in your own family—then to refuse to pay on the ground that you had not ordered it, is—no credit to the person who does it.

GIVING.—A covetous merchant of Boston once said to a friend, "I would give half my fortune if I could feel a pleasure in aiding charitable objects." It is a sad state for any Christian, who by miserly habits has ceased to find joy in gifts for Christ.

OUR NEW PRESS

Is all we could have wished or desired for the money it cost, and promises to be an effective servant. We trust our friends will remember that the cause has not been burdened at all to procure this beautiful and costly piece of machinery; and that, in one sense, its generous givers have laid us under obligations to second their enterprise and benevolence in the cause of truth. If twelve or fifteen brethren and sisters can give a press, surely four thousand can keep it constantly at work! Can we not? Will we?

NEW TRACTS!! NEW TRACTS!!

We have the manuscripts and copy of a number of new tracts—On Mat. 24; on the Restitution; the Second Advent; the Resurrection; and other topics—all waiting for you to act. It is for you to say whether they shall be published.

A WORD IN CONCLUSION.

We have no apology to offer for this earnest begging (if any choose to call it so) appeal. To beg for ourselves, we should, indeed, be ashamed. But to ask help for this best of causes, in one of the most needy of its departments—why, if we did not do it, we should feel that we were not doing our duty. We feel sure that many would have given before if they had realized the necessities of the case, and our real wants; and they will thank us for calling their attention to the same.

TO THOSE WHO HAVE GIVEN.

As this will come into the hands of some who have of late sent in their free donations in this cause, we wish to explain; that the call is sent to every subscriber, and that we could not omit sending to you without some trouble; and we felt, also, that you would be interested to know what we are doing to second your generosity. Let none, then, feel that we are pressing them too strongly; for we ask no one to exceed this standard in giving: "AS THE LORD HAS PROSPERED YOU." Nor do we ask any to bestow all their donations to the cause in the Western field. We only ask for a share in your bounty, and that each one shall do something. Is this unreasonable?

WAYS TO HELP.

Remember the various ways to help. Taking the paper yourself—Sending it to others—Buying books and tracts—Donations of from ten cents up into the thousands—and above all, and in all, your prayers and Christian sympathy.

Something more must be done to meet the increasing demand for light upon the doctrine we profess to love. May God help us as the soul of one consecrated man to rise to the level of our responsibilities, and accomplish the work whereunto we are called, in a manner that shall be honorable to ourselves, and acceptable in the sight of God.

TO BEG I AM ASHAMED.—Well, you should not be if it is for the Lord. The meanest, most unchristian kind of begging, is to beg to be excused.

A PAUPER FOR ETERNITY.—"How much did he leave," inquired a gentleman, on learning the death of a wealthy citizen. "Everything," responded the man; "he took nothing with him."

PRAYER WITHOUT WORKS IS DEAD.—A Boston paper mentions an individual there who clasps his hands so fervently in prayer that he can't get them open when the contribution box is passed around. Are there no such Christians elsewhere?

PICTORIAL IMMATERIALISM.

The Independent quotes Hos. 12: 10—"I have used similitudes"—as an excuse for a tolerably executed, but horribly designed picture showing the way to heaven, and illustrating the ministry of angels. If we mistake not, many an immaterialist will say—"If this shows our hope, give us something else."

In the foreground is a man climbing up a steep rock with a heavy burden upon his back, assisted by what is meant for an angel. It looks like a young woman of about eighteen, with long, feathered wings, one attached where a breast-pin is usually worn, the other between the shoulders. The sentiment is laudable, but the conception of the angel is execrable. It is said that man is "a little lower than the angels." In this case he looks the superior of the angel.

On the left is seen the arms, head and shoulders of a man struggling in the water, while another feather-winged woman (angel) is hastening to his assistance. Still further on are two more angels, with the inevitable wings, and dressed in short frocks, armed with sword and spear, keeping a lion and serpent off from "the Highway of Holiness," which is a high ridge, running through the center of the picture. On the right foreground is a man with a cross on his shoulder, and a winged, short-frocked angel is pointing him to "the highway," upon which a number of persons (aptly, the artist places only a few there) are traveling towards its termination "the River of Death!" on the other side of which more winged creatures are seen around a gateway in a wall labelled "The New Jerusalem." Beyond this wall are seen a number of mansions, closely resembling "the round houses" of the railways; except that they are one and all disfigured by curious spikes resembling steeples, the whole being capped with a reference to Rev. 22: 2! and an announcement that here is "fullness of joy, forever with the Lord." Could Scripture be more completely perverted. In Revelation the New Jerusalem is placed in the new earth and beyond the resurrection: here it is put in heaven, and is entered through death!

Finally, in the right center, we have the likeness of Lazarus' transportation to Abraham's bosom. He is supported by three angels—one flying backwards, with its wings in an impossible attitude for such flight; another supporting the beggar's feet, has both his wings on one shoulder; while the third has one wing open and the other folded—probably that is the way angels fly sideways. The puzzle is, that the angels have taken Lazarus this side of the River of Death. We supposed the angels' work began on the other side of that stream.

We think none of the children where the Independent circulates will ever again sing—

> "I want to be an angel
> And with the angels stand."

They would certainly object to ever feathering out with such wings as are here pictured.

The most appropriate feature of the picture is the thick clouds which cover most of it—fit symbol of the dense fogs of Immaterialism.

Finally, while we are firm believers in the ministry of angels, and can appreciate the sentiment of the artist, we must enter a vigorous protest against such caricatures of heavenly beings and Bible doctrine as this.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF GIVING.

We were last week reading in an exchange some remarks upon the above fertile subject, in which special mention was made of the blessings lost by those who bestow the bulk of their charities in post mortem gifts. There are some cases—but few however—where bequests are the only proper mode of disposing of certain properties. For instance, we have known of individuals having no families of their own, who desired to give their homes, at their death, to some Benevolent or Religious Society. But such cases are the exception and not the rule. Generally, those who bestow bequests do it out of the means they have over and above the amount they choose to assign to their families and friends. Now it is true that in these cases, as the Watchman, says the giver loses a great blessing; but there is often another loss; we mean to the legatees. And we were reminded of this within a few days when the executors of a brother's estate, who had left one thousand dollars to aid us in the publishing work, wrote to say that litigation, including lawyer's fees and costs of various suits by persons who desired to break the will, had eaten up all the funds out of which the legacy was to have been paid, and that the cash value of the bequest was, therefore, precisely nothing! Besides this, we suffered from the impertinencies and sordid meanness of parties, who, while the bequest was supposed to be of some value, sought to wrest it from us upon a mere verbal quibble.

How much better, then, it would have been for the brother to have become his own executor: then his will would have been carried out in every particular, and the cause received a large benefit. We are not railing against testamentary legacies: but we submit the matter to thoughtful givers; whether it is not best to become your own executors of all your benevolent and religious bequests.

Hades.

As I am one who believes that human souls do not "survive, really and consciously, from the hour of death to the hour of resurrection," and as Mr. Maude, in his review of Mr. Govett in your Rainbow for August has in my opinion, misrepresented the view I hold in common with others of your readers, I will, with your leave, make a few observations.

Mr. Maude characterizes the view I hold as degrading man from his true dignity, making him "a true brother of the ape and the mollusk" (378). I am wholly ignorant how my view is thus with justice characterized. I do not see how the Scriptural truth that God formed both man and beast originally out of the very same material,—earth—makes man the true brother of the beast. God, out of the same material, formed two creatures, one incomparably higher than the other; just as the potter out of the same clay forms one vessel to honor and another to dishonor. It is not to the rude material, but to the workmanship of the rude material that we look to estimate the value of the work. Man was made to know God; through that knowledge to live for ever, to exercise his reason upon themes of which the brutes know nothing, to rule as a god over this lower world. Surely the fact that he who was made in this grandeur, was made out of the same material as the beast subject to death, does not detract from the value of the work, while it enhances the skill of the worker.

And here let me say a few words on what appears the very unscriptural view which Mr. Maude puts forward with respect to those souls whom he supposes to live in Hades. It only illustrates the extreme danger of the views, he, in common with most others, holds on the intermediate state. If men really survive death in the shape of unsubstantial ghosts, every one feels they must be doing something. Judgment and retribution are accordingly generally supposed to go on in this hades state, before that time of resurrection which God has fixed on for these processes. Mr. Maude in his view of what goes on in hades, seems to unite the Roman error of a purgatory, with something very like "Origen's Universal Restoration." He supposes the people of God will in hades receive a "development of the divine life," while among the unsaved an evangelistic work" will be carried on, "compared with which the results of modern missions may appear small indeed."

I must enter my solemn protest against views of this kind, for which I deny that there is any foundation in Scripture, and which really would make that missionary work which our Lord commanded to be carried on in this life appear utterly or positively injurious. "Now" is God's "accepted time: now is the day of salvation," not in Mr. Maude's ghost-world! But views such as Mr. Maude's will, and must ever, be appearing, so long as sober Christians believe in a ghost-world of hades, such as Virgil sang, and Lucian ridiculed.

And now let me say a few words to those who have accepted the view of the final destruction of the wicked, and who yet believe that, in the first death men do not really and truly die. They appear to me to afford a weapon to our Augustinian opponents, which I only wonder that they have been slow to use. If, when God said to Adam, "In the day thou eatest thou shalt die," the death thus brought on man was consistent with man's survival in a true though altered condition; why may not the same principle of interpretation be applied to the death which Paul tells us is the wages of sin in hell? If death and destruction are now consistent with survival, why may they not be so hereafter? If we would succeed in our effort to overthrow the error of endless evil, we must be consistent in our interpretation of God's word. Death and destruction must mean the same throughout it. It is the addition of the adjective "everlasting" to the death in hell which must make the essential difference between the first and the second death.

The subject of the intermediate state has occupied much of my thoughts of late. Whoever has taken the trouble to read what I have written upon it in successive numbers of the Rainbow will perceive inconsistencies in my statements. This is because my views have been gradually altering as I saw more light. I now believe that I see what Scripture teaches on this great subject, and am ready, with the permission of the Editor, to lay my views before the readers of the Rainbow.—Henry Constable.

Immortality—Originated and Unoriginated.

A BRIEF CORRESPONDENCE.

J. H. Whitmore, Dear Sir:—In studying the Adventist theory I come to points that are mystifying, and in order to believe I have to see my way clear. I am somewhat skeptical. I would like to have you answer a few questions for my benefit.

1. Are the angels immortal? or were they created immortal? 2. Can immortality be destroyed? 3. Were the fallen angels immortal? If so how can they be destroyed root and branch at the last day?

Please answer, and oblige truly yours, C. W. Terry.

East Randolph, N. Y. Aug. 24, 1871.

REPLY.

Dear Sir: Yours of recent date has been received. I will answer briefly and in the order asked.

1. "Are the angels immortal? or were they created immortal?"

Ans. We have little positive information concerning the nature of angels, but since the Bible declares that the King of kings and Lord of lords only hath immortality (1 Tim 6: 15, 16), we are not at liberty to suppose that angels are immortal as God is immortal; that is, we are not at liberty to suppose that they have unoriginated and independent immortality. Speaking for myself alone, I believe that neither angels nor good men will ever have independent immortality or life in themselves, but that they will ever be dependent on the great Fountain of life. In John 5: 25, it is said that the Father has life in himself and that he has given to the Son to have life in himself. I suppose both Father and Son to be infinitely above the rank and nature of angels, none of whom are ever said to have life in themselves. In the 20th of Luke, it is said that they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are children of the resurrection."

Angels are now, and good men will hereafter be free from the seeds of death and decay. In other words they will be immortal, but not independently or defiantly so, for it will ever remain true, that he who created, can destroy. Angels cannot destroy themselves, but God can destroy them.

2. In answering your first question I see I have answered all three; but briefly I reply to question No. 2. "Can Immortality be destroyed." Ans. No. That is, immortality unqualified and independent, is indestructible; but dependent immortality can be destroyed or withdrawn by him who created and gave it. "With God all things are possible." Many, like the ancient Sadducees, "err not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God."

3. "Were the fallen angels immortal? If so how can they be destroyed root and branch at the last day?" Ans. They are immortal and indestructible as against all power but that of God. He can and will destroy them as he has threatened.

You say that in studying the Adventist theory you come to points that are mystifying, &c. Let me advise you to henceforth study Adventist theories less and Bible theories more. Adventist, or Methodist or Baptist theories unsupported by the Scriptures are alike baseless and worthless. Let us go to the Fountain of Light to guide us both in theory and practice. Compare Adventist theories with the Bible itself, and if they agree with the great and final standard of truth, accept them at once; otherwise as promptly reject them.

With Christian regards, very truly yours, J. H. Whitmore.

East Shelby N. Y. Sept. 12, 1871.

How Was he Baptized?

The Christian Observer thus defines baptizo:

"It means, 'to assault; to let fall; to weigh down; to pierce; to hurl down; to surround; to press down; to rise above; to dip; to submerge; to thrust, to blow; to strike; to proceed; to sink; to immerge; to imbathe; to plunge; to lower down; to immerse; to come on; to overturn; to ball up; to flood; to whelm; to pour; to souse; to bring down; to depress; to steep; to drench and to duck,"

In the light of the above definition, we would like to ask of the editor or writer of the above in what way he was baptized. Was he assaulted, let fall, weighed down, surrounded, pressed down, risen above (spare the English), dipped (we poor Baptists come in here), submerged, thrust, blown, struck, proceeded (!) sunk, immerged, imbathed, plunged lower down (not our fault), immersed, come on (don't feel offended), overturned, bailed up, flooded, overwhelmed, poured, soused, brought down, depressed, steeped, drenched, or ducked! And we wish further to inquire whether any one of the above methods is equally good; and if so, how he found it out! We suggest that the writer of the above, ought to be baptised in several of the ways above specified, because of having written such a marvelous, not to say ridiculous, definition of a sacred word. He ought to be "assaulted" by conscience, "let fall" from the list of accurate definers, "weighed down" with a sense of regret, "pierced" with the sting of remorse, "hurled down" from the lofty position of critic, and so on to the end of the chapter.—West. Recorder.

READY—"IMMORTALITY."

The seventh thousand of Whitmore's Doctrine of Immortality will be ready for delivery in a few days. Those who pledged for the first cheap edition, and failed to redeem their pledges, will please do so now. And let all pledges be redeemed AT ONCE, that we may pay our bills for the books, and they be put in useful circulation.

Remember the terms: Four copies, post paid for $1. Five copies for $1, if sent by express. Thirty copies for $5. 100 copies for $16. Don't fail to send in orders soon.

What a world of gossip would be prevented if it was only remembered that a person who tells you of the faults of others intends to tell others of your faults.

WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

Comes a sweet, glad strain,—
"Awake!" it says, "ye sleepers,
Your Lord will come again."

Wild are the eager questionings,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"
Heavy the weary footsteps,
Hush'd is the thankful song.

"He is coming quickly, surely,
'One day as a thousand years;'
He is coming to heal the sickness,
To dry the falling tears.

Where sin and pain hold revel,
Where Satan's will has sway,
He is coming, the King of Glory,
To turn our night to day."

Nay, rouse ye, drooping Christians,
Look up! your Lord is here,
Smiling upon you tenderly,
Speaking words of cheer.

Say not, "Where is the promise
On which our hopes were set?"
Say not, "He hath forgotten"—
He never can forget.

Only the night's dark vapors
Hide him from our view;
Soon will the rising sunbeams
Prove his promise true.

For the dawn is surely breaking,
The night is almost gone;
Over the eastern hill-tops
We watch our rising Sun.

And while we watch we labor;
In patience strive to win
Some trophy of abounding grace,
Some precious souls for him.

Can We be Saved from Sin?

(Concluded.)

4. The Spirit and its associate gifts were bestowed upon the church for this very object. "He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lay in wait to deceive." Again. "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he would grant you according to the riches of his glory to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend, with all saints, what is the breadth and and length and depth and hight, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." The attainability of this blessing is evident, also, from the prayers of inspired men. "Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always laboring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect in all the will of God."

Some of old did obtain the blessing. Paul says of himself "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God." "Ye are our witnesses, and God, also, how holily, and justly and unblameably, we behaved ourselves among you that believe."

John, the loving disciple, was evidently an example of Christian perfection.

Speaking from experience no doubt, he declared, "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, so are we in this world." "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear."

I would also remark that this higher life relates rather to the essential elements of piety, than to their results; to faith and love, rather than to joy and peace, though the latter ordinarily accompany it. One may possess perfect faith and love God and his neighbor perfectly, whose joy and peace, owing to physical causes, will at times be quite inconsiderable and unsatisfactory.

This higher life implies, also, loving our neighbor as ourselves, which is the second great commandment, that is regarding and treating all men with equity, charity, benevolence and affection, or doing to them as we would that they should do unto us. It excludes envy; for this regrets another's talents, popularity and success. Covetousness: for this desires the possession of that which does not belong to us. Jealousy: this is a fear that another will obtain some good which we desire for ourselves. Emulation: this would hinder the progress of others to secure us the profit or honor of exceeding them. Wrath: this is an evil and turbulent passion, which leads to broils and contentions. It also excludes every other passion which tends to wrong action. It excludes all misrepresentation of another's views, plans or feelings: all tale-bearing, tattling and slanderous insinuations; every kind and degree of reference to others which shall detract from their influence; all expressions, actions and surmises that we would dislike to have arrayed against ourselves.

This blessing implies rigid obedience to all the divine commands, so far as they are known. "He that committeth sin [knowingly] is of the devil;" and "whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." The language of his heart is (in matters of duty), "Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth!" And he goes straight forward in it, whatever the difficulties or the cost.

Finally it is a state of conscious union with God. Free from guilt, free from the power of sin; for sin no longer has dominion over him. Free from the love of sin. Being cleansed from the filthiness of the flesh and spirit, he is free from all inward impulses thereto, though not free from the temptations of the devil. He walks in the light, rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, having his heart, thoughts and conversation, as it were, in heaven, and feeling the glorious presence of an all-surrounding Deity; and this not for a day, or a week, then to vanish, and doubts and fears take their place; but for years, even, of diversified life, embracing the most embarrassing duties and the most painful sufferings.

How shall we obtain this blessing? The answer is short. By a complete consecration. After we have had all our sins forgiven, and the Spirit of God bearing witness of the fact in our hearts, then we are in a condition to give up all into the hand of God, until the last thing we have, and ourselves with the rest, is given up to God. we are then required to exercise faith in him, that through the merits of Christ he will receive the offering, and cleanse our hearts, so that nothing unlike Christ can possibly remain, from the fact there is no place for them. God will give the witness of this blessing when the work is done. It is then we are in a condition to grow in grace, and become strong in Christ. THOS. G. BAXTER.

A Visit to Iowa.

I have just returned safely home from a long and very pleasant trip made to attend the North Missouri and Southern Iowa Advent Christian Conference and Campmeeting. My first halt on the journey was at Atlantic, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, where I was greeted by Brn. Morphy and Berry at the depot, and very kindly cared for at the home of Mr. Keyes whose intelligent wife has long been deeply interested in the Advent faith. Atlantic is a fine thriving new town which has sprung up on the line of this great thoroughfare to the Pacific. From this point I went by team the remainder of the way. At Lewis, some ten miles from here, I enjoyed for the night the kind hospitalities of Br. Macomber, whose home for the pilgrim you, Br. Himes, have shared before me, and know well how to appreciate. It was now my good fortune to have their company with a party of others all the way to the meeting.

Nothing could exceed the pleasure I felt in this delightful ride of some fifty miles over the rich prairie lands, from Atlantic to Villisca, where we crossed the Burlington and Missouri Railway. I must say I was perfectly charmed with the beauty and fertility of this wonderful country. I have seen nothing upon this green earth more inviting to the husbandman than these rolling prairies of Cass, Montgomery, and Page Counties, and the rich bottom lands of the Nodaway streams, as they fall away to mingle in the waters of the Missouri.

When inquired of how I "liked the the country," I had but this answer: "The sun shines on no better; and he who looks for one here, must look in vain." There is one 'better' than this, and that is the "heavenly." I labored to convince them of this, and persuade them to seek it. Beautiful and healthful and sunny, as was all around above and beneath, still the plague spot of the curse was upon it. Rich fields of the growing grain, had been destroyed by the descending hail; dwellings demolished in the fury of the bursting storm; disease here and there preyed upon its victims; grey hairs as elsewhere were silvering the temples of strong men; age had stolen upon others, and they tottered upon the staff; green fields had been fenced out for grave yards, and already here and there was to be seen the marble slab, with its simple inscription pointing to the sleeper resting beneath it. And upon all this fair heritage I saw was entailed the woes of this "vale of tears."

But not so in the heavenly country. Nothing of all this will be there. And it was good to meet with so many dear ones, whose hearts were set upon this "better country," and journeying in faith towards it. Never in so short a time did I become more attached to any people, than I did to these followers of Jesus and his word. Intelligent, earnestly religious, ready to do and to suffer, the cause is prospering in this section. Harmonious and united, the sweetest spirit pervaded all our meetings. The weather was favorable, the attendance good, and the people attentive to hear. The seed sown during the meeting. will, I believe, yield a rich harvest. Some sought and found Christ during the meeting; eight were baptised, and believers were built up in the faith and hope of the Scriptures.

To me it was a great pleasure to meet and become personally acquainted with these dear friends of our cause, and especially the members of this Conference. I found among them efficient ministers of Christ; able expounders of the Scriptures; self-sacrificing men who are doing in this region a noble work for Christ. Some are young in age and experience, the Lord is leading out into broader fields, and I trust they will move on as he opens the way before them. They have gifts that promise much to the church and cause we love. The Lord has called them into his vineyard, and you dear brethren of the laity, see that they are sustained both by your prayers, and your purse. This is God's order. And he who fills the place assigned him, however low, shall receive from the lips of the Master when he comes—"Well done good and faithful servant."

During the meeting I preached thirteen discourses, and had the pleasure of listening to a number from others, our prayer and conference meetings were precious seasons. Sunday, the closing day was a time of great interest. Some forty witnessed for Christ in our love feast in the morning. At ten o'clock in the evening we gathered around the Lord's table, and commemorated his sufferings and death, and testified to our faith in his coming again.

Then came the final separation, the parting hand, and the falling tear, and we turned our feet toward home. Oh! how sad would such a parting be were it not for the blessed assurance that we shall meet again. Yes meet, if not before, when Jesus comes. Meet where there will be no more weeping, and all pain is o'er; where there are sunny skies, and fadeless beauty. Meet, to find our treasures, jewels lost long, long ago; and meet never to part again.

"Over there all are immortal;
Over there is no more night;
And the city's pearly portal
Is now almost in sight."

Turned Out.

Brethren: I have not time now, nor space here, to give you all the holy and grand thoughts with which my mind is carried away. The object of this letter is to inform you of my trial. You may remember a good while ago, I wrote you that I had become a criminal, or a heretic, in the estimation of the Separate Baptists, with whom I was identified. Yesterday I had my trial, and the result is I am an outcast now. Sickness prevented me from being present at the last two Annual Meetings, and last year they altered the Constitution of the Association, concerning the exclusion of churches becoming unscriptural. The clause is: "If in the opinion of the Association, any church becomes unscriptural, then (the Association) may discontinue fellowship with said church." They added the words, "or minister," making it read, "any church or minister." Thus you see they thought to cast me out, and retain the church.

I cannot now give you a full detail of the proceedings of that Association in my case from first to last, but I anticipate doing so in pamphlet form; and, also, writing an address to the members of this Association, if thought expedient. But, suffice it to say, they violated the Constitution of the S. B. A. because it says "the Association shall not have any ecclesiastical power over the churches." But they have cast me out, independent of the church I belong to. How they will reconcile that church, I cannot tell; for the church finds no fault in me.

When my case was called up, they seemed to be very timid and fearful; were afraid to let me speak in defense. They ordered me to recant. I told them I would, if they would convince me that I was in error. The minister that baptised me arose, and said my doctrine was "a damnable heresy." They then asked me if I would keep silent on my "soul-sleeping" doctrine. I told them I would not, but would preach it with all my power till my death, unless I should be convinced it was heresy.

The next action was this: "On motion and second, voted, that we withdraw our fellowship from N. C. Miller." I then asked them to sing a hymn, and let me bid them all farewell till Jesus comes. They were loth to do it. Eld. Blythe said he could bid me farewell as a man but could not countenance me as a Christian, or bid me God-speed. So said others. They finally sung, "Come thou fount," etc. Some of them were very much affected and tears flowed freely. Blythe then led in prayer. He prayed that I might be led to repentance before it would be too late; that the Spirit of God might strive with, and convince me of my error, in order that I might be saved from such a damnable heresy here, and, finally, from eternal torment, with other suchlike Christian and charitable(?) expressions. You may know what faith I had in that prayer, and how much good it did me.

Twenty minutes after this I was on my horse. Brethren: I imagined myself in the presence of the inquisition, the next thing (had they power) to be led to the stake. Oh! what this blind superstition can do when so deeply seated in the heart of man. I have realized the first step to martyrdom. Soon, my name will be enrolled among those of the despised followers of Prince Emmanuel, to help bear the reproaches that the blind churches are casting upon you. O ye despised Adventists! Have you any word of comfort for me? Will you receive a church criminal into your ranks? or must I wander up and down this sin-cursed earth, alone, with tearful eyes, till Jesus comes to reconcile all things to himself?

To that time I am now looking with such earnestness as I cannot describe. My heart beats quick as the thought comes interrogatively into my mind, Will I see the gray-haired fathers there who have cast me out from my home? Oh! what solemn thoughts are these! I know I am a child of God and have the gospel. I can but think how they hung their heads night before last while I explained to them in a discourse of some two hours length the great lesson of instruction presented to the human family in Mat. 24: 3. At the close I imagined I could almost see the graves open, and Jesus coming down through the air.

But farewell, brethren, for this time.

N. C. MILLER.

Valparaiso, Sept. 10, 1871.

—We have no need to assure our brother of a hearty welcome among us, with his church also, if they choose to come with him. The cause in Missouri is looking up. Focal points of interest are being established. Let the laborers prove faithful, and we shall yet see glorious results in that State. ED.

Gravy.

I once in the Crisis office in Boston heard Br. Hiram Munger request an editor to solicit certain correspondents to put "more gravy" in their compositions, essays and letters. And, Mr. Editor, I think if you will allow the suggestion to be made in THE TIMES to all of the writers for your paper, that it may do good.

I love to read letters and reports of meetings; but when they contain just a catalogue of preachers and texts—I wish the writer had put in "more gravy" of incident and practical results.

I peruse with interest all the Conference Minutes; but when the clerk tells us who prayed, and who occupied the chair each session, and relates other matters of detail of no general interest whatever, I wish he would leave them out, and give us "more gravy."

I might enlarge: but enough. I hope all THE TIMES writers will take pains, especially when dealing with dry subjects, to give us plenty of "gravy." GAIUS.

The Austro-German Alliance and What May Come of it.

Once more what seems a war-cloud begins to darken the European horizon. When emperors and their ministers meet in solemn council, there is reason to apprehend coming danger. The emperors of Germany and of Austria have met at Gastein and at Salzburg; and although it is not known what was done and what was undone at the Conferences, it is visible on the face of things that an alliance of some kind has been concluded, and that for the furtherance of certain ends the two governments, that of Germany and that of Austria, have agreed to act together.

As to the immediate occasion of the conferences there are many rumors, and as to the probable result there is some alarm.

So far as we know the facts, the necessity for the meeting of the two emperors grew out of the Roumanian railway question. Some time ago the Roumanian government borrowed for railway purposes some ten millions of pounds sterling, for which government bonds were given in security. The bondholders were four-fifths Germans. Quite recently the Roumanian parliament thought fit to repudiate; and Prince Charles, who is a member of the great family of Hohenzolleren was compelled, under a most fearful threat, to sign the act of repudiation. The threat was that if he did not sign it, all the Germans in Roumania would be massacred. It was not conceivable that Prince Bismarck would be passive and indifferent in circumstances such as these. German subjects were being swindled, and a Prince of the Imperial family had been coerced and insulted. It was the less easy for Bismarck to be passive and indifferent that Russian intrigue was supposed to be at the bottom of the repudiation movement. It has long been known that Bismarck had made up his mind that the valley of the Danube should be German property. But what could Germany do alone? She could not march an army into the principalities; for to do so would be quite as much an insult to Austria as to Russia. Such an act, indeed, would have isolated Germany from the rest of Europe; for by the treaty of Paris of 1856 the principalities are placed under the protection of the great powers. The most proper course for Prussia to pursue was to appeal to the powers who signed the treaty of Paris and to ask them to meet in conference for the special settlement of the question. But conferences have become dangerous things; when they are not mere shams, they are almost certain to breed trouble. So Bismark sounds Beust; and the result is that Austria and Germany propose to settle this little affair in their own way, in their own interests and without regard to outside powers. In the valley of the Danube, Austria and Germany have a common interest. One result of the meetings of the emperors at Gastein and Salzburg is that Roumania has consented in some sense to pay, and Italy has been selected as the umpire. It is not unreasonable to presume that the original occasion of the trouble has been removed; but the alliance having been formed, fruits of a very different sort than the mere payment of the railway bonds must be looked for.

Rumor has it that the cabinets of St. Petersburg and of Berlin have been engaged for some time past in a species of diplomatic sparring. Prussia, it is said, has played Russia the trick which she played Austria in 1864 and France in 1866. On the occasion of the outbreak of the Franco-German war, Russia, it seems, was bought over to the side of Prussia by means of certain promises. As Prussia found it convenient to break pledges solemnly given in 1864 and 1866, so does she find it convenient to break pledges solemnly given in 1871. If the one-half of what is said be true, Russia has been hoodwinked and sold, and Prussia has fairly earned the title which was once given to CARTHAGE and which was latterly given to Great Britain. "Punica fides" and "perfidious Albion" are likely to be forgotten after "lying Prussia." We are not disposed to give credence to every idle rumor; but we cannot close our eyes to what seems fact, and the fact, as we see it, is in the fullest sense alarming. If an alliance has been entered into between Germany and Austria—and there is every reason to believe that an alliance has been concluded—it will be impossible for Russia, without some show of resistance, to submit to the insult. It will be all the more impossible that the alliance means nothing, if it does not mean that Roumania is in some way to be gobbled up by the two Powers, and that a mighty wall is to be raised, bristling with Austrian and German bayonets, cutting Russia off from the object of her historic ambition. Russia has during her whole history as one of the powers of Europe regarded it as her destiny to sit in pride on the Golden Horn, and to call the Black Sea and the Grecian Archipelago her own. Roumania occupied by Austrian and German troops, this dream is gone; Russia is shut out not only from the Mediterranean, but from the Baltic. What will Russia do? We know that Prince GORTSCHAKOFF and President Thiers have arranged to meet at an early day, and we can only regard this as a counterblow to the meetings of the emperors at Gastein and at Salzburg. For Russia, France is the only possible ally in the circumstances; and it is not to be denied that with Russia for an ally France will fight well, so well that we tremble for the result. A war between Germany and Austria on the one hand and Russia and France on the other would wrap Europe in flames and might prove most disastrous to the family of man. Whatever the result, whichever should win, such a war could scarcely fail to throw civilization back for at least a century.

A few days more and we shall know what the conferences have done. We shall know what is the nature of the alliance between Austria and Germany. A few days more and Russia will speak out, perhaps act, and the attitude and purpose of France will no longer be a secret. Would it be a wonder if Europe were in flames from the Baltic to the Mediterranean and from the Atlantic to the Bosphorus in less than a month, and that no fewer than four millions of men should be in the field. Let us pray that it may not be so. If the worst of our fears should become reality, let us rejoice that Great Britain and the United States are happily little likely to suffer from the conflict. Should it come to war, we have no idea that Russia, even with the aid of France, is a match for united Austria and Germany. But the destruction of life and property must be such that we cannot help praying that peaceful counsels may prevail.—Scottish American Journal.

Minutes of a Discussion.

SEVENTH SESSION—FENN'S FIRST SPEECH.

There was but one criticism of an argument of mine last evening, that should be noticed. Br. Burgess, undertook to cover up the sharp edge of the weapon I drew from Paul's charge to Timothy (2 Tim. 4), by trying to show a difference between a crown of life and a crown of righteousness. But should I allow his claim the point I made is not covered up. It was the time when men receive their crowns, that was under discussion rather than the nature of the crowns given. You will see now, who was 'adroit' in slipping over facts, and who 'needs the watching.'

Let us look at another passage that has been quoted (very unfortunately however), to sustain the negative of this question. I refer to 1 Thes. 5:23. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." I was surprised that my opponent should quote such a passage to prove the conscious existence of souls and spirits between death and resurrection. Do you not see, that upon his theory, that souls and spirits are conscious in death, man has two entities instead of one! He must have a soul-entity and a spirit-entity; for the prayer is for the preservation of all three.

The absurdity of such a theory is manifest without further comment. The sense of the text is simply this. The apostle is emphatically persuading the Thessalonians, that they are to be remembered entire at the coming of Christ. Not a particle of their being is to be forgotten; but all is to be preserved with care till the great day of Christ's coming.

Then every man will receive a reward according to his deeds. I wonder if we can find good old Hezekiah supporting the idea that the dead are better prepared to praise the Lord than the living! He was once informed that he must die; and this information filled his heart with sorrow. He wept bitterly, and prayed for the perpetuation of his life, God in answer to prayer "added to his days, fifteen years." Then he began to rejoice and praise the Lord, and said: "For the grave cannot praise thee: death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, he shall praise thee as I do this day." (Is. ch. 38.)

Ah! no! Hezekiah had not the modern theology so far as the condition in death is concerned. Still modern saints are quite as loath to die as he was; and will run a horse for a doctor, or some remedy, to allay the disease, and keep death away, and themselves out of heaven, though at the same time singing that it is the gate to glory or open door to paradise. Human nature was the same with him as with us: and he was opposed to death, knowing as we should, that it is an enemy. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (1 Cor. 15:26.)

This last text conveys a self-evident fact to the mind, that death is an enemy: and every law of our being conspires to assert its truthfulness. When a faithful Lazarus had fallen into this enemy's hand, Jesus wept, and the friends were in agony of heart at the sad event. Why did not Christ adopt the modern style of comforting the bereaved, and tell those sisters their brother was in glory, and it was wrong to weep for him? We hear no such inconsistent remarks from him. He comes to the resting place of the dead, with tearful eyes, and talks of the blessed assurance that the dead shall rise. And when that event occurred, the living saint should not die. (John 11:25, 26.)

The apostle Paul, enters the same field of hope and comfort, and says: "Sorrow not as those who have no hope.....For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord." How shall we ever be with the Lord? By being caught up with the resurrected dead, in the air. Not by being killed, and dissected, and a part sent to glory, and another part sent to hades, as the theory of my opponent would affirm.

When do men receive recompense for good deeds done here? Let the Savior answer: "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind: and thou shalt be blessed: for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." (Lk. 14:13, 14.) God proposes to reward men not ghosts; and has arranged to do this at the resurrection.

Burgess' first Speech.

I shall prove from positive testimony that the soul of man in a disembodied state is conscious. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" (Rev. 6:9, 10.) We see from this passage that souls not only exist after the death of the body, but that they are conscious. Here goes the gentleman's nonentity theory, to the four winds.

Fenn's second speech.

Br. Burgess has again (in his own mind) annihilated my theory. Let us carefully look at this so-called positive testimony, and see if it proves what he thinks it does. I notice that these souls were seen: hence they were not invisible, and are far from being the kind my opponent believes in. The souls he has faith in, are immaterial and invisible and intangible; which of course would forbid their being seen. Again he believes the souls of the good are happy. But these souls are in misery, and crying, "How long O Lord," &c. Again these souls are seen under the altar, in distress. You are aware that an altar is a place where sacrifices are slain, rather than a place where saints are glorified.

These souls had blood, which they desired to have avenged. There were given to them white robes. Could immaterial souls wear white robes?

The simple meaning of this passage is this: The Revelator has a view of the terrible slaughter, of God's saints, under the Papal persecution, during the dark ages, when the fifth seal was opened, the chronology of which was from the fifteenth to the eighteenth centuries. These souls, at the time this vision was presented to John, did not exist. They were only presented to his mind in vision, just as were the various other wonderful scenes recorded in this book, many of which never had a literal existence and never can have. A seven-headed and ten-horned monster is seen in vision: but never did and never will have a literal existence. The Emphatic Diaglott renders this passage as follows: "I saw under the altar the persons of those who had been killed;" &c. This is doubtless the correct idea. John saw the martyrs who lost their lives for the sake of Jesus, in this vision; and they were to remain in rest or quietude till all who were to be slain should be fulfilled.

So much for the "positive testimony" that so effectually annihilated my theory. I fear my opponent will have occasion to annihilate my theory several times before it will stay destroyed unless he has better success than in his past efforts guarantee. I think my audience are well able to see that the force of his 'overwhelming' arguments is very easily dissipated.

We have been referred to Phil. 1:21—"For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Br. Burgess seems to see something very consoling to his theory in this passage. Also, where the apostle says—"For me to live is Christ, and to die, is gain." He does not say, for me to live in the body is Christ, and for my body to die and my soul to live is gain. He talks about living and dying: not about living, and changing habitations: He has a desire that is far better than either living or dying, and that is "to depart and be with Christ." This departure was doubtless in harmony with what he had taught the church to hope for, which was translation into glory, instead of dissolution into glory. In other words he talked to them about living and going to glory at the appearing of Christ, but never talks about dying and going to glory.

But this is one of the many passages my opponent has quoted that has nothing to do with the question: for that pertains to souls or spirits; and there is not a word said about either souls or spirits in this passage. And that the apostle did not have any refference to soul or spirit, we give you the verse preceding that quoted: "According to my earnest expectation and hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now Christ shall be magnified in my body whether it be by life or by death." This magnifying happens to be in the body instead of the spirit.

Abraham being gathered to his fathers has been referred to. If this has reference to the abode of spirits, then to have any harmony in the theory of my opponents he must take the position that Abraham went to hell; or that his fathers are in heaven in spite of the fact that they were idolators; for they were star-worshippers and Abraham was called out from among them on that account. Either they are saved as idolators, or Abraham is lost, if this 'gathering' has reference to spirits. But this is not the sense of the text. Abraham's fathers, or people, were dead, and Abraham was to die and go to the grave with them; and that is all there is of it.

This passage is like most others he has quoted; not a word is said about souls or spirits. The question we are discussing is in relation to the spirits of men in the intermediate state; and no passage that does not embrace the terms, soul or spirit, is relevant to the question. I am opposed to the idea of taking a thing for granted, because a man wants it this way or that. I have proved beyond a possibility of refutation, that men do not get their reward till the coming of Christ and the day of judgment, and there has been no proof furnished to the contrary; and no proof has been furnished in favor of rewarding spirits immediately after death. Hence I feel that I have fairly sustained the affirmative.

Burgess' second speech.

Friend Fenn would have you think that my proof texts are all in favor of his doctrine. I have never claimed that spirits received their final reward at death: but I claim they are conscious and know what their reward is to be. Fenn says my proof texts do not contain the terms soul or spirit. Those terms are in more than a dozen of my texts, and he gives them the go by, or slips over them in his very adroit way.

I do not know but the idolators are in heaven. I would sooner think all men saved, than believe in annihilation.

I have proved my side of the question beyond a doubt. I will now give you some more rebutting testimony. [Reads from 'the primer' till close of speech.]

Journeyings.—No. 2.

At Eyota I spent the night (Sept 7,) with Br. W. Brown and family. The threshing machines in the neighborhood kept the people so busy that it was impracticable to hold a public service, so we passed the evening conversing on subjects of interest relating to the blessed hope, calling up the history of the past days, and scenes that transpired years ago in the East. Br. B. lived near Champlain, N. Y., and was personally acquainted with many who, like himself, are now scattered over the land in different localities, isolated from those of like precious faith.

At Rochester (Sept. 8) I soon found the home of Br. G. G. Emery, and was made to feel it was our home while we should tarry with him. Spoke in the evening to about thirty persons on the time of the second advent; its nature and object. Found some friends that are looking for the return of the Master and desired to hear a course of lectures on the prophetic Scriptures. But the great majority are not interested in these glorious themes. In these large towns and cities there are so many things to attract the public attention, that it is with great difficulty that we can secure a hearing upon unpopular truths: a series of meetings is necessary to awaken and call out the people.

My next stopping place was at Havanna, five miles east from Owatonna. The evening service was very interesting to myself, and I doubt not to the congregation, also, as they remained patiently till near eleven o'clock. At the conclusion of my discourse I gave liberty for remarks or questions concerning the leading points of our faith, which I had brought out. Among others the Free-Methodist minister propounded several questions, and said that while the brother had said some good things, they simply served as sugar to coat over the bitter pills that he had dealt out in his erroneous doctrine. He, however, gave way for me to speak on his appointment. The next morning (Sept. 10), a full house assembled and listened attentively. I distributed tracts and books at the close, leaving the result with him who has said, "My word shall not return unto me void."

I enjoyed the hospitality of Sr. P. M. Landon and family. Her husband died a year since, and sleeps in Jesus. I met Eld. Allen of the Seventh-day Adventists. He has rejected "the visions" and some fruits of their expositions, but still claims the observance of the the seventh day to be binding. But he does not force this as a test of fellowship.

Br. E. K. Smith of Owatonna was also here, and accompanied me on my journey to that place, where we held service in the Universalist chapel in the afternoon and evening. Br. Smith stands alone in this place. He was turned out of the Baptist church here some five years since on account of his faith. His wife sleeps in Jesus. She died six years ago in the hope of a resurrection unto eternal life. He has done what he could in the circulation of books and tracts, and is endeavoring to shape his business so that he may go out and proclaim the truth among the people as the door may open before him.

The church adopted the following preamble and resolution when he was expelled.

"WHEREAS, Br. E. K. Smith has endorsed doctrines not in harmony with the doctrine of the Baptist church, therefore Resolved, that he be expelled from the fellowship of this church."

Br. L. Fitzsimmons, who lives some six miles out, was in with his family. He wants preaching in his neighborhood. There are a few in this region who have identified themselves with the Adventists. I found a home with Sr. Holland, of the Baptist church.

march an army into the principalities; for to do so would be quite as much an insult to Austria as to Russia. Such an act, indeed, would have isolated Germany from the rest of Europe; for by the treaty of Paris of 1856 the principalities are placed under the protection of the great powers. The most proper course for Prussia to pursue was to appeal to the powers who signed the treaty of Paris and to ask them to meet in conference for the special settlement of the question. But conferences have become dangerous things; when they are not mere shams, they are almost certain to breed trouble. So Bismark sounds Beust; and the result is that Austria and Germany propose to settle this little affair in their own way, in their own interests and without regard to outside powers. In the valley of the Danube, Austria and Germany have a common interest. One result of the meetings of the emperors at Gastein and Salzburg is that Roumania has consented in some sense to pay, and Italy has been selected as the umpire. It is not unreasonable to presume that the original occasion of the trouble has been removed; but the alliance having been formed, fruits of a very different sort than the mere payment of the railway bonds must be looked for.

Rumor has it that the cabinets of St. Petersburg and of Berlin have been engaged for some time past in a species of diplomatic sparring. Prussia, it is said, has played Russia the trick which she played Austria in 1864 and France in 1866. On the occasion of the outbreak of the Franco-German war, Russia, it seems, was bought over to the side of Prussia by means of certain promises. As Prussia found it convenient to break pledges solemnly given in 1864 and 1866, so does she find it convenient to break pledges solemnly given in 1871. If the one-half of what is said be true, Russia has been hoodwinked and sold, and Prussia has fairly earned the title which was once given to CARTHAGE and which was latterly given to Great Britain. "Punica fides" and "perfidious Albion" are likely to be forgotten after "lying Prussia." We are not disposed to give credence to every idle rumor; but we cannot close our eyes to what seems fact, and the fact, as we see it, is in the fullest sense alarming. If an alliance has been entered into between Germany and Austria—and there is every reason to believe that an alliance has been concluded—it will be impossible for Russia, without some show of resistance, to submit to the insult. It will be all the more impossible that the alliance means nothing, if it does not mean that Roumania is in some way to be gobbled up by the two Powers, and that a mighty wall is to be raised, bristling with Austrian and German bayonets, cutting Russia off from the object of her historic ambition. Russia has during her whole history as one of the powers of Europe regarded it as her destiny to sit in pride on the Golden Horn, and to call the Black Sea and the Grecian Archipelago her own. Roumania occupied by Austrian and German troops, this dream is gone; Russia is shut out not only from the Mediterranean, but from the Baltic. What will Russia do? We know that Prince GORTSCHAKOFF and President Thiers have arranged to meet at an early day, and we can only regard this as a counterblow to the meetings of the emperors at Gastein and at Salzburg. For Russia, France is the only possible ally in the circumstances; and it is not to be denied that with Russia for an ally France will fight well, so well that we tremble for the result. A war between Germany and Austria on the one hand and Russia and France on the other would wrap Europe in flames and might prove most disastrous to the family of man. Whatever the result, whichever should win, such a war could scarcely fail to throw civilization back for at least a century.

A few days more and we shall know what the conferences have done. We shall know what is the nature of the alliance between Austria and Germany. A few days more and Russia will speak out, perhaps act, and the attitude and purpose of France will no longer be a secret. Would it be a wonder if Europe were in flames from the Baltic to the Mediterranean and from the Atlantic to the Bosphorus in less than a month, and that no fewer than four millions of men should be in the field. Let us pray that it may not be so. If the worst of our fears should become reality, let us rejoice that Great Britain and the United States are happily little likely to suffer from the conflict. Should it come to war, we have no idea that Russia, even with the aid of France, is a match for united Austria and Germany. But the destruction of life and property must be such that we cannot help praying that peaceful counsels may prevail.—Scottish American Journal.

Minutes of a Discussion.

SEVENTH SESSION—FENN'S FIRST SPEECH.

There was but one criticism of an argument of mine last evening, that should be noticed. Br. Burgess, undertook to cover up the sharp edge of the weapon I drew from Paul's charge to Timothy (2 Tim. 4), by trying to show a difference between a crown of life and a crown of righteousness. But should I allow his claim the point I made is not covered up. It was the time when men receive their crowns, that was under discussion rather than the nature of the crowns given. You will see now, who was 'adroit' in slipping over facts, and who 'needs the watching.'

Let us look at another passage that has been quoted (very unfortunately however), to sustain the negative of this question. I refer to 1 Thes. 5:23. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." I was surprised that my opponent should quote such a passage to prove the conscious existence of souls and spirits between death and resurrection. Do you not see, that upon his theory, that souls and spirits are conscious in death, man has two entities instead of one! He must have a soul-entity and a spirit-entity; for the prayer is for the preservation of all three.

The absurdity of such a theory is manifest without further comment. The sense of the text is simply this. The apostle is emphatically persuading the Thessalonians, that they are to be remembered entire at the coming of Christ. Not a particle of their being is to be forgotten; but all is to be preserved with care till the great day of Christ's coming.

Then every man will receive a reward according to his deeds. I wonder if we can find good old Hezekiah supporting the idea that the dead are better prepared to praise the Lord than the living! He was once informed that he must die; and this information filled his heart with sorrow. He wept bitterly, and prayed for the perpetuation of his life, God in answer to prayer "added to his days, fifteen years." Then he began to rejoice and praise the Lord, and said: "For the grave cannot praise thee: death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, he shall praise thee as I do this day." (Is. ch. 38.)

Ah! no! Hezekiah had not the modern theology so far as the condition in death is concerned. Still modern saints are quite as loath to die as he was; and will run a horse for a doctor, or some remedy, to allay the disease, and keep death away, and themselves out of heaven, though at the same time singing that it is the gate to glory or open door to paradise. Human nature was the same with him as with us: and he was opposed to death, knowing as we should, that it is an enemy. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (1 Cor. 15:26.)

This last text conveys a self-evident fact to the mind, that death is an enemy: and every law of our being conspires to assert its truthfulness. When a faithful Lazarus had fallen into this enemy's hand, Jesus wept, and the friends were in agony of heart at the sad event. Why did not Christ adopt the modern style of comforting the bereaved, and tell those sisters their brother was in glory, and it was wrong to weep for him? We hear no such inconsistent remarks from him. He comes to the resting place of the dead, with tearful eyes, and talks of the blessed assurance that the dead shall rise. And when that event occurred, the living saint should not die. (John 11:25, 26.)

The apostle Paul, enters the same field of hope and comfort, and says: "Sorrow not as those who have no hope.....For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord." How shall we ever be with the Lord? By being caught up with the resurrected dead, in the air. Not by being killed, and dissected, and a part sent to glory, and another part sent to hades, as the theory of my opponent would affirm.

When do men receive recompense for good deeds done here? Let the Savior answer: "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind: and thou shalt be blessed: for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." (Lk. 14:13, 14.) God proposes to reward men not ghosts; and has arranged to do this at the resurrection.

Burgess' first Speech.

I shall prove from positive testimony that the soul of man in a disembodied state is conscious. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" (Rev. 6:9, 10.) We see from this passage that souls not only exist after the death of the body, but that they are conscious. Here goes the gentleman's nonentity theory, to the four winds.

Fenn's second speech.

Br. Burgess has again (in his own mind) annihilated my theory. Let us carefully look at this so-called positive testimony, and see if it proves what he thinks it does. I notice that these souls were seen: hence they were not invisible, and are far from being the kind my opponent believes in. The souls he has faith in, are immaterial and invisible and intangible; which of course would forbid their being seen. Again he believes the souls of the good are happy. But these souls are in misery, and crying, "How long O Lord," &c. Again these souls are seen under the altar, in distress. You are aware that an altar is a place where sacrifices are slain, rather than a place where saints are glorified.

These souls had blood, which they desired to have avenged. There were given to them white robes. Could immaterial souls wear white robes?

The simple meaning of this passage is this: The Revelator has a view of the terrible slaughter, of God's saints, under the Papal persecution, during the dark ages, when the fifth seal was opened, the chronology of which was from the fifteenth to the eighteenth centuries. These souls, at the time this vision was presented to John, did not exist. They were only presented to his mind in vision, just as were the various other wonderful scenes recorded in this book, many of which never had a literal existence and never can have. A seven-headed and ten-horned monster is seen in vision: but never did and never will have a literal existence. The Emphatic Diaglott renders this passage as follows: "I saw under the altar the persons of those who had been killed;" &c. This is doubtless the correct idea. John saw the martyrs who lost their lives for the sake of Jesus, in this vision; and they were to remain in rest or quietude till all who were to be slain should be fulfilled.

So much for the "positive testimony" that so effectually annihilated my theory. I fear my opponent will have occasion to annihilate my theory several times before it will stay destroyed unless he has better success than in his past efforts guarantee. I think my audience are well able to see that the force of his 'overwhelming' arguments is very easily dissipated.

We have been referred to Phil. 1:21—"For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Br. Burgess seems to see something very consoling to his theory in this passage. Also, where the apostle says—"For me to live is Christ, and to die, is gain." He does not say, for me to live in the body is Christ, and for my body to die and my soul to live is gain. He talks about living and dying: not about living, and changing habitations: He has a desire that is far better than either living or dying, and that is "to depart and be with Christ." This departure was doubtless in harmony with what he had taught the church to hope for, which was translation into glory, instead of dissolution into glory. In other words he talked to them about living and going to glory at the appearing of Christ, but never talks about dying and going to glory.

But this is one of the many passages my opponent has quoted that has nothing to do with the question: for that pertains to souls or spirits; and there is not a word said about either souls or spirits in this passage. And that the apostle did not have any reference to soul or spirit, we give you the verse preceding that quoted: "According to my earnest expectation and hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now Christ shall be magnified in my body whether it be by life or by death." This magnifying happens to be in the body instead of the spirit.

Abraham being gathered to his fathers has been referred to. If this has reference to the abode of spirits, then to have any harmony in the theory of my opponents he must take the position that Abraham went to hell; or that his fathers are in heaven in spite of the fact that they were idolators; for they were star-worshippers and Abraham was called out from among them on that account. Either they are saved as idolaters, or Abraham is lost, if this 'gathering' has reference to spirits. But this is not the sense of the text. Abraham's fathers, or people, were dead, and Abraham was to die and go to the grave with them; and that is all there is of it.

This passage is like most others he has quoted; not a word is said about souls or spirits. The question we are discussing is in relation to the spirits of men in the intermediate state; and no passage that does not embrace the terms, soul or spirit, is relevant to the question. I am opposed to the idea of taking a thing for granted, because a man wants it this way or that. I have proved beyond a possibility of refutation, that men do not get their reward till the coming of Christ and the day of judgment, and there has been no proof furnished to the contrary; and no proof has been furnished in favor of rewarding spirits immediately after death. Hence I feel that I have fairly sustained the affirmative.

Burgess' second speech.

Friend Fenn would have you think that my proof texts are all in favor of his doctrine. I have never claimed that spirits received their final reward at death: but I claim they are conscious and know what their reward is to be. Fenn says my proof texts do not contain the terms soul or spirit. These terms are in more than a dozen of my texts, and he gives them the go by, or slips over them in his very adroit way.

I do not know but the idolators are in heaven. I would sooner think all men saved, than believe in annihilation.

I have proved my side of the question beyond a doubt. I will now give you some more rebutting testimony. [Reads from 'the primer' till close of speech.]

Journeyings.—No. 2.

At Eyota I spent the night (Sept 7,) with Br. W. Brown and family. The threshing machines in the neighborhood kept the people so busy that it was impracticable to hold a public service, so we passed the evening conversing on subjects of interest relating to the blessed hope, calling up the history of the past days, and scenes that transpired years ago in the East. Br. B. lived near Champlain, N. Y., and was personally acquainted with many who, like himself, are now scattered over the land in different localities, isolated from those of like precious faith.

At Rochester (Sept. 8) I soon found the home of Br. G. G. Emery, and was made to feel it was our home while we should tarry with him. Spoke in the evening to about thirty persons on the time of the second advent; its nature and object. Found some friends that are looking for the return of the Master and desired to hear a course of lectures on the prophetic Scriptures. But the great majority are not interested in these glorious themes. In these large towns and cities there are so many things to attract the public attention, that it is with great difficulty that we can secure a hearing upon unpopular truths: a series of meetings is necessary to awaken and call out the people.

My next stopping place was at Havanna, five miles east from Owatonna. The evening service was very interesting to myself, and I doubt not to the congregation, also, as they remained patiently till near eleven o'clock. At the conclusion of my discourse I gave liberty for remarks or questions concerning the leading points of our faith, which I had brought out. Among others the Free-Methodist minister propounded several questions, and said that while the brother had said some good things, they simply served as sugar to coat over the bitter pills that he had dealt out in his erroneous doctrine. He, however, gave way for me to speak on his appointment. The next morning (Sept. 10), a full house assembled and listened attentively. I distributed tracts and books at the close, leaving the result with him who has said, "My word shall not return unto me void."

I enjoyed the hospitality of Sr. P. M. Landon and family. Her husband died a year since, and sleeps in Jesus. I met Eld. Allen of the Seventh-day Adventists. He has rejected "the visions" and some fruits of their expositions, but still claims the observance of the the seventh day to be binding. But he does not force this as a test of fellowship.

Br. E. K. Smith of Owatonna was also here, and accompanied me on my journey to that place, where we held service in the Universalist chapel in the afternoon and evening. Br. Smith stands alone in this place. He was turned out of the Baptist church here some five years since on account of his faith. His wife sleeps in Jesus. She died six years ago in the hope of a resurrection unto eternal life. He has done what he could in the circulation of books and tracts, and is endeavoring to shape his business so that he may go out and proclaim the truth among the people as the door may open before him.

The church adopted the following preamble and resolution when he was expelled.

"WHEREAS, Br. E. K. Smith has endorsed doctrines not in harmony with the doctrine of the Baptist church, therefore Resolved, that he be expelled from the fellowship of this church."

Br. L. Fitzsimmons, who lives some six miles out, was in with his family. He wants preaching in his neighborhood. There are a few in this region who have identified themselves with the Adventists. I found a home with Sr. Holland, of the Baptist church.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 26, 1871.

ON THE SOUL.

A SCRIPTURAL COMMENTARY.

We design in this commentary to give every passage in the Scriptures in which the word 'soul' occurs in the original languages. In the last chapter two typographical errors occur. For Deut. '20' read '30.' In the definition of Loc and Drew for 'it is not without extension' read 'is without extension.' We now pass on, resuming our list of citations with the book of Joshua

Josh. 2 : 13. 'Save alive my father and my mother and my brethren and my sisters, ...and deliver our lives (soul) from death.' Thus Rahab plead when she showed kindness to the Hebrew spies; and they replied,

V. 14. 'Our life (soul) for yours.'

Ch. 9 : 24. 'We were sore afraid of our lives' (souls) literally: 'We were sore afraid of losing our souls.' The language was that of the Gibeonites, at the time they deceived Joshua. Their excuse was, that they saw no other way to save their lives, or themselves, from destruction.

Ch. 10 : 28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39; ch. 11 : 11. 'Joshua took Makkedah, and . . . .he utterly destroyed . . . . all the souls that were therein . . . .He smote it [Libnah] with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein . . . .Utterly destroyed all the souls that were therein [Debir.] . . . .They smote all the souls with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them.' [Read the entire connection.] Certain teachers, when we ask them where in the Bible they find mention of immortal souls, answer by asking, 'Where do you find "mortal souls" spoken of in the Scriptures.' The above references are our answer. Here is the record of souls (NEPHESH smitten, destroyed, utterly destroyed —and they were not kept alive in torment, either, but killed.

Ch. 9 : 2. 'Appoint you cities of refuge . . . .that the slayer that killeth any person (soul) unawares,' etc. V. 9. 'That whoso killeth any person (soul) unawares might flee thither,' etc. Ch. 22 : 5. 'Serve [God] with all your heart and with all your soul,' i. e. the entire mind being sanctified [illegible] ole life devoted to his service.

[illegible] 11. 'Take good heed unto yourselves (y[illegible] souls), that you love the Lord your God.'

[illegible] 4. 'Ye know in all your hearts, and in all y[illegible] souls.' An intensive form of expression, as —Ye most certainly know. If 'soul' were a separate entity, 'heart' must be also, which would be absurd.

Judges 5 : 18. 'Zebulun and Naphtali . . . .jeoparded their lives (souls unto the death,' i. e., on the field of battle.

V. 21. 'O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength.' The 'soul' here apostrophized is not a separate entity, but the speaker is addressing himself, as a person, in an idiom with which we shall become more familiar as we proceed with this investigation

Ch. 9 : 17. 'My father adventured [i. e., risked] his life' (soul), in the service of the Israelites against their enemy, Midian.

Ch. 10 : 16. 'And his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel.' It is God of whom the inspired writer now speaks. Will our immaterialist friends insist that he has 'a soul' as a separate entity in his nature? If not, why not? If not, why contend that expressions like the above applied to man indicate 'a dual nature.'—The passage simply means 'His feelings were moved,' or 'the mind excited to action' on their behalf.

Ch. 12 : 3. 'I put my life (soul) in my hands' says Jepthah, referring to his war with Ammon.

Ch. 16 : 16. 'His [Samson's] soul was vexed unto death.' A strong hyperbole; as we sometimes in common conversation hear the phrase, 'I was tormented or plagued to death,' i. e., like to die with the excess of trouble or care.

V. 30. 'And Sampson said, Let me (lit. my soul) die with the Philistines.' If 'soul' (nephesh) had been a word in common use in Samson's day to indicate a part of man (the real man) that cannot die, is it propable that such an expression would have fallen from his lips? Imagine a latter-day immaterialist saying of his literal death, 'My soul shall die!'

Ch. 18 : 25. 'And the children of Dan said unto him, Let not thy voice be heard among us, lest angry fellows (lit. men bitter of soul) run upon thee, and thou lose thy life (soul), with the lives (souls) of thy household.' 'Soul' is here used first of the mind, afterward of the life.

Ruth 4 : 15. 'He shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life' (soul.) Naomi's friends esteemed the birth of her grandchild as almost the equivalent of a new life to her—so highly were children esteemed in those days.

1 Samuel 1 : 10. 'She [Hannah] was in bitterness of soul,' i. e., in deep sorrow.

V. 15. 'I have poured out my soul,' i. e. what was in my mind—the deep sorrows already mentioned.

V. 26. 'She said, O my lord, as thy soul liveth,' or, as truly as you are a living man.

Ch. 2 : 16. 'Take as much as thy soul desireth,' i. e. all you wish of the flesh of the sacrifices.

V. 33. He 'shall be to grieve thine heart' (soul.)

V. 35. 'I will raise me up a faithful priest that shall do according to that which is in my heart and in my mind' (soul), said God to Eli.

Ch. 17 : 55. 'Abner said, As thy soul liveth O king, I cannot tell.'

Ch. 18 : 1. 'The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul.' Soul, here, refers first to the affections, and then to the persons.

V. 3. 'He loved him as his own soul.' As himself.

Ch. 19 : 5. 'And he [David] put his life (soul) in his hand'—risked his life when he went to fight with Goliah.

V. 11. 'If thou save not thy life (soul) to-night, to-morrow thou shalt be slain.' The message Michael sent to David when Saul sought to kill him.

Ch. 20 : 1. 'He [Saul] seeketh my life' (soul.)

V. 3. 'As truly as the Lord liveth, and thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death.

V. 4. 'Whatsoever thy soul desireth, I will even do it for thee. Margin, 'Say what is thy mind, and I will do it.

V. 17. 'He loved him as his own soul.'

Ch 22 : 2. 'Every one that was discontented' (lit. bitter of soul.) 'Soul' is here used of a state of mind.

V. 22, 23. 'I have occasioned the death of all the persons (souls) of thy father's house . . . .He that seeketh my life (soul) seeketh thy life' (soul.)

Ch. 23 : 15. 'Saul was come to seek his life' (soul.)

V. 20. 'All the desire of thy soul.'

Ch. 24 : 11. 'Thou huntest my soul, to take it.' This David was one of the world's greatest poets. But in his poetic flights he never uttered false doctrine, nor contradicted his own plain prose. Compare the following language of a modern poet, with the passages we shall quote from David; and you will agree with us that one or the other is in error on the 'soul' question:

"Oh! loose this frame, this knot of man untie,
  That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinioned with mortality,
  As an entangled, hampered thing.
What have I left, that I should stay and groan?
  The most of me to heaven is fled:
My thoughts and joys are all packed up and gone,
And for their old acquaintance plead.
    Oh! show thyself to me,
    Or take me up to thee!"—HERBERT.

Ch. 26 : 26. As 'thy soul liveth.'

V. 29. 'A man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul: but the soul of my Lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God: and the souls of thine enemies he shall sling out, as out of the middle of a sling.'

'Thy life shall be precious in the sight of the Lord; . . . .it shall be supported by him who is the spring and fountain of life.'—Adam Clarke. But the lives of his enemies should come to a sudden and violent end.

Ch. 26 : 21. 'My soul (or life,)' was precious in thine eyes this day,' was Saul's acknowledgement to David; who replied (v. 24): 'As thy life (soul) was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life (soul) be much set by in the eyes of the Lord.'

Ch. 28 : 9. 'Wherefore layest thou a snare for my life (soul) to cause me to die,' said the witch at Endor to Saul; and afterward (v. 21); 'I have put my life (soul) in my hands.'

Ch. 30 : 6. 'The soul of all the people was grieved,' or bitter. We have now in the Scriptural narrative reached the days of David; but we have nowhere found even a trace of the idea of the natural immortality of man. We find indeed intimations of a future life, but it is by the resurrection, not by the continuance in conscious being of the soul. But this latter notion was known in David's day, and before, for Herodotus says:

"The Egyptians say that Ceres and Bacchus hold the chief sway in the infernal regions; and the Egyptians also, were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul of man is immortal.' (Book 2, sec. 123

Now it is incomprehensible, that in the writings of every other people which has taught the immortality of the soul the dogma should be plainly stated, and that on the other hand, the Hebrews should have all firmly believed it, and yet we never once find it mentioned in their sacred writings. Prof. Hudson well argued, that the very silence of the Scriptures was an unanswerable argument against the popular dogma. When we turn to the sacred books of other nations we find a striking similarity between the language of their most ancient documents and that of modern immaterialism. For instance in the 'Bhagavad Gite', one of the Hindoo sacred books we read:

(Wilkins' translation, pp. 36, 37–40): "The soul neither killeth nor is killed. You cannot say of it, it hath been, is about to be, or is to be hereafter. It is a thing without birth, it is ancient, constant and eternal. As a man throweth away old garments and putteth on new, so the soul, having quitted its old mortal frames, entereth into others that are new. The weapon divideth it not, the fire burneth it not, the water corrupteth it not, the wind drieth it not away. It is indivisible, inconsumable, incorruptible; it is universal, permanent, unmovable."

They also took another position, which immaterialists of this time are rapidly endorsing, either openly or in effect, that is, they denied the resurrection. Says Dr. John Mason Good (Book of Nature, p. 853):

"The Hindoo philosophers, totally and universally denying a resurrection of the body, support the doctrine [of a future life] alone upon the natural immortality of the soul; while the Arabian philosophers (among whom was Job) passing over the immortality of the soul, rested it alone upon the resurrection of the body."

But it should be explained that the Hindoos did not believe, after all, in personal immortality. They conceived souls to be emanations from a central deity, to whom they all ultimately returned, to be reabsorbed—the time of the migration or transmigrations being about 30,000 years. That man would exist eternally as individuals they had not the most distant idea. Their immortality culminated in an extinction of personal consciousness as complete as though it were actual annihilation. Hence Whateley, Archbishop of Dublin, in his work entitled "Revelations of a Future State," says:

"The very notion of the soul's immortality as explained by them [the ancient philosophers] involved the complete destruction of distinct personal existence."

THE Editor is in Arkansas, where he is to labor through the coming month.

THE Swedenborgian minister in Chicago is calling Spiritism to his aid in his efforts to prove the immortality of the soul. What is such aid worth? And can he afford to keep that company?

WHAT all Christians believe: "that we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." But only a few believe that we should live "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." And why should they? If we go to him when we die, why look for him to come to us?

THE article on the Austro-German Alliance, from the Scottish-American, will be read with deep interest. However, when the struggle comes, we anticipate a different event. The indications of the fulfillment of prophecy are, that the Turk must be driven out of Europe. We look for it soon.

As we suspected from the first, the speech which has been published in so many papers attributed to Bp. Strossmeyer, in the Vatican Council, is a forgery—it was neither written nor uttered by him. It is, in short, a forgery, by a zealous opposer of the infallibility dogma. It reminds us of the old adage—"Too good to be true."

INASMUCH as pedo-baptists urge Mk. 7: 4 as an objection to immersion, it may be well enough to remind them that some of the best MSS. do not read baptisontai, but rhantiso, or sprinkle. So the Vatican and the Sinaitic MSS. The washing of cups, etc., mentioned in the last part of the verse is by immersion, including the tables, or more properly couches which were not large wooden frames like ours, but simply a quilted roll, of cloth or leather.

"Be just, before you are generous." Well —yes—just so. But some people's capacity (or, rapacity if you prefer it,) for justification is so immense, that it takes almost a life-time of accumulation to fill the measure before there is any opportunity to "slop over" in favor of generosity. How much justice does it take to do an ordinary person—that's the point?

—We quote the above from a correspondent of the Methodist Recorder to signify our hearty approval of its self-evident point. If anybody is hit, let them take the hit, and former.

WHAT but the befogging influence of immaterialism could have compelled the clear-headed Alexander Clark, of the Methodist Recorder, to pen these two contradictory sentences in one article. First he says—'We are human—but immortal.' But almost before the ink with which the words were traced could have dried, he says: 'The voice that calls us TO immortality is the voice of him who built the skies." Here is a flat contradiction; and we have no hesitancy in affirming that the last statement is the truth, while the first is otherwise.

DR. CHEEVER thinks it is absurd to conceive of a divine revelation to man without the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. If he will substitute for that unscriptural expression, the idea of a future life, of eternal duration, we will admit his assertion. But as it stands, it is unsound: for the immortality of the soul implies the eternity of sin and suffering in the same individuals, which is the real absurdity; for what we know of God, from either nature or revelation, declares this to be exceedingly improbable, if not utterly impossible.

OUR readers have all heard of Mr. Towne, the able infidel writer, but probably not many have seen his writings. Here is an extract from a late effusion from his pen in the Golden Age:

Personally I do not care a fig what becomes of the name of Jesus. And rough as my encounter with accredited Christianity is I cannot doubt that we already begin to see the end of that intolerable humbug, an ignorant youngster put forward as the impersonation of greatness and holiness, and a mad fanatic thrust between God and his children, to cut off his grace from heaven except at his own will, and to put hate for kindness between man and man wherever his claim might be denied. Heathenism will die very hard, but it must die.

—Probably most of our readers will say,— 'It is enough.'

THE tendency of immaterialism to get into a muddle is well illustrated in the fate of an article in the Independent, by Rev. Geo. B. Cheever, in which he argues that a revelation from God destitute of the dogma of the immortality of the soul, would be an absurdity. Somebody else had written an article called 'R[illegible] under Biscuit.' Dr. Cheever's article [illegible]ow got mixed up with this, and the [illegible] half of it was published first, as the conclusion of the 'Biscuit' essay, the two being joined in the most solemnly absurd manner imaginable. Next week came the beginning of Dr. Cheever's argument, joined with part of the 'Biscuit' narrative, the one line of thought running into the other in an excessively bewildering manner.

We could not but regard the printer's blunder as an expressive reminder of the tendency of immaterialist doctrines to confusion of thought and expression.

An Inquiry into the Eternal Punishment of the Wicked, by John Bate. Mr. Bate strongly condemns those preachers who do not declare the doctrines of everlasting torment to the wicked and eternal happiness to the righteous.

—We find the above among the Book Notices of an exchange. Mr. Bate is right— at least so far as preachers who profess to believe the horrible dogma are concerned. The man who with convictions of its truth shuns to declare it, certainly deserves condemnation. And if they doubt, or disbelieve, and neither investigate nor denounce the error, then still stronger objurgations are their just desert. The fact that the doctrine is but little taught, and even then often presented in a half apologetic form, is good evidence that there is little real faith in it. But for the general unwillingness to admit the mortality of man, we should see a speedy, and almost universal revolution of opinion upon the future punishment.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

As Adventists we seem peculiarly liable to be misunderstood, as well as misrepresented. We are misunderstood by most at first hearing of us; and misrepresented by those who having understood something of our position reject it because of its unpopularity; or their own bigotry or sectarianism. But there is a class, who having misunderstood us, when they find us out are disposed to give us a candid hearing and listen to our argument before they reply to or reject it. Of this class was a gentleman who addressed some queries to us during our late lectures in the Court House at Memphis. He misunderstood us by supposing that we denied everlasting punishment, while we believed in the immortality of the soul. The facts in the case are just the opposite of this. This gentleman handed us a paper containing his points, desiring that we should make some further remarks upon the subject in THE TIMES. The following are his notes:

"Is the soul immortal? If so, good or evil, it must exist forever. To the good that existence is awarded as eternal life, to the evil that existence is 'shame,' 'everlasting contempt,' and 'everlasting punishment.'

Dan. 12 : 1, 2. "At that time [the time of the end: see ch. 11 : 40] . . . .there shall be a time of trouble . . . .and . . . .thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

Mat. 25 : 41–46. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory . . . .and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them . . . .as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall place the sheep on the right hand, and the goats on the left . . . .Then shall he say to them on the right hand . . . .inherit the kingdom . . . .then shall he say to them on his left hand, depart ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels . . . .And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."

John 5 : 28, 29. "All that are in their graves . . . shall come forth: they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

All are resurrected to what we now call life. Then follows, after the separation of the good from the evil, their respective new conditions—these to the God-given new life, then assigned by the judge; those to the penalty of eternal misery incurred by their acts: but both to immortality—the one of life the other of death."

—The whole subject turns upon the opening question; "Is the soul of man immortal?" If it is, we know of but one way to state the future of mankind; a portion go into eternal bliss; the rest into eternal wo. The passages cited above clearly show this. But we are free from the difficulties that entangle the restorationists; we unqualifiedly deny the popular dogma, and challenge proof that man possesses immortality in any other sense than by faith.

We shall not here attempt to prove a negative, but simply show that nothing in either of these passages above contradicts our opinions. In Daniel we have "everla[illegible] life," set over against [illegible] everlasting contempt." [illegible]ow we will admit, that were this the only passage upon the subject in the Scriptures, there might be room for difference of opinion, although the antithesis would suggest that the doom of the second class is something opposed to life. But even the careless reader must observe that the "shame," which is felt by the sinner is not everlasting, while the contempt, which is the feeling of others toward him, is so. The first is subjective; the last is objective.

A passage, to some extent parallel with this, is found in Rom. 2 : 6–9. "He will render . . . .to the unrighteous . . . .indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil." Again, if this were all the testimony we had upon the subject, the duration of the "anguish" might be an open question. But even then, would not the probabilities be with us, inasmuch that as far as our experience and observation go, the tendency of all suffering is to death? But when we put alongside of this passage the assertion of the Holy Spirit through Ezekiel—"The soul that sinneth it shall die!" we hardly need Paul's subsequent affirmation (Rom. 6 : 23), that "the wages of sin is death," to confirm, and establish as truth, our inference that this suffering is temporary and not eternal.

Upon the passage from Mat. 25 we remark: there is no dispute that wherever in the Scriptures the phrase "eternal fire," or its equivalent, is used in any other connection than the doom of the lost, it means simply a consuming fire—a fire that cannot be quenched until it has burned up all upon which it feeds. On this point see 2 Ki. 22 : 17; 2 Chron. 34 : 25; Is. 1 : 31, 28; Jer. 4 : 4; 7 : 20; 17 : 27; 21 : 12, 14; Ezk, 20 : 47; Jer. 17 : 4.

Now there is no reason under heaven for supposing eternal fire devouring the wicked means anything different from eternal fire devouring the gates and palaces of Jerusalem—except the assumption that the wicked are immortal and cannot be burned up; and, hence, in their case the term bears another than its common sense.

The passage from Mat. 25 : 46 has no weight against our views when once the question is fairly understood. No one dare dispute that death is a punishment. Says Moses Stuart: "It is the consumation of all suffering: the highest penalty which can be inflicted." And when we speak of an eternal death, no one can perceive any incongruity in the idea. If then, temporal death, which cannot cut off the hope of a future life, is the highest penalty known to human law, may we not freely admit that eternal death—death with no hope or possibility of a resurrection, is the highest penalty known to the divine law? In other words, is not eternal death in the literal sense of the words, in its very nature an "everlasting punishment?" If death is a punishment (as all admit), is not eternal death an eternal punishment? There can be but one answer to the question.

We see then no reason for violating the antithesis here—these shall go into everlasting life, and these shall go into everlasting punishment. If we understand punishment to refer to death, it fulfills the sense, and harmonizes with the Scriptures at large. Paul says; they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction;" and David, "All the wicked will God destroy." Hence while we admit that sometimes kolasin (translated punishment) is used of conscious suffering, yet inasmuch as its primary sense is cutting off, and it is frequently used of capital punishment, we again say we know of no reason why it should not be taken in this latter sense in Mat. 25 : 46.

Our friend's conclusion, that the righteous and wicked are alike raised to immortality, but that in the one case it is an immortality of life; in the other immortality of death, we cannot for a moment admit. The latter phrase is a contradiction of terms. Death and immortality are diametrically opposed to each other; for death is extinction of vital being and immortality is its endless continuance. On the other hand Paul clearly teaches (Gal 6 : 9) that there is a distinction in the resurrection of the two classes. They that sow to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting; while they who sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption. Hence he says of the righteous (1 Cor. 15: 52) they shall be raised incorruptible, or immortal; not be raised as they went down, and afterward be changed.

In conclusion, if we have not met our friend's point, we shall be glad to hear from him again. Meanwhile, we think he would find great satisfaction in perusing Mr. Constable's work upon the future punishment, where the subject is treated at greater length than is possible for us in the columns of a weekly paper.

TO THE CHRISTIAN RADICAL.

Will this journal be kind enough to say to its readers that the passage it credits to us in its issue for Sept. 9 was not ours, but belongs to one of our correspondents. We do not pretend to endorse every sentiment uttered by our correspondents; nor can we believe that the Radical allows no one to speak in its columns whose views do not exactly coincide with its own. And if we should reprove it at some length because of a correspondent's sentiments, we opine the Radical would change its opinion of us, and pronounce us "pert," but not "keen."

Moreover the Radical should do our correspondent justice, who while opening somewhat carelessly, did bring out and enforce a great truth; his summing up being, that the conflict between true science and the Bible is apparent and not real; and that the Scriptures contain infallible truth, to which all theories of men must ultimately conform.

The Radical's picture of us "racking our brains," "fruitlessly wasting time" in "the business of harmonizing," is not from life. It has misunderstood. Suppose it give to its readers our correspondent's article, which called forth its lecture!

OUR GENERAL MEETING.

The time is approaching for the postponed Annual Meeting of the Western Association. There have been only two places mentioned for it —Buchanan and Chicago. We are now waiting upon the Chicago church for a decision in the matter; and as soon as it is rendered we shall call the meeting at once—probably about the last of November or first of December.

Our own choice for the place of meeting would be Buchanan. We would prefer to have our friends come here and see our office, our management, our methods of conducting business. We should feel better about it, and are quite confident they would, also.

But Chicago has many advantages for such a gathering, especially in the fact that a more general gathering would be ensured. We hope to see a gathering of the brethren and sisters who have the cause in the field we occupy really at heart, and feel willing to devote the necessary time to the discussion and examination of its business; hear what has been done, and judge what is best to do hereafter.

There will be plenty of time devoted to preaching and prayer and conference. But there is business that should be attended to; and it is just as much a religious duty to attend to this business properly and in full as it is to preach, exhort, sing and pray.

Let all, then, who desire the prosperity of the cause be in attendance, "not slothful in business," yet "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

HOW TO TELL.

The supplement which we send out this week we trust will prove all the bill we shall have to send to any of our subscribers. Many are in arrears. One forgets it in one place, and another in another place, and by the time "forgetting" has been practiced in more than twenty States, it becomes quite a serious matter with us.

But says one, How can I tell how my account stands? We answer, by the date on the little label on your paper, which bears your name. For instance, if it reads 1 Jan. 72—then you are paid to next January. If 15 Mar. 71—then you owe since last March. If 12 June 70—then you owe since the twelfth of June, 1870. In short, you are paid to the date which appears upon your label.

If four thousand subscribers would make their labels read "72," we would make improvements in THE TIMES, which as things are we can only hope for sometime in the future, should time last.

Consult your label, and save us the expense of sending out bills. Last year it cost us quite an item to send bills to delinquents. But as we have remarked, we trust every delinquent will look upon our supplement this week as all the dun or bill any one should need.

"GOOD TIDINGS."

ANOTHER NEW BOOK.

Our readers will remember that the General Conference at Rochester, two years ago, requested six brethren to prepare for publication a work treating upon the leading points of Adventism. These were Wm. Sheldon, S. G. Mathewson, John Couch, Miles Grant, H. G. McCullock and J. V. Himes.

As time rolled on, some modifications of the original plan became necessary, and the literary labor finally devolved upon four brethren, instead of six, and the General Conference Committee placed the matter in the hands of one man for publication; a brother whom they knew to be responsible, and who will devote whatever profits may arise (if there should be any) from the sale of the book, to the distribution of the book itself and other reading matter to the best advantage.

Though the work does not contain all that was originally designed for its pages, nevertheless it is a book that will command attention and be read with interest everywhere by all wishing to investigate Bible truth. Upon its merits, then, we bespeak for it a wide circulation. Let it be read by all Adventists, and loaned or given away by them in large numbers. Let us rally and take up the first edition in a few weeks.

PRICES: In cloth, per dozen, by express, $8; in paper, $4. Single copies, cloth, $1; paper, 50c., post-paid. Orders for large or small quantities promptly filled at this office.

FIRE! FIRE!

HOW TO PUT IT OUT!

Many a house or barn has been burned that might have been saved had some simple, easily-managed means for quenching the flames been at hand; and for many years inventors have been studying the problem of a portable, convenient and effective fire-extinguisher. After several failures, which have, we fear, dampened the public faith in the possibility of obtaining a reliable extinguisher, a complete success has been attained at last; and in the BABCOCK FIRE EXTINGUISHER we have the desirable article which we have described above.

We speak editorially upon this subject because we wish our readers to understand that we fully endorse the advertisement of the Extinguisher, which appears in another column, and believe we are doing them a favor in calling their attention to it. We never pass our own Extinguisher, in its place in our office, without feeling an additional sense of security beyond what we have ever felt before.

The Extinguisher has been the means of checking a multitude of conflagrations, and has saved, we believe, millions of dollars, not only to those owning machines, but to their neighbors also. In short, it is simple, effective, and fully deserves its name, The Fire Extinguisher!

We are prepared to furnish the Extinguisher to our subscribers upon favorable terms; especially where the people of a place club together and procure a number of them. Don't wait till your premises are on fire to get one; but procure an Extinguisher at once, and be prepared when the fire comes.

PROPHETIC CHART.

The frequent calls for a map of the symbolic prophecies, for the use of lecturers, have led us to plan one more Prophetic Chart, which, if published, will be the finest thing of the kind ever offered to the church.

As a publication of this character involves a large outlay, and can, in any event, but little more than repay its cost, we propose to issue it upon the basis of a subscription, and shall not commence work upon it until a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to secure the Association from any loss.

All our experience in publishing charts, in the past, will be brought into play, to make this the perfect and complete chart. It will contain illustrations of Dan. ch. 2 (the image); 7 (the four beasts); 8 and 9 (the ram and he-goat and the 2300 days and prophetic weeks); Christ's great prophecy in Mat. 24; Rev. chs. 5–7 (the seals); chs. 8–11 (the trumpets, and two witnesses); ch. 12 (the woman, the child and dragon); ch. 13 (the leopard and two-horned beasts); ch. 16 (the vials); ch. 17 (the scarlet beast); etc., etc.

The prophetic periods will be illustrated, but not in a manner to confine them to any special dates. But they will be so arranged that any lecturer can adapt them to his own views of their rise and temination.

In short we purpose to make it invaluable to every preacher upon prophecy; a help to church and ministry that no Advent chapel can afford to do without; and that will be a preacher in every household where it is hung up.

We wish for one hundred subscribers, to ensure its financial success; but will commence work upon it as soon as FIFTY RESPONSIBLE NAMES are secured.

TERMS.—$10 for a single chart; one half to be paid when work on the chart commences, and the remainder upon delivery.

We trust this liberal proposition will meet a prompt and equally liberal response. Let ministers bring the subject before the churches, and take collections, or pledges to secure its speedy issue. Let brethren who are able subscribe in behalf of preachers who are not able to buy one. Let us obey the prophetic injunction, to "write the vision, and make it plain upon tables," after a fashion that shall command the attention and respect of all to whom the chart may be displayed. Let us hear from all interested, at once.

ADDRESS, ADVENT TIMES, Buchanan, Mich. tf.

CORRECTION.

By an editorial mistake, the appointment for the dedication at Auburn, Ill. was published last week for October 19. It should have been October 12. See notice. Let there be a general rally in all that region.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We learn that three Baptist ministers and a number of other brethren are to be tried next Saturday, for heresy, before a Baptist Association in Central Illinois. The heresy is Adventism, or "Soul-sleeping." We understand the prospect is favorable for their being all "turned out." We shall await the decision with interest.——We learn that the Campmeetings East have been excellent. Alton Bay, quite the rival of Springfield in size and interest, never saw a better meeting. The Connecticut meeting, at Plainville, is pronounced the best ever held in the State.——We notice that Br. and Sr. Mansfield have appointments at Portsmouth, N. H. Sept. 26 27, and at Manchester Oct. 1. We understand they will visit Castleton and Sandy Hill.——An Advent chapel is to be dedicated in Chelsea, Mass. next Thursday; and a Hall at Highlandville next Friday.——The Connecticut Annual Conference will meet at Bristol, Oct. 18.——Eld. Grant commenced a protracted meeting at St. Johnsbury, Vt. the 14th. We trust he may have even more than his usual success. It is quite a new field.——The brethren in the adjoining corners of Mass. and Vt., and close by in N. Y. have determined to organize a Conference. The call is signed by seven preachers. It is a good move, and has our prayers for its success. The Conference will convene at Hoosick, N. Y. Oct 18. A full attendance from all the region is desirable.——The church at Springwater, N. Y. have about completed their new chapel. The Editor of THE TIMES has been invited to the dedication, early in November; but previous engagements may deprive him of the pleasure of attending.——We learn that the new chapel in Springville, Wis. will be dedicated in November—probably by Br. P. W. Hough and Eld. J. V. Himes.——The Arena, Wis., tent-meeting last week was a success, like most Wisconsin meetings. Twelve baptized, and others to be.——An old veteran, is a brother in Indianapolis, from whom we have just heard, who says: "Thirty years ago I commenced investigating these views, and for twenty-five years I have advocated them in private life. "We hope for a better acquaintance."——Br. Phelps is in LeRoy, N. Y., with the State Mission Tent. Two were converted early in the meeting. Brn. Fenn and W. E. Brown are efficient co-workers. We would like to accept an invitation to attend; but it is utterly impossible for us to do so.——The friends at Volga, Ind. and vicinity, Br. and Sr. Tibbet's neighborhood, expect to organize a church soon. Some new converts, others driven out of the Baptist church.——A brother in the ministry writes: It is hard getting subscribers for our papers. People say they are too poor to take them. But they appear to have many other things they could much better go without. A true saying.——At East Randolph, N. Y. the scene of the debate which we are reporting through THE TIMES, the brethren are refitting a chapel and will soon have a comfortable place of worship. They wish preaching brethren to call and help them in word and doctrine.——Br. Hill writes from Benton Co. Ark., that Eld. Covey, of the Disciples, is proclaiming in that section essentially the same doctrine that Adventists hold, though he has never heard of us, but formed his opinions from study of the Scriptures. He is well in years, but we trust he may see, yet, much fruit of his labors.——Dr. Bowman, of South Carolina, has commenced his work as an Advent Evangelist. At his first appointment he organized a church of 31 members. He has reasonable hope of similar success in at least nine other places on the same circuit. The meetings are all held out of doors, because no house will hold the people. The excitement is intense. We shall send the doctor next week the last installment of about $50 worth books and tracts, some paid for by individuals the rest from our tract fund. We shall soon have a Conference in South Carolina.——The debate between Br. G. W. Green and Eld. Treat, of the Disciples, came off according to appointment at Harrisonville, Ind. Our friends feel well satisfied with the result. Br. G. stood alone. Treat was backed by some twelve or fifteen ministers, and from all we hear did not conduct himself in an entirely Christian manner, sometimes forgetting but that abuse and sneers are argument.——Br. Kent has baptized four and Br. Morphy two souls since the campmeeting, making fourteen as the immediate fruit of the meeting.——The Noble township church, Romig, S. H. Iowa, was recently organized by Br. W. Morphy. Six members.——The Northern District of the Indiana Conference will hold a Q. M. at Union Mills, Oct 28. This is old ground, and a good time is anticipated. Arrange to go—you who are within reach.

The Times.

AT HOME.

- - - New York is better off than we dared hope, and there is some prospect of its city government being cleansed without a resort to a 'vigilance committee.' Judge Barnard granted an injunction forbidding the present officials to pay out any more money. Comptroller Connoly has resigned, and an honest man now fills his place. Other changes will be effected as speedily as possible. Meanwhile the city debt, as far as can be ascertained, is about $116,000,000, possibly more. And how much of this sum has gone into the pockets of dishonest officials no one can tell. Let us hope that the worst is past.

ABROAD.

- - - Rochefort has been sentenced to a penal colony for life, for his part in the communal insurrection.

- - - The German army is to be placed upon a peace-footing—only 400,000 men. Along with this report we have a prediction of war between Germany and Russia within six months.

- - - It appears that the total forces available for war purposes in Europe, taking the English disposable forces at 470,779 men and 336 guns, is 8,164,800 men, 512,894 horses, 10,224 guns, and about 800 mitrailleuses.

- - - Sweden appears to have taken the general European alarm and is talking of reorganizing its military system. Sweden has only a small army—about 130,000 men, in addition to volunteers and free-shooters. The "regulars" or reserves are distributed in the cantons, and earn their living by working for the landed proprietors, but are obliged to drill one month each year. In comparison with the Prussian military machine, or even the British thirteen thousand men who lately marched to Sandhurst and then marched back again, it must be seen that the army of Sweden is rather undisciplined, and would not be very effective even as a home guard in case of invasion.

- - - Seven thousand persons in Tortola, W. I. lost their homes by the late hurricane and earthquake.

- - - Since Napoleon lived and died in St. Helena, that island has been pursued by misfortune. Such, indeed, has been the unremitting character of the disasters that have occurred there as almost to justify superstition concerning it. In the latter part of July, the final term of a long catalogue of woes, St. Helena was almost literally washed away by floods. Five hundred of the inhabitants were swept out of their houses and lost everything they possessed. All the roads were destroyed, and the island is now said to be uninhabitable. A Local Committee is inquiring into ways and means for bettering the condition of things; but people are going away fast, and it seems not impossible that St. Helena may become the desolate and solitary rock that it once was and has been so often sung.

- - - Probably few persons (says the Pall Mall Gazette) are aware of the extent of the encroachments made by the sea upon the east coast of Yorkshire. The Rev. F. G. Morris has calculated that there is an average loss of two or three yards of land every year, and that in round numbers about thirty-nine acres disappear annually between Spurn Point and Flamborough Head alone. Havenspurn was once an important seaport, and returned a member to the Parliaments of Edward I.; but when Bolingbroke landed there in 1399 it was little more than a name, and by the end of the next century had wholly disappeared. Auburn, Hartburn, and Hyde are villages which exist only in old maps and documents; and Kilnsea, which lost its church in 1830, seems likely soon to follow the fate of its neighbors.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

- - - In Russia an edict has been issued forbidding worship after the manner of the Baptists.

- - - The Free Methodist tells of a church in Utica which held a festival where prize packages of tobacco were sold. Afterwards they sent for Mrs. Palmer to hold meetings for the promotion of holiness!

- - - A man named Fisher, in Australia has set up a new religion. He is the incarnation of Christ, and, also, of David. Indeed, he says every person now living is the incarnation of some Bible character, good or bad. Thus we have another error growing out of immaterialism. He, also, teaches and practices bigamy.

- - - In Mifflin, Juniata, and Snyder Counties, Pennsylvania, are large numbers of a singular sect called Omish. These people somewhat resemble the Dunkers in their religious belief; but their customs include many peculiarities characteristic to themselves alone. They exceed the Quakers in their efforts to attain simplicity of dress. The men fasten their attire with hooks and eyes, and look upon buttons as an abomination in the sight of the godly. The Omish girls wear a blue cotton dress, the waist of which comes just below the arm-pits, while their heads are covered with close-fitting white skull caps, which give their faces a ghastly appearance. They have no poor; they are not only thrifty but charitable, never refusing to entertain a stranger without money and without price. They forswear all things that partake of worldly vanity, practise the rite of baptism by immersion, and celebrate the Last Supper in mutton broth.

- - - A circular has just been issued by the Evangelical Alliance, calling upon Christians of all nations throughout the world to make arrangements for setting apart the week commencing January 7, 1872, for special humiliation, thanksgiving, and prayer. In the course of an address upon the subject of universal prayer, the circular says:—"Christians throughout the world have been accustomed for many years past, and with increasing encouragement and advantage, to consecrate the week, commencing with the first Sunday in January, to united supplication. Day by day in that week they have been brought into sympathy with each other's wants, and duties and trials, with each other's union in Christ, each other's privileges, and with each other's participation in Divine and eternal realities." The circular, after suggesting suitable topics for exhortation and prayer upon the successive days of meeting, touches upon the necessity of united prayer, especially for heathen lands, and cites the astounding fact, that while 500,000,000 of the entire population of the world consists of Protestants, Roman Catholics, Greeks, Jews, and Mahomedans, the other 788,000,000 are entirely Pagan.

- - - The Bavarian government has issued a circular against the Papal party condemning their proceedings against Dollinger and others, who would not submit and recognize the dogma of infallibility. It declared the dogma to be an innovation dangerous and adverse to the interests of the State. It upholds the royal right of the placetum, and promises its protection to those who may incur the displeasure of the Episcopate by their resistance to the new dogma. The Bavarian government upholds the principle that the Bavarian Archbishops and Bishops are subject, like every one else, to the laws of the kingdom. The danger threatening the constitution and the violation by the Bishops of the laws of the kingdom force the government to measures which it would have liked to avoid. It will refuse its assistance to the propagation of the new doctrine, and the carrying out of those provisions which may be made in consequence of the new doctrine. It will hold fast to the principle that decisions which the Church authorities might take with regard to those who do not recognize the new dogma can have no effect in civil and political matters, and, if necessary, it will take measures to insure the independence of members of the church against clerical pressure."

in the resurrection of the two classes. They that sow to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting; while they who sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption. Hence he says of the righteous (1 Cor. 15: 52) they shall be raised incorruptible, or immortal; not be raised as they went down, and afterward be changed.

In conclusion, if we have not met our friend's point, we shall be glad to hear from him again. Meanwhile, we think he would find great satisfaction in perusing Mr. Constable's work upon the future punishment, where the subject is treated at greater length than is possible for us in the columns of a weekly paper.

TO THE CHRISTIAN RADICAL.

Will this journal be kind enough to say to its readers that the passage it credits to us in its issue for Sept. 9 was not ours, but belongs to one of our correspondents. We do not pretend to endorse every sentiment uttered by our correspondents; nor can we believe that the Radical allows no one to speak in its columns whose views do not exactly coincide with its own. And if we should reprove it at some length because of a correspondent's sentiments, we opine the Radical would change its opinion of us, and pronounce us "pert," but not "keen."

Moreover the Radical should do our correspondent justice, who while opening somewhat carelessly, did bring out and enforce a great truth; his summing up being, that the conflict between true science and the Bible is apparent and not real; and that the Scriptures contain infallible truth, to which all theories of men must ultimately conform.

The Radical's picture of us "racking our brains," "fruitlessly wasting time" in "the business of harmonizing," is not from life. It has misunderstood. Suppose it give to its readers our correspondent's article, which called forth its lecture!

OUR GENERAL MEETING.

The time is approaching for the postponed Annual Meeting of the Western Association. There have been only two places mentioned for it—Buchanan and Chicago. We are now waiting upon the Chicago church for a decision in the matter; and as soon as it is rendered we shall call the meeting at once—probably about the last of November or first of December.

Our own choice for the place of meeting would be Buchanan. We would prefer to have our friends come here and see our office, our management, our methods of conducting business. We should feel better about it, and are quite confident they would, also.

But Chicago has many advantages for such a gathering, especially in the fact that a more general gathering would be ensured. We hope to see a gathering of the brethren and sisters who have the cause in the field we occupy really at heart, and feel willing to devote the necessary time to the discussion and examination of its business; hear what has been done, and judge what is best to do hereafter.

There will be plenty of time devoted to preaching and prayer and conference. But there is business that should be attended to; and it is just as much a religious duty to attend to this business properly and in full as it is to preach, exhort, sing and pray.

Let all, then, who desire the prosperity of the cause be in attendance, "not slothful in business," yet "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

HOW TO TELL.

The supplement which we send out this week we trust will prove all the bill we shall have to send to any of our subscribers. Many are in arrears. One forgets it in one place, and another in another place, and by the time "forgetting" has been practiced in more than twenty States, it becomes quite a serious matter with us.

But says one, How can I tell how my account stands? We answer, by the date on the little label on your paper, which bears your name. For instance, if it reads 1 Jan. 72—then you are paid to next January. If 15 Mar. 71—then you owe since last March. If 12 June 70—then you owe since the twelfth of June, 1870. In short, you are paid to the date which appears upon your label.

If four thousand subscribers would make their labels read "72," we would make improvements in THE TIMES, which as things are we can only hope for sometime in the future, should time last.

Consult your label, and save us the expense of sending out bills. Last year it cost us quite an item to send bills to delinquents. But as we have remarked, we trust every delinquent will look upon our supplement this week as all the dun or bill any one should need.

"GOOD TIDINGS."

ANOTHER NEW BOOK.

Our readers will remember that the General Conference at Rochester, two years ago, requested six brethren to prepare for publication a work treating upon the leading points of Adventism. These were Wm. Sheldon, S. G. Mathewson, John Couch, Miles Grant, H. G. McCullock and J. V. Himes.

As time rolled on, some modifications of the original plan became necessary, and the literary labor finally devolved upon four brethren, instead of six, and the General Conference Committee placed the matter in the hands of one man for publication; a brother whom they knew to be responsible, and who will devote whatever profits may arise (if there should be any) from the sale of the book, to the distribution of the book itself and other reading matter to the best advantage.

Though the work does not contain all that was originally designed for its pages, nevertheless it is a book that will command attention and be read with interest everywhere by all wishing to investigate Bible truth. Upon its merits, then, we bespeak for it a wide circulation. Let it be read by all Adventists, and loaned or given away by them in large numbers. Let us rally and take up the first edition in a few weeks.

PRICES: In cloth, per dozen, by express, $8; in paper, $4. Single copies, cloth, $1; paper, 50c., post-paid. Orders for large or small quantities promptly filled at this office.

FIRE! FIRE!

HOW TO PUT IT OUT!

Many a house or barn has been burned that might have been saved had some simple, easily-managed means for quenching the flames been at hand; and for many years inventors have been studying the problem of a portable, convenient and effective fire-extinguisher. After several failures, which have, we fear, dampened the public faith in the possibility of obtaining a reliable extinguisher, a complete success has been attained at last; and in the BABCOCK FIRE EXTINGUISHER we have the desirable article which we have described above.

We speak editorially upon this subject because we wish our readers to understand that we fully endorse the advertisement of the Extinguisher, which appears in another column, and believe we are doing them a favor in calling their attention to it. We never pass our own Extinguisher, in its place in our office, without feeling an additional sense of security beyond what we have ever felt before.

The Extinguisher has been the means of checking a multitude of conflagrations, and has saved, we believe, millions of dollars, not only to those owning machines, but to their neighbors also. In short, it is simple, effective, and fully deserves its name, The Fire Extinguisher!

We are prepared to furnish the Extinguisher to our subscribers upon favorable terms; especially where the people of a place club together and procure a number of them. Don't wait till your premises are on fire to get one; but procure an Extinguisher at once, and be prepared when the fire comes.

PROPHETIC CHART.

The frequent calls for a map of the symbolic prophecies, for the use of lecturers, have led us to plan one more Prophetic Chart, which, if published, will be the finest thing of the kind ever offered to the church.

As a publication of this character involves a large outlay, and can, in any event, but little more than repay its cost, we propose to issue it upon the basis of a subscription, and shall not commence work upon it until a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to secure the Association from any loss.

All our experience in publishing charts, in the past, will be brought into play, to make this the perfect and complete chart. It will contain illustrations of Dan. ch. 2 (the image); 7 (the four beasts); 8 and 9 (the ram and he-goat and the 2300 days and prophetic weeks); Christ's great prophecy in Mat. 24; Rev. chs. 5–7 (the seals); chs. 8–11 (the trumpets, and two witnesses); ch. 12 (the woman, the child and dragon); ch. 13 (the leopard and two-horned beasts); ch. 16 (the vials); ch. 17 (the scarlet beast); etc., etc.

The prophetic periods will be illustrated, but not in a manner to confine them to any special dates. But they will be so arranged that any lecturer can adapt them to his own views of their rise and termination.

In short we purpose to make it invaluable to every preacher upon prophecy; a help to church and ministry that no Advent chapel can afford to do without; and that will be a preacher in every household where it is hung up.

We wish for one hundred subscribers, to ensure its financial success; but will commence work upon it as soon as FIFTY RESPONSIBLE NAMES are secured.

TERMS.—$10 for a single chart; one half to be paid when work on the chart commences, and the remainder upon delivery.

We trust this liberal proposition will meet a prompt and equally liberal response. Let ministers bring the subject before the churches, and take collections, or pledges to secure its speedy issue. Let brethren who are able subscribe in behalf of preachers who are not able to buy one. Let us obey the prophetic injunction, to "write the vision, and make it plain upon tables," after a fashion that shall command the attention and respect of all to whom the chart may be displayed. Let us hear from all interested, at once.

ADDRESS, ADVENT TIMES, Buchanan, Mich. tf.

CORRECTION.

By an editorial mistake, the appointment for the dedication at Auburn, Ill. was published last week for October 19. It should have been October 12. See notice. Let there be a general rally in all that region.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We learn that three Baptist ministers and a number of other brethren are to be tried next Saturday, for heresy, before a Baptist Association in Central Illinois. The heresy is Adventism, or "Soul-sleeping." We understand the prospect is favorable for their being all "turned out." We shall await the decision with interest.———We learn that the Campmeetings East have been excellent. Alton Bay, quite the rival of Springfield in size and interest, never saw a better meeting. The Connecticut meeting, at Plainville, is pronounced the best ever held in the State.——— We notice that Br. and Sr. Mansfield have appointments at Portsmouth, N. H. Sept. 26 27, and at Manchester Oct. 1. We understand they will visit Castleton and Sandy Hill.———An Advent chapel is to be dedicated in Chelsea, Mass. next Thursday; and a Hall at Highlandville next Friday.———The Connecticut Annual Conference will meet at Bristol, Oct. 18.———Eld. Grant commenced a protracted meeting at St. Johnsbury, Vt. the 14th. We trust he may have even more than his usual success. It is quite a new field.———The brethren in the adjoining corners of Mass. and Vt., and close by in N. Y. have determined to organize a Conference. The call is signed by seven preachers. It is a good move, and has our prayers for its success. The Conference will convene at Hoosick, N. Y. Oct. 12. A full attendance from all the region is desirable.———The church at Springwater, N. Y. have about completed their new chapel. The Editor of THE TIMES has been invited to the dedication, early in November; but previous engagements may deprive him of the pleasure of attending. ———We learn that the new chapel in Springville, Wis. will be dedicated in November—probably by Br. P. W. Hough and Eld. J. V. Himes.———The Arena, Wis., tent-meeting last week was a success, like most Wisconsin meetings. Twelve baptized, and others to be.———An old veteran, is a brother in Indianapolis, from whom we have just heard, who says: "Thirty years ago I commenced investigating these views, and for twenty-five years I have advocated them in private life. "We hope for a better acquaintance."———Br. Phelps is in LeRoy, N. Y., with the State Mission Tent. Two were converted early in the meeting. Brs. Fenn and W. E. Brown are efficient co-workers. We would like to accept an invitation to attend: but it is utterly impossible for us to do so. ———The friends at Volga, Ind. and vicinity, Br. and Sr. Tibbet's neighborhood, expect to organize a church soon. Some new converts, others driven out of the Baptist church.——— A brother in the ministry writes: It is hard getting subscribers for our papers. People say they are too poor to take them. But they appear to have many other things they could much better go without. A true saying.——— At East Randolph, N. Y. the scene of the debate which we are reporting through THE TIMES, the brethren are refitting a chapel and will soon have a comfortable place of worship. They wish preaching brethren to call and help them in word and doctrine.———Br. Hill writes from Benton Co. Ark., that Eld. Corey, of the Disciples, is proclaiming in that section essentially the same doctrine that Adventists hold, though he has never heard of us, but formed his opinions from study of the Scriptures. He is well in years, but we trust he may see, yet, much fruit of his labors. ——— Dr. Bowman, of South Carolina, has commenced his work as an Advent Evangelist. At his first appointment he organized a church of 31 members. He has reasonable hope of similar success in at least nine other places on the same circuit. The meetings are all held out of doors, because no house will hold the people. The excitement is intense. We shall send the doctor next week the last installment of about $30 worth books and tracts, some paid for by individuals the rest from our tract fund. We shall soon have a Conference in South Carolina.——— The debate between Br. G. W. Green and Eld. Treat, of the Disciples, came off according to appointment at Harrisonville, Ind. Our friends feel well satisfied with the result. Br. G. stood alone. Treat was backed by some twelve or fifteen ministers, and from all we hear did not conduct himself in an entirely Christian manner, sometimes forgetting but that abuse and sneers are argument.———Br. Kent has baptized four and Br. Morphy two souls since the campmeeting, making fourteen as the immediate fruit of the meeting.——— The Noble township church, Homig, S. H. Iowa, was recently organized by Br. W. Morphy. Six members.———The Northern District of the Indiana Conference will hold a Q. M. at Union Mills, Oct 28. This is old ground, and a good time is anticipated. Arrange to go—you who are within reach.

AT HOME.

— — — New York is better off than we dared hope, and there is some prospect of its city government being cleansed without a resort to a 'vigilance committee.' Judge Barnard granted an injunction forbidding the present officials to pay out any more money. Comptroller Connoly has resigned, and an honest man now fills his place. Other changes will be effected as speedily as possible. Meanwhile the city debt, as far as can be ascertained, is about $116,000,000, possibly more. And how much of this sum has gone into the pockets of dishonest officials no one can tell. Let us hope that the worst is past.

ABROAD.

— — — Rochefort has been sentenced to a penal colony for life, for his part in the communal insurrection.

— — — The German army is to be placed upon a peace-footing—only 400,000 men. Along with this report we have a prediction of war between Germany and Russia within six months.

— — — It appears that the total forces available for war purposes in Europe, taking the English disposable forces at 470,770 men and 336 guns, is 5,164,800 men, 518,804 horses, 10,224 guns, and about 800 mitrailleuses.

— — — Sweden appears to have taken the general European alarm and is talking of reorganizing its military system. Sweden has only a small army—about 130,000 men, in addition to volunteers and free-shooters. The "regulars" or reserves are distributed in the cantons, and earn their living by working for the landed proprietors, but are obliged to drill one month each year. In comparison with the Prussian military machine, or even the British thirteen thousand men who lately marched to Sandhurst and then marched back again, it must be seen that the army of Sweden is rather undisciplined, and would not be very effective even as a home guard in case of invasion.

— — — Seven thousand persons in Tortola, W. I. lost their homes by the late hurricane and earthquake.

— — — Since Napoleon lived and died in St. Helena, that island has been pursued by misfortune. Such, indeed, has been the unremitting character of the disasters that have occurred there as almost to justify superstition concerning it. In the latter part of July, the final term of a long catalogue of woes, St. Helena was almost literally washed away by floods. Five hundred of the inhabitants were swept out of their houses and lost everything they possessed. All the roads were destroyed, and the island is now said to be uninhabitable. A Local Commission is inquiring into ways and means for bettering the condition of things; but people are going away fast, and it seems not impossible that St. Helena may become the desolate and solitary rock that it once was and has been so often sung.

— — — Probably few persons (says the Pall Mall Gazette) are aware of the extent of the encroachments made by the sea upon the east coast of Yorkshire. The Rev. F. G. Morris has calculated that there is an average loss of two or three yards of land every year, and that in round numbers about thirty-nine acres disappear annually between Spurn Point and Flamborough Head alone. Ravenspurn was once an important seaport, and returned a member to the Parliaments of Edward I., but when Bolingbroke landed there in 1399 it was little more than a name, and by the end of the next century had wholly disappeared. Auburn, Hartburn, and Hyde are villages which exist only in old maps and documents; and Kilnsea, which lost its church in 1826, seems likely soon to follow the fate of its neighbors.

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

JOURNEYING SOUTH.

MONDAY, Sept. 4. Leaving Amboy, Ill., came to Urbana, via Bloomington, on the I. B. & W. R. R., which under the persevering labors of Hon. C. R. Griggs has proved a great success. Here I had a short visit with my son Arthur, who is residing for the present in this place. I had the pleasure of meeting John M. Gregory, L.L. D., the popular Regent of the Illinois Industrial University, at Champaign. He is building up this institution. There are now about 300 students. It is no doubt the best institution of the kind in the country. They are putting up new buildings for the accommodation of 1,000 students. Poor young men can work their way through, if so disposed, and get the best education by their own industry.

At 3 p. m. (Tuesday) left for Jonesboro, and put up on my arrival early Wednesday morn with Br. F. A. Child. Br. C. and family had just returned from the camp-meeting at Amboy—the first they had attended since they joined the Advent church. They enjoyed it much. These meetings richly repay all the sacrifice we make for them. Many others would be the gainers if they would but make a little sacrifice of time and money, and attend these great feasts. They are a wonderful help to the cause of Christ.

Knowing their value, the Adventists of nearly all the Western States have established them. We are scattered over a wide territory, but these meetings are increasing in numbers, strength and usefulness every year.

In the p. m. rode out to Dr. Woelfle's, and after visits with him and some of the sick, he took me to Eld. J. S. Lawver's, making in all a ride in the hot sun and dust of about thirteen miles. We had a warm welcome. And after we had talked over the affairs of the good cause for awhile, we retired for our needed rest.

THURSDAY, Sept. 7. I am now in the fruit region of Southern Illinois. They have had a bountiful harvest. Br. Lawver has shared with the rest in its rich blessings.

Spent most of the day in Br. L.'s library. He has spent nearly a thousand dollars in procuring a select, valuable and useful class of books. And besides this he has a good selection of papers and periodicals. And what is better, he scans them, and posts himself in all that is valuable and practical. Many with a large fruit farm like his, and a family growing up, would say they had no time for the study of books and papers. But not so with him. There is no excuse for living in indolence or ignorance in these days of time. All should be awake, and up and doing, for now, as never before, "what our hands find to do, should be done with our might," that we may be ready to meet the Master.

Society in this part of Illinois may be considered behind the times, in literary and other advantages, such as are enjoyed by the people further north. But things are fast improving, and this will not always be called Egypt. The state of society is not favorable to the progress of Advent views, as people read or investigate but little, and especially in the Bible, and the prophecies relating to the last times. Br. L. is circulating Advent books and tracts among them, and doing all he can to rouse them. In some cases he is successful; but cannot yet move any considerable numbers, as has been done in some other communities. But we must let our light shine wherever we are, and speak to the people the whole truth, whether they will hear or forbear.

I find that Eld. Clark Braden has labored considerably in this region, and with some success. The presentation, and repetition of the first principles of Alexander Campbell's theory of Christianity can be made to reach the masses who do not read or study much for themselves. And such persons become exceedingly tenacious of the peculiarities of Mr. Campbell's theory, not to say sectarian. This class are hard to reach or enlighten. Br. Lawver was of this denomination, but one who read and thought for himself. And when he saw the light, he "conferred not with flesh and blood," but grasped it, and walked in its light. Eld. Braden used to put up with Br. L. often before he left for Nebraska. He speaks of him as an excellent Christian man, and withal the best debater, and one of the best scholars among them. We expect, perhaps this fall, to give our readers the pleasure of an acquaintance with Br. Braden, as he is to hold a discussion with us on the merits of the great principles and doctrines of the nature and destiny of man.

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT,

I think, is reviving among us. And this must be, if we are right. The symbolic "angel in mid heaven" must proclaim more and more widely, with a loud voice, to all nations and kindreds, and tongues—"the hour of judgment is come."

I am pleased to learn to-day that Br. and Sr. Fassett are going to California to publish the gospel of the kingdom there. And hearing of this I was struck with the remarkable fact that with Br. F. the missionaries in California would be made up of three families: Br. D. D. Reed and wife, Br. R. W. Wilson and wife, and Br. O. R. Fassett and wife. All without children to care for, and free to give their whole time to the missionary work.

Brn. Reed and Wilson largely sustain themselves, and seek to be chargeable to none. I trust those who are benefitted by their labors will not forget them. Br. Fassett is entirely dependent upon those with whom he toils; and he and his wife are worthy of the most generous support. Let the hands of those who receive the gospel from them be open to supply their wants.

I am well acquainted with all these families. And I do not think that three others could be found among us who stand higher in moral and Christian purity and worth, than they. Besides, they are Adventists, and more, are not ashamed of the name that represents the great doctrine they advocate—the coming of the Lord. We can all pray for and give our undivided support to these excellent families, who go towards the setting sun with the good news of Jesus' coming. And let those who stay at home, see to it that our Missionary Board have the means to sustain those who go abroad. In our mission work, as in everything, we must be a united people, in order to succeed. What one plants, another must water, and so build up in health and peace.

This p. m. Br. Lawver took me to the residence of Justice Pierce, with whom we took supper. He is not a professor of religion, but is rather balancing between the Bible doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, and the idea of salvation of all men. He would be glad to see a way to save all. We had a pleasant call, after which he went with us to Anna, and heard my lecture at night.

The Presbyterian house in Anna was kindly opened to us, and some of that people were in attendance. We sincerely thank them for this public favor, especially, as no other door was opened to us. I spoke upon the meek, and their inheritance.

SATURDAY, Sept. 9. With Brn. Child and Thomasson rode under a burning sun, and blinding dust, eighteen miles over the rough hills of Union Co. to Mount Joy, the place of our Sunday appointment. Eld. Thomasson has labored here among the farmers with some success, and we have come out to help him.

This region is well settled by industrious farmers, who make a good living, and some do more than this. Their school and religious advantages are not the best. Some have received the doctrine of the Adventists, but in doing so have to meet with opposition from those who are yet in darkness, and oppose the light because they do not as yet understand it. But light is spreading. As yet, the labors of the Advent ministers have been gratuitous. Br. Thomasson, since he lost his horse, has traveled on foot over this rough country, and continued faithfully to proclaim the coming of the Lord. Such men will not fail of their reward.

We put up with Br. Thomas Calhoun. At the edge of the evening, after making some calls, it being clear, warm and very pleasant, Brn. Child, and Thomasson, myself, and several of the neighbors, sat down in the dooryard, where we held an interesting discussion and conversation on religious topics, and the doctrines pertaining to our hope. We closed up in the twilight with prayer, and retired to sweet sleep.

SABBATH, Sept. 10. I spoke during the day in a log meeting-house, Mount Joy, built by the Protestant Methodists, with the help of the community. It is open to others when not in use by them. It is large and convenient, and was well filled to-day by the people from six to ten miles around. The house is a model of simplicity, and free from all signs of human pride. If the people could be as simple and good, it would be well.

The audience, as I have said, came from a distance, and most of them can attend but one service, and they want this to be of full length and thorough. A short sermon would not satisfy here. It must be from one to three hours long, or it will not pay for coming. I had full liberty for an hour and a-half, and had fixed attention to the end. We had a seed time, and look for a harvest, also. Prophetic truth was received and appreciated to-day. I enjoyed the pulpit, and did not care to leave it, but we have other duties that must be attended to.

In the p. m. I spoke on the terrestrial and celestial signs of the Lord's coming, showing it to be nigh. Brn. Child and Thomasson followed, and closed this interesting day among the people of the hills of "Lower Egypt," as it is called. Br. Child is to hold other meetings here, and we shall have a general gathering of all the Adventists in this vicinity, about the first of November, to consider the propriety of organizing in this southern portion of the State.

This people are something like those of West Virginia, where Br. S. P. Whitney labors. People who have not been among them, or lived with them, can hardly understand their condition. I remark that domestic life among the hills is quite different from that in our cities, or in the more favored parts of the land. I have observed in West Virginia, and in this hilly country a difference in the mode of life, and in the manners and morals of the people.

And, first, as to their plain mode of living. The houses are small, chiefly of logs, and open. The air has a free circulation. Furniture is suited to actual wants of the family. They live plain, but some of the food is rich, cooked up in grease and bacon. Coffee is always used. Many live in only one room with their families, and their guests share this department with them. But care is taken to preserve the proprieties of life, and care for the comfort of all. It is remarkable to witness the economical arrangements of these good housewives in providing for from five to ten in one small room. I find things neat and cleanly, and in good order. And they seem to be happy and enjoy life. Those who profess religion have their prayer and family devotions. Their wants are few, and they are contented, looking to the next life for their real and final home.

I find most of the families in these isolated portions of the country with a numerous offspring. They have from five to ten children in each. Fœticide is hardly known, and is looked upon with horror. There may be exceptions, but the state of feeling and the practice on this subject is very different from that which exists in the cities, where there are professional and skillful murderers advertised in the public papers. This sin is as prevalent in our professedly Christian cities as in heathen lands! And yet we are told that the world is growing better!

The rising generation here is healthy and vigorous, and seem to be endowed with gifts and talents that would give them an equal position with those in more favored localities, were the same advantages to be enjoyed.

The people of the country should not be neglected. The gospel should be carried to them; and though it may cost some sacrifice, and hard labor, we should not shrink from it. Many of our best people are in the rural districts. Our chief strength is there. Let our brethren who hang about the cities and towns, and fail to get a hearing, go out among the honest yeomanry, and they will have crowds to hear, and some to receive the gospel.

The field in Southern Illinois is open. God has raised up brethren Thomasson, Child, Lawver, and Spann, with others, and the good work is now begun, Br. Spann has gone into Arkansas to spread the truth there.

MONDAY, Sept. 11. Came to Anna, where I received my mail, and passed on to Cairo, on my way to Arkansas. The weather is hot, and the land is powder and dust. But I have good health, and good cheer for my work.

Family Camp-Meeting, No. 3.

NEAR OSSEO, WIS.

The Spirit of God pervaded the meeting, and we were all comforted. Brethren and sisters gathered from far and near. Some forty testified to the saving efficacy of the precious blood of Jesus, and as many sat at the table to commemorate the death of our blessed Jesus. The meeting lasted over three days, and we had some blessed seasons of prayer and exhortation. Br. Hough opened the meeting by prayer, and dedicated the tent and ground to the Lord. Br. Keach preached the first discourse, from Rev. 22: 12—"Behold I come quickly," &c. Br. Sielk at eve. spoke from Mat. 11: 28—"Come unto me all ye that labor," etc. This brother was very strong on the immortality of the soul, but was so much taken up with Eld. Hough's preaching at the other camp-meeting, that he followed on to this, to hear more. But the gospel of the kingdom preached by Elds. Hough, Turner and Keach was so different from what he expected, that it overthrew all his ideas of the subject, and left him so embarrassed in his views, that rather than give up that he was mortal, he rejected the light and left us in a bewildered state of mind.

After several sermons by others, Br. Hough took the Book on Saturday morning. We let him rest until then. He is an industrious and faithful servant; an old veteran who has fought these many years for the truth. He was with us in all our exercises, but now we had the pleasure of hearing him once more, upon prophecy. We saw very clearly from his expositions of Daniel and John, that the day dawns and our redemption draweth nigh. He is very clear upon prophecy, and I heard many speaking in glowing terms of the discourse.

Br. Turner spoke in the afternoon from Rom. 5: 1-5. The elder went through the subject manfully, and as a workman that need not be ashamed. In the evening Eld. Hough finished his discourse on prophecy.

Sabbath was a beautiful day, and we had a good and precious time in love-feast; some forty testified to God's goodness. If we older ones would not be quite so lengthy in our remarks, on such occasions, I think it would be better: then the more would get a chance to speak; and what cheers us most is to hear from the timid ones. Let us remember this: that where there are from fifty to two hundred that wish to testify to the goodness of God, that it is not right to intrude on the time that rightfully belongs to them. There was quite a large attendance this Sabbath morning, and Eld. Hough held their attention for an hour, speaking from Mat. 6: 10—"Thy kingdom come." Truly there is power in the gospel, and the blessed Bible is in harmony when handled skilfully and allowed to be its own interpreter. In the afternoon, from 1 Cor. 15: 24, Br. Hough proved conclusively that when we pray "thy kingdom come," we really pray for Christ to come, personally, and destroy the kingdoms of this world, and reign, himself, on David's throne.

Br. Turner preached the closing discourse, after which we sat down to the table of our Master, cheering one another with words of encouragement. There was something of an opposing element in our meeting, but we did not allow any debating on disputed points in our service. But Eld. Hough stands ready to try the question at the right time and place. The truth will stand. We have reason to praise God that the truth is making rapid advances in this region; and if time lasts there will be a better meeting next year if we all put our shoulder to the wheel and do our duty. T. W. RICHARDS.

The Illinois Evangelist.

Br. Himes: I wish to say a word to the brethren scattered through this State concerning the support of the "Illinois Evangelist." The calls for him to go and labor are numerous. Many are anxious for him to go with the tent to their neighborhoods and labor for a week or so in the hopes of raising up an interest. But these calls are mostly from new places, from which the Evangelist could expect to receive at most only a very small remuneration for his services. And if he spends his time in the work he must be supported. He does not desire a large salary, but he wants a livelihood. This he deserves. I therefore appeal in this manner to the liberality of the brethren in Illinois, who love the cause, to give of their means to help sustain this good work. Who will make a free will offering unto the Lord? Some have done nobly; let others follow their examples.

Yours in the "Blessed Hope,"
C. C. MARSTON.

From Wm Roworth New York City, Sept 1

I was in Detroit with my dear wife this summer, and made inquiry to see if I could find any Advent friends, and could not. All I could do was to scatter tracts and exhibit the chart in my daughter's house. I think if a tent could be pitched there some good might be done. The people are given up to fables. I heard a preacher—at the large Methodist church give a sermon on the Conversion of the World; and my heart was pained to hear such awful perversions of Scripture; such as Is. 11: 54; and ch. 60; ch. 2 and Micah ch. 4. Also, to cap the climax, he quoted Ezk. 21: 25, 26, and said the Lord would "overturn overturn" all the obstacles in the way of the spread of the gospel. He said he would drive through thunder and every thing which obstructed its progress; and in 130 years the Millennium would come; as he said the 1000 years would then end. So much for his knowledge of Chronology. But the people drank it all in as very fine. Truly it may be said of these shepherds, as the Lord said of those in Jeremiah 23: 15: "The Lord hath given them the water of poppies [as it reads in my Bible] to drink; and they have become stupified." Well, the people love to have it so. How important it is to lift up the standard of truth, which I rejoice you are doing, with your fellow laborers, "out West."

From P W Hough.

The camp meeting at Osseo was a good one. I was happily surprised to see how well the churches at Brunswick, Osseo and Augusta had held on to the precious truth. It was cheering to hear the testimonies for Jesus. And yet they have had very little preaching for more than a year past, except what they get from the Bible first, and then from THE TIMES, and Crisis.

From a Brother on trial for Heresy.

The Immaterialists here take the ground that God first made a male and female in his spirit image. Afterwards, seeing there was not a man to till the ground, he made of the dust a house or tent to put the previously created spirits in that they might do that work. And according to what I heard a few days since, Adam had two immortal entities placed in him. It seems to me, that if man is immortal after sinning, that God must have shown him the wrong tree—the Tree of Life instead of the Tree of death.

From B J Goodwin Chickasaw Co Iowa.

I am still trusting in the Lord, and looking and longing for the appearing of his Son from heaven, who is the author of eternal salvation to all who obey him. (Rom. 5: 9.) I feel a great interest in that event, which I rejoice to think is so nigh. Why should I not, and every one who obeys him? For when he appears, we shall also appear with him in glory. (Col. 3: 4.) Our lot in this life is tribulation. (John 16: 33; Acts 14: 22.) The nearer I try to keep to the word of the Lord, the more I need the consolation afforded by such passages as the above. My political friends now censure me because I refuse to identify myself with them by voting, &c. I choose to pass the time of my sojourning here in fear, as a stranger and a pilgrim, and enjoy the hope of an eternal inheritance in the world to come, rather than to enjoy the praise of men in this life, and lose the crown of eternal life in the world to come.

It requires a greater sacrifice to be a Christian than I once thought. Let us study the Scriptures, for in them we "think we have eternal life; and they are they which testify of" Jesus, in keeping of whose commands there is great reward, even the reward of eternal life. What a blessed lot will be the lot of those who are found in love, watching for the appearing of the Lord from heaven, when he comes to reward his saints. O that I may be of that happy number who shall be accounted worthy to enter into the kingdom prepared for all the faithful.

From O O Marston, St Charles, Ill Sept 10.

Our tent meeting in this place commenced last Wednesday, and has continued till the present time with a constantly rising interest. The attendance to-day has been large, and good attention has been given to the word. We feel to thank God and take courage.

The people here are much prejudiced against us. The "Age-to-come" element has been no advantage to the cause we represent. But as the strangers become better acquainted with us and find out that we believe in genuine godliness and true, every-day piety etc., they will evercome their prejudice and learn to love us. This in a measure is already accomplished. Br. Clark and I find it pleasant to be associated together in the gospel harness. May the Lord bless our feeble efforts to do good in the last moments of time.

SEPT. 17. Our meetings have been very interesting to-day. Many were out to hear the word. In the morning I attended the Congregational church and heard the pastor, according to previous announcement, deliver a "sermon" on "Immortal-soul-ism." It was a tremendous effort. He said, "if man had no immortal soul, God made a great blunder in creating him," many other such like arguments (?) were produced to prove man's dual nature, but no Scriptural evidence was given. I took notes of his discourse, and this eve. reviewed it at the tent. There was deep interest manifested in the truth. I leave the meeting in the midst of a growing and ripe interest, to prepare for the "woods" meeting in LaSalle Co.

From Lizzie P Berry. Anita, Iowa.

Truly the Lord is blessing this people and the Bride is making herself ready. To the praise of God we can bring a good report of the campmeeting in Page Co., Iowa, which was well attended by the brethren and sisters in this part of the country. Many came long distances in their covered wagons and buggies. There were about thirty-five from this county. The meeting was about fifty miles from here. Br. Morphy and others prepared a tent twenty feet square, with a fly roof, which was perfectly dry inside, even during a heavy shower we had on the first Sabbath.

Br. L. C. Collins was with us, and did a good share of the preaching, by the help of the Lord. The brethren and friends I think were all much pleased and satisfied. I think we all would be glad and rejoice if the Methodists would "turn out" many more just such men as he. The meetings partook somewhat of the spirit of his preaching—not exciting or noisy, but a calm, deep solemn feeling pervaded the encampment. There was no confusion or disturbance of any kind. Some were converted, and eight put on Christ by baptism, led down into the liquid grave by Br. Morphy. I think we can safely say it was the best meeting of the kind we ever attended, and many feel that the good spirit and fruits of this campmeeting will long be felt in this section of country, as a new impetus has been given to the cause of truth here. Some from other churches were there and confessed that we had the truth. One Campbelite preacher publicly and fearlessly acknowledged that Adventists had the truth; and though he expected his church would withdraw their support from him on account of his attending the meetings and embracing our views, yet, he said, that as an honest man he must acknowledge the truth though he starved. He is a cripple, and dependent upon preaching for his support. May God bless him, and help him to walk out boldly upon his word, trusting fully in him who has promised to withhold no good thing from those who walk uprightly. Br. D. Q. Kent also preached to good acceptance. He is an earnest, faithful speaker, and cannot fail to do good wherever he labors. May we all be found with our work done when the Master comes to gather his waiting people. Then I hope to meet all the members of the great family of God in their long, last, glorious home, where "No tear will ever fall or heart be sad." No sickness or pain there, and every element of sorrow will disappear forever.

From Thomas Howell San Francisco Cal.

"Blessed be God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ." I told you in my last letter of the doings of the Seventh-day keepers in this city; how they caused some of our dear brethren to err from the faith of Jesus. I thank God the worst is past. They have done their utmost. We have passed through the trial of our faith, and have come out like gold tried with fire, and prepared to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free." Bless God. I begin to see the fruit of my labors among the brethren here.

Last Sunday evening we had a most blessed season in commemorating the death and sufferings of Jesus. Some were deeply convicted under the power of the Holy Spirit. We had a full house, and the prospect is getting brighter and brighter.

Br. Reed preached for me in the morning, and I went to the brethren in Vallejo. In the evening I had the pleasure of Br. Reed's company at the Lord's supper, for the first time. We spent such a time as never will be forgotten.

I have continued to preach for the brethren every Sunday. We have not missed one service. The Lord is giving me great liberty in preaching the word. Glory be to his name!

We expect Br. Fassett here next month. I believe the Lord has great things in store for us. The field is white for the harvest. I feel we must be doing quickly, for Jesus will soon come to deliver his people from death, and bestow upon them immortality and eternal life. I pray that we may be all ready to meet him with joy.

Last Sunday two weeks, I baptized three willing converts in the likeness of the Savior's death and resurrection.

We know it cannot be long before the Lord will descend with the voice of the archangel, and the trumpet of God; when every one of us shall appear before him, and give an account of his own works. "Wherefore behold; seeing ye look for these things," seeing ye know he will come, and not tarry, "be dilligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blemish." Why should ye not? Why should one of you be found on the left hand at his appearing? He willeth not that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; by repentance, to faith in a bleeding Lord; by faith, to spotless love; to the full image of God renewed in the heart, and producing all holiness of conversation. Can you doubt this, when you remember the judge of all is likewise the Savior of all? Hath he not bought you with his own blood, that ye might not perish, but have everlasting life? Oh! make proof of his mercy, rather than his justice, of his love rather than the thunder of his power! He is not far from every one of us; and he is now come not to condemn, but to save, the world. He standeth now even in the midst! Sinner, doth he not now, even now, knock at the door of thy heart? Oh? that thou mayest know, at least in this thy day, the things that belong unto peace! Oh! that ye may now give yourselves to him who gave himself for you, in humble faith, in holy, active, patient love! So shall ye rejoice with exceeding joy in his day, when he cometh in the clouds of heaven!

Anybody can soil the reputation of an individual, however pure and chaste, by uttering a suspicion that his enemies will believe and his friends never hear of. A puff of the idle wind can take a million of the seeds of a thistle and do a work of mischief which the husbandman must labor long to undo, the floating particles being too fine to be seen and too light to be stopped. Such are the seeds of slander, so easily sown, so difficult to be gathered up, and yet so pernicious in their fruits. The slanderer knows that many a mind will catch up the plague and become poisoned by his insinuations, without ever seeking the antidote. No reputation can refute a sneer, nor any human skill prevent mischief.—Sel.

Michigan.

NORTHERN DISTRICT.

The first Q. M. of the Northern District met at Hinton, Aug. 26. Brethren present: John Bower, Wm. Smith, N. Scott, L. S. Hulett, with Sr. Palmer, and others. Br. Warren was called to the chair, and Br. Leslie Bower appointed Secretary, pro tem. After the usual committees were appointed, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Eld J. Bower, Chairman, and Eld. E. B. Scott Sec'y. The representation of ministers and churches was small, but reports encouraging. Br. Branch and church at St. Johns reported by letter. Preaching by Br. Bower, Sr. Palmer, and Br. Smith. Thirty-seven sat down to the table of the Lord. We had a good season. Praise the Lord!

ANNUAL MEETING.

Commenced at Chase's Grove, Page Co., Iowa. The rain of Friday, Aug. 25, hindered many of the brethren from being there that eve., but by Saturday eve. there was a goodly number present. Sabbath afternoon we had a shower which prevented service at the stand; but services were held in two tents. This was the only service during the week which had to be held in the tents, on account of the weather.

Eld. L. C. Collins was present with us, and, we trust, his visit was made a blessing to all who attended the meeting. He endeared himself to all, and the prayers of many follow him. In preaching he was ably assisted by Elds. Hink, Kent and Dugger. A deep devotional feeling was manifest from the commencement of the meetings which deepened until its close. "Nearer my God to thee" seemed to be the prayer of each believer.

Early in the meeting some of the young people expressed a desire to become Christians, requesting prayers. Eight persons were baptised during the meeting, and six united with the Nodaway church. Many said that this was the best meeting they ever attended.

Some of us thought that it was a great undertaking to try to hold a campmeeting so far west; and feared it would be a failure. But we were most agreeably disappointed. God was with us and his word was blessed, the power of the spirit accompanying it. And we are determined to try again. It is our purpose to hold our next annual meeting at about the same place, and have a campmeeting in connection, if we are till then pilgrims and sojourners here.

The ministering brethren present were, L. C. Collins, D. O. Hink, D. Q. Kent, A. F. Dugger, Leander Rich, and William Morphy, beside Brn. Blanchard, and G. L. McClure, licensed.

Officers for the ensuing year: President, D. O. Hink; Vice Pres., H. Billmire; Secretary, Wm. Morphy; Treasurer, D. Q. Kent.

Ringgold Co. Reported by Eld. Dugger. Organized with 4, with prospect of an addition of 10 members.

The state of these churches as reported, is generally good. The exceptions are where they lack system and where they have no regular preaching. We hope to see these matters remedied soon. The ministers are laboring on as best they can. This field is large, the calls are many, the prospect for doing good encouraging. Yet there is a great deal of opposition. New places are being visited and doors are open. We are united, and, best of all, God is with us.

We have fifteen churches, and others ready to be organized. Our whole membership is about 260. We have ten ministers; seven ordained and three licensed. These are all in good standing. Certificates are annually given by the Conference. Quarterly meetings are held regularly in each of these districts.

The subject of procuring a large tent for the use of the Conference was discussed at this meeting, and it was decided to make the attempt. A committee of one in each district was appointed to solicit funds for this purpose.

A collection was taken up for the purchase of tracts for free distribution in this conference.

The Lord's Supper was administered on Sabbath eve, forty seven partaking. Through a misunderstanding some brethren came unprepared to stay until the close of the meeting, thus losing a great part of the feast. We hope this may not occur again.

One thing is clear, we can have a campmeeting if we try. That is proved. Another thing is quite as clearly proved. God will bless us and work through us if we are not faint-hearted, but reliant on him, and earnest in the work. Great results may yet be looked for from this meeting. Many heard the soul-stirring truths we hold, for the first time in their lives. The seed sown—will it not bear fruit? One minister of another name fraternized with us, who was lately an opposer, but now confesses to have seen new light from the preaching at this meeting. We earnestly hope to see him preaching the whole truth, ere long.

Brethren, let us sustain our annual and quarterly conferences. We have proved them to be blessed institutions. Make considerable sacrifices, if need be, to attend; and when you do attend, do what you can to make them a blessing. An outsider who has had considerable acquaintance with Adventists said to me lately, "An Adventist is either an earnest, busy worker or he is nothing at all." This witness is true. If we believe the Advent doctrine we will, we must work; and if we have not faith enough in it to move us to labor for the salvation of others, then we are worse than nothing in the cause. We furnish no motive power to help forward the car of salvation, but, worse than that, we are the brake or drag on the wheels. "Ye are the light of the world!" says Christ. Let us hold up the light, and the blessed Lord will bless us as he did at Chase's Grove.

WM. MORPHY, Sec'y.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Quarterly session just closed (Sept. 3, 1871), at South Butler N. Y. has proved a very interesting and profitable meeting. We think all felt it was good to be there.

The Address was given on the first eve. by Br. W. J. Hobbs, using the words—"Occupy till I come," as a foundation of remarks. A very fine delegation arrived to attend the first meeting, and the occasion was really one of unusual interest. The Lord seemed to be with us in truth, sanctioning our efforts for this place.

In business, there was the usual harmony of feeling, and unity of action, with despatch, decency and order. The first meeting was called to order by the President, Friday at 9 a. m. The following Committees were appointed. On business—M. R. Miles, W. J. Hobbs, J. H. Whitmore. —Devotional exercises: E. A. Bowe, J. S. Beeman, W. E. Brown.

The following ministers were present and reported their labors for the last quarter, viz: W. J. Hobbs, C. H. Williams, J. W. Taylor, S. C. Gove, J. B. Cook, E. S. Jennings, W. A. Fenn, E. F. Sergisson, D. Cogswell, J. H. Whitmore, M. R. Miles. Bro. Wm. Inguire, J. E. Wells, W. Vreeland, and H. H. Brown were also present, making fifteen ministers in all; and letters were read from A. A. Phelps and D. T. Taylor.

The following delegates reported and handed in the annexed quarterly collections, viz: E. A. Bowe Darien; W. J. Hobbs Springwater ($2.55); J. S. Beeman, Honeoye ($2.25); J. Phelan, Rochester ($7); E. Johnson and E. Sanderson, East Shelby ($5); A. Roberts, Wolcott, Dansville ($12) Lockport, ($4). Total: Collections $32.80, Individuals, $11.33: $44.33.

R. C. BROWN, Treas.

Br. Cogswell reported having disposed of the old tent for $25. $10 balanced the old account of Br. Fields, and the remaining $15 fell to the Conf. Fund.

The following resolutions were passed by a unanimous vote:

(1) Resolved, That this Conference regret the resignation of Br. G. M. Booth as master of the New York state tent; and in accepting it we express to him our appreciation of his past service.

(2) Resolved, That Br. Wm. E. Brown be appointed to the place vacated by Br. Booth.

(3) Resolved, That Br. Wm. A. Fenn be appointed associate of Br. Phelps in the conduct and management of meetings in the State tent. Adjourned.

During the p. m. session, on invitation of the church in Rochester it was voted to hold our next Q. M. with them. Br. M. R. Miles was appointed to deliver the opening address; Br. D. Cogswell his alternate. The following resolutions were offered and passed:

(1) Resolved, That a protracted meeting committee of three be appointed by the President, from the members of this Conference.

(2) Resolved, That it shall be the duty of said committee to arrange, and hold protracted meetings, or assist in arranging and holding such meetings, in such places, and at such times as they may think will best subserve the interest of the cause.

(3) Resolved, That this Conference is glad to learn that brethren in North eastern Pennsylvania and in Southern New York are about to organize Quarterly Conferences in their respective regions, and we cordially invite their co-operation with this body at our Annual Meetings.

The preaching was of an excellent spirit throughout, and the congregations were large and attentive. Our chapel proved too small, and the Disciples very kindly gave us the use of their house Saturday eve., and all day Sunday. Br. J. B. Cook preached Friday p. m., and J. W. Taylor spoke in the eve. Saturday a. m., we listened to Wm. Ingmire, from Eph. 3: 1–8, and in the p. m., J. H. Whitmore from Rom. 6: 23, in connection with John 5: 12. In the eve. Sr. E. S. Jennings spoke, giving the gospel according to Paul, 1 Cor. ch. 15. Sunday a. m. D. Cogswell gave a very interesting discourse from 2 Cor. 5: 10, after which the usual collection was taken up, and $55 was received, which was increased by individuals to $60; and the Committee report its disbursement as follows:

One minister—who came farthest, and also met with a loss—received $8; Seven $5 each, $35; five $3, $15; two $1, $2.

In the p. m. W. A. Fenn gave us a discourse from 1 Cor. 15: 22, and in the eve. J. B. Cook again from Rom. 15: 29.

Social meetings were interesting and we trust profitable seasons. Many were encouraged to a greater diligence and earnestness in the prosecution of our Christian work; and may the Lord help all to carry out the good resolutions there formed, very faithfully at home. The meeting closed on Sunday eve. with an interesting communion season, one hundred and forty-eight partaking together of those precious emblems which "show the Lord's death till he come."

A vote of thanks was tendered to the Disciple brethren for the use of their house, and to the citizens of the village for their kindness in entertaining strangers.

The Committee on protracted meetings as appointed by the President are as follows: Wm. A. Fenn, Rochester; M. R. Miles, Wolcott; E. F. Sergisson, Rochester.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 26, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: } Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

"Good Tidings."

The long looked for "Conference Book" has now appeared with the above title. See notice in another place, and send for a copy. $1. in cloth. 80c. in paper, postpaid.

The Good Way.

The next regular issue of the Good Way, will be in October. Orders will be promptly filled in the order that they are received. 75c a hundred. Special notices for any locality inserted, without extra charge, when not less than 500 copies are taken.

Send a Stamp.

When you write a letter which requires an answer, make it an invariable rule to enclose a stamp, to pay the postage on the reply. Editors and ministers, too — find their postage bills a heavy tax on their pockets.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

Advertise "The Times."

We furnish envelopes and paper bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, at the following prices:

Twenty five (25) envelopes, post-paid, 10c.—25 sheets flat note (2 pages) 15c.—25 sheets flat letter, 20c.—40 sheets of flat note and 25 envelopes, 25c.—40 sheets flat letter and 25 envelopes, 30c.—100 sheets of flat letter, 75c.—100 sheets flat note, 50c.

Rich Man and Lazarus.

We confess our surprise at the growing popularity of this new exposition of the parable of Dives and the beggar. By L. C. Collins, author of "An Address to the M. E. Conference of Minnesota." The first edition was exhausted ere we were aware. A new edition is now ready. 48 pp. 10c. by mail, pre-paid. By the quantity, a discount of 25 per cent. will be allowed. To those who wish a large number, strictly for distribution, we will make very liberal terms.

New Music.

A sheet with seven pieces, "I love to tell the story," etc. Price 20c.

"Jerusalem Forever Bright," by Amanda Bailey. Price 5c.

"Rest Over There," by Geo. E. Lee. 5c.

Praise Songs, 32 pp. of choice tunes. 15c.

Camp Meeting Music, 16 large pages. 10c.

The four last named, to one address, 30c. For sale at this office.

Whitmore—Cheap Edition.

are pushing this along as fast as possible. It better printed than the last, for our new press is doing good work. We are anticipating fresh and liberal orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies, by express, $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We once heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." We think this is cheap enough. Every one can afford to have Whitmore, and Collins, and Sheldon preaching, and that, too, in places the authors themselves cannot possibly visit. Buy and distribute, or lend their works.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained; with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists: and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

The New Chart.

We receive some encouragement for the proposed new chart. And the more we reflect upon the matter, the more we are convinced that it is really needed. Read the description of the plan in another part of this paper. Some have paid as high as $25 for charts not so complete as this will be.

There are many persons to whom it would, perhaps, be of no special use personally, who are well able to purchase one. We suggest that such should subscribe, and present the chart, when published, to some worthy minister, or to some chapel. Will you not aid this good work, and add your names to this list:

John S. Lawver, one; M. B. Geer, one; Eld. J. Raymond, one; C. C. Marston, one.

Fire Report.

(From the Chicago W[illegible], Aug. 16, 1871.)

The following is W. [illegible] Reporter's summary of fires for the fou[illegible] ending July 31, viz:

Division.	Alarms	& [illegible]	[illegible] Insured.	Paid loss to Ins. Co.
South....	74	$[illegible]	$176 000	$52 384
West.....	76	41 166	94 000	[illegible]
North....	30	6 161	15 450	4 500
Total...	190	$93 041	$289 200	$70 284

Originating from carelessness, 66, gasoline, 17; incendiarism, 26; sparks from chimneys, 2; over heated stoves, 4; defective stoves and chimneys, 20; unknown, 50; gas explosions, 5; spontaneous combustion, 4; total, 190.

The efficiency of the Babcock Extinguisher in suppressing 25 of the above fires, some of which were very threatening, is the highest proof of its value to the department, and the insurance companies.

To Correspondents.

E. S. ROBBINS. Will do all we can to procure it for publication....J. M. FLORY. We do not know either address. You can write to E. H. Swinney, 30 Cooper Union, New York City....T. S. THOMASSON. Your paper is sent to Anna. The others to Palley's Mills and Lick Creek, are all sent regularly with the County on the address. H. H. H.'s paper is sent with the rest. J. RAYMOND. We know no Advent preacher by the name of Saulsbury. Has he a letter from any Conference? If he has no credentials the churches should not countenance him....E. H. DURAND. The $1. for A. W. McAdam was not rec'd....B. J. GOODWIN. Trials will come. But we should remember that they are a flame designed to consume the dross only: the pure metal will be better for them....W. X. Y. Z. The amount you sent will be forwarded to Dr. Bowman in books and tracts during the coming week. We thank you on his behalf....W. MORPHY. Very sorry. Please excuse.

Book Notices, Etc.

Chatfield & Co., of New Haven, Conn., have republished Mr. Henry Constable's work entitled "the Duration and Nature of Future Punishment." We need not inform our readers that it is, perhaps, the ablest work upon that subject yet published, for they have had frequent tastes of the Prebendary's rich pen.

We had just imported a quantity of his work, when we learned of its republication by Chatfield. But we shall not in the least regret the loss entailed upon us in selling at the price of the American edition, which is within the reach of all. We wish all to have the work. Price, 40c., post-paid. MORRIS—TROWBRIDGE. In Chicago, Ill., Sept. 13, 1871, by Eld. F. Burr, Mr. L. T. Morris and Miss Henrietta Trowbridge, all of Chicago.

Obituary.

JONES. Died, near Center Point, Linn Co., Iowa, Aug. 26, my mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Jones: in her 84th year.

She suffered extremely the last three months of her life, but her trust in God was firm and unshaken; and not only during her illness, but through all the changing vicissitudes of her past life, she could meekly say, "Father, thy will be done!" She leaves a husband and four children, who hope to meet her where sorrow and death shall never come. HANNAH M. BLACK.

WEXEL. In Bishop Hill, Ill., Saturday Sept. 16, 1871, Sr. Martha Wexel, aged about 18 years.

Martha was taken sick a little before the late meeting at the Hill, her mother being also confined to her bed at the same time, by the same disease—a fever. When I called upon the afflicted family, I at once perceived that Martha was dangerously ill. She was very weak, not fully conscious of her dangerous condition, but apparently enjoying peace of mind. I read the Scriptures and prayed with the sick ones, commending them to God, but feeling that I had seen Martha for the last time.

When it became evident that she must die, she sent her last messages to her young companions, and bade father and mother and all friends an affectionate and hopeful farewell. She, also, requested that, if possible, I should come and attend her funeral. When I arrived at the Hill on Monday, I found a large concourse of people gathered in the cemetery, around the grave, by whose mouth lay our young sister, cold and unconscious, yet, as if declaring her hope, her dead hands clasping a few flowers and her Testament. Even in death she seemed to grasp "that blessed hope," the promise of the resurrection and future life.

Martha was converted during Br. Foster's labors at the Hill; and with many of her young companions evinced a lively interest in the Christian life. And in my many visits to this place, I always endeavored to so preach the word as to help these young converts on their way. And it is a source of consolation to me to know that although my visits have been unfrequent of late, yet my efforts to help the young people were not lost. And though I am not permitted to meet with them as formerly, they still have my prayers that they may prove faithful to the end, and that this great loss may be sanctified to them, as it is indeed, to the bereaved parents. Br. and Sr. Wexel are sustained by the hope of the gospel, and their sorrow is largely mixed with hope.

Standing over the grave, I showed the real nature of death, our enemy, and the Scriptural and only hope of a future life. W. L. H.

P. O. Addresses.

S. C. Wellcome, St. Charles, Winona Co., Minn.

A. P. Moore, Linden, Genesee Co. N. Y.

All letters for Anna E. Smith or the Star of Hope Mission should be directed to Box 75, Station A, New York city.

Any who have sent letters during the year past which have not been acknowleged, will please write to me immediately, informing me when and from what office the letters were sent. ANNA E. SMITH.

To Iowa Brethren.

Having lost their addresses, will Br. Dutton and others who requested me to visit Iowa this fall and hold special meetings, be so kind as to write, stating the time they will need me, so that I can make my arrangements accordingly. C. C. MARSTON.

Notice.

All letters, communications and remittances for the monthly journal entitled Woman and her Work, should hereafter be addressed to Mrs. E. A. Jennings, No 71 Williams St., Rochester, N. Y.

Discussion.

There will be a discussion at the Baptist church in Money Creek, Winona Co. Minn., on the evenings of October 3, 4, 5 and 6, between Eld. C. F. Dikeman (F. W. Baptist) and Eld. E. T. Himes (Adventist).

QUESTIONS.

1. Resolved, That when man dies he remains in a state of unconsciousness until the resurrection."

H. affirms: D. denies.

2. Resolved, That the future retribution of the wicked will consist in banishment from God to endure the torments of endless remorse.

D. affirms: H. denies.

The sessions will begin at 7 p. m. and continue two hours. The speakers will be confined to twenty minute speeches.

Minnesota

A number of brethren desiring to move to Minnesota, take this method of inquiring where they can find good land to take up claims under the Homestead Law. Will any Advent brethren in Minnesota or Dacota, who would like to have other Adventists settle near them, please write, giving information as to the character of the country: the water; if near a river, and if so, if it is navigable, etc.

Address: A. M. HODGDON, Loda, Iroquois Co. Ill.

CANAAN.

This is the title of the map which we present to our readers this week. To be critically correct it should be Palestine, and not Canaan; for strictly Canaan comprised only the country west of the Jordan and the Dead Sea, while that which lay East of those waters is called the land of Gilead.

A deep interest attaches to Palestine, or the Holy Land, as it is sometimes called, in the minds of all Christians, from two considerations: its historical associations, and its prefigurations of the future. For all are agreed that Canaan is a type of the future "rest" of the people of God, whether they locate it "beyond time and space" with the poet, or this side of that vague region, with less flighty minds.

DAN AND BEERSHEBA.

In this map we have the land as apportioned to the twelve tribes under Joshua. Consequently we miss many names to which great interest attaches; but we also find many that revive recollections of the sacred history. And, first, quite in the southern part, we observe Beersheba, while in the far north, this side of Labanon, we observe the site of Dan; and we comprehend at a glance the meaning of the ancient proverb—"From Dan to Beersheba:" that is, from one end of the land to the other. Dan was first called Laish; but was captured by the Danites, some of whom migrated thither when their own borders became too close for them. It became a famous place for idol worship; and here Jeroboam put up one of the calves he taught Israel to worship. The curious may find the whole story in Josh. 19: 47; Judg. ch. 18; 1 Ki. 12: 29, 30; Am. 8: 14. We have not space for the narrative here.

Beersheba, the well of the oath, is the place where Abram digged a well and planted a grove. There are now seven wells at the place, which are visited by modern travelers, which bear the marks of extreme antiquity.

THE SALT SEA.

The Dead Sea is a prominent object upon the map. A portion of its bed, at least, was once the site of Sodom and Gomorrah. We remember hearing of a minister who believed in the eternal misery of the lost, who once told his audience, that the inhabitants of the cities of the plain—i. e. their souls—were yet confined under the Dead Sea; and that their fearful struggles in their agony sometimes set the water to foaming and boiling at a terrible rate. This was absurd. But this singular body of water has a solemn lesson for us, in that it reminds us of the doom of all sinners. For Jude tells us, and Peter too (Jude 7; 2 Pet. 2: 6), that the fate of those cities is an example of what will come, finally, upon all that live ungodly—they shall be turned into ashes, or burned up. How very absurd it is, that when we have such plain testimony from God, that so many should believe that instead of being turned to ashes, the ungodly will receive such a nature that they can burn forever and yet never consume to ashes, even a particle.

Thus we see that even a map of Palestine reminds us of a great error; and, also, of the truth that "the wicked," when their punishment is completed, "shall not be." Sodom and Gomorrah are blotted from the map: so the wicked will be blotted from the universe.

ENGEDI.

On the shores of the Sea we observe Engedi. (We trust the readers will look up the places on the map, as they read.) This was one of David's hiding places from Saul. And here, as Saul passed him in the dark cavern, David cut off a portion of Saul's robe so quietly that Saul knew nothing of it, until David showed himself, and made an appeal that brought tears to Saul's eyes and temporary repentance to his heart.

Away to the right, across the Sea, we see Pisgah, or "Nebo's lonely mountain," where Moses died, after the Lord had shown him the land he was not permitted to enter. But if the popular theology be true, one might think Moses did not make a very bad exchange. Surely to pass from the provoking cares of the government of a stiff-necked and rebellious nation, into heaven itself, into the presence of angels, and the great Jehovah, and receive a crown of glory, and fullness of joys, and pleasures forevermore—surely we say, this was not a bad exchange for the thankless office of leader of a most difficult people. For the life of us, we can't see how it was a punishment for Moses to be denied an entrance into Canaan, if "going to heaven and rewards at death" is true. But the record says, "Moses died;" and the Lord "buried him." His sepulcher "is over against Beth-peor" see the map; and though no man knows where it is, he who is the Resurrection and Life has marked the spot; and one day, not far distant, a glorified immortal Moses will rise from the mountain where he stood to behold the type, to enter upon the enjoyment of the glorious antitype.

TABOR AND THE TRANSFIGURATION.

Moses reminds us of Tabor, the reputed scene of the transfiguration, which stands between the Sea of Galilee and Mt. Carmel. However, Tabor was not the scene of the transfiguration—that tradition, like most others, being incorrect. Tabor was inhabited in the Savior's day, to its very summit.

At the time the transfiguration was foretold (Mat. 16: 28), Jesus was near Cæsarea Philippi (v. 13), which was built a little south and east of Dan. Mt. Hermon (which is not named on the map, but appears north and east of Dan) was near by, and is "a high mountain;" and here, no doubt, the glorious scene occurred. The transfiguration has been greatly misunderstood, chiefly because expositors have not inquired what was its object. It was simply to typify, or illustrate Christ's coming in his kingdom. (cf. Mat. 16: 28; 2 Pet. 1: 16–18.) It was a miniature likeness of the second advent, "in vision." (Mat. 17: 9.) Christ appeared (in the vision, not in reality) glorified; Elijah was seen (in vision, not really) representing those who will be living when Jesus comes, who will not die, but be translated as Elijah was. Moses was there, not really, in spirit or in the flesh, but in vision, as the representative of those who shall "be raised incorruptible," at the sound of the last trump. Thus we have the likeness complete.

But if Moses was really raised from Mt. Nebo that day, "incorruptible," or "glorified," then Christ was not "the first-born from the dead" (Col. 1: 18); "the first that should rise from the dead" (Acts 26: 23); "the first-fruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15: 20), i. e. the first raised to die no more. And to insist that Moses must really have been there, to have represented the resurrected saints, is to insist that Daniel must have seen a real lion with real wings when he saw Babylon symbolized in a vision.

GEOGRAPHY AND THEOLOGY.

"Well," says one, "It seems to me you are mixing theology and geography together, pretty well." We know it. That is just the object we had in view in taking up a geography lesson. And we think a mixture of correct geography and theology, is far preferable to a combination of theology and error. Do you not agree with us, reader?

Our attention is next directed to the River Jordan, rising at the foot of Anti-Lebanon, near Hermon, and pursuing a tortuous course, south to the Dead Sea. This River is about 200 miles in length, and is associated with many remarkable events in the history of Israel.

MEROM.

Not far from its source it is lost in the Waters of Merom, where Joshua fought one of his greatest battles with the Canaanites, resulting in their utter destruction, and fulfilling Gen. 15: 10–21. (cf. Josh. 11: 3–6.) And after the battle, Joshua took Hazor, the chief city of northern Canaan, and "smote all the souls therein with the edge of the sword;" which passage is recommended to the study of those who ask "where in the Bible we read of mortal souls." Right here is one place: and there are a hundred others. (cf. Ezk. ch. 18.)

TIBERIAS.

Coming down Jordan we soon reach the Sea of Tiberias, or the Sea of Galilee, or Lake Gennesaret, thirteen miles long, and six broad. Here Peter walked upon the water till his failing faith destroyed his footing and let him into the Lake. Happily his Savior was near enough to catch him. Its waters are still subject to the same fearful storms which lashed its waters in Jesus' day, when the disciples' weak faith impelled them to awake the sleeping Master, at whose command "a great calm" ensued. Near its northwest shores stood proud Capernaum, "exalted to heaven," a magnificent city. But Jesus declared it should "come down to hades." And its subsequent doom is a sufficient definition for that term: for it went not to a world of spirits; it did not partially perish, as if its body decayed while its spirit survived; but it was swept as with the besom of destruction. Within a short time what is supposed to be its site has been identified; but we are not certain that we know even where it stood. To be "brought down to hades," then, means not to pass into another state of being, but to pass out of being—to die.

Galilee lay to the west of the Lake, and in this vicinity "the Galilean" spent most of his life while upon earth. Here many of his apostles lived; here the fishermen plied their lucrative business; for the fish of Gennesaret are of a superior quality, and commanded good prices. In this region were Nazareth, Cana, Nain;—a thousand recollections press upon the mind, but we must not linger here.

BETHABARA.

After leaving the Lake, Jordan winds its way through a wilderness region for a long distance. But before we get to the Salt Sea our attention is arrested at the fords near Bethabara. Here is where the men of Gilead, under Jepthah slew the Ephraemites, who could not pronounce Shibboleth but said Sibboleth (Judg. 12: 6); whence has arisen a famous proverb. Here, also, John baptised Jesus (John 1: 28), with multitudes of the people who came to him, to be "baptised in Jordan." Bethabara means "house of the ford; so called because here there was a ford across the Jordan. One ingenious advocate of sprinkling as a gospel ordinance, says that Bethabara was not the name of a place, but of a house, or building, in which John preached and sprinkled. We apprehend, however, that if it was a building, it was built over the river; for the multitude that came out "were baptised of him in Jordan." They were "buried in baptism," "in the Jordan."

The waters of Bethabara, as will be seen upon the map, lay east and a little north of Jericho. In this vicinity the Israelites under Joshua passed through Jordan into the Land of Promise, another type which has been most wofully perverted: for the antitypical Jordan is not death, but the judgment. If there were nothing else to show this, it would appear from the fact that the tribes whose inheritance lay on "this side of Jordan," entered not into their lot until the whole land was subdued. And when the river was passed, the whole people went through together, not straggling in lit-the companies or bands. And if going down into the river meant death, coming up out of it meant resurrection, and not a process of disembodying. Besides, the country where they landed was no type of a spirit-heaven, but of the new earth, as we shall see hereafter. And as Reuben, Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh might not enter their rest until the fighting and conflict was all done, neither may any of us enter rest till earth's conflicts are all o'er. As Paul says of the ancients: "These all died in faith....not having received the promises....God having provided some better thing for us, that they, without us, should not be made perfect." (Heb. 11: 13, 39, 40.)

ASHDOD.

On the coast of the Mediterranean we see Ashdod, and are reminded of an ancient mingling of the church and the world in Nehemiah's day, when the children learned to talk "part Ashdod and part the Jew's language." (Neh. 13: 27.) In these days, what with the introduction of worldly maxims into the church, we see its children talking the same mixed language, with the same mixed fashions. Hence for humility we have pride; for prayer-meetings, festivals; for honest, hearty giving, we have lottery schemes and good dinners, by which to obtain money. And may we hope for a Nehemiah to cleanse the house of God before the Master shall come to judgment?

JOPPA.

North of Ashdod we find Joppa, where was the house of Simon, a tanner, with whom abode another Simon. Here Peter took his first lessons of the great truth that the day of especial favors for the Jews was now past; and that henceforth they stood on the same ground with other nations—with no better, no worse opportunities than they. (Acts ch. 10.)

AJALON.

About midway between Joppa and Jerusalem we see Ajalon, another of Joshua's famous battle fields; memorable for the obedience of the sun to the command of a man of God. It need not shock our faith to believe that he who made the universe, keeps it in motion, and prevents its falling into chaos, could literally stop the motion of the earth, and so give the sun the appearance of standing still. But it is not necessary to suppose this. What Joshua desired was light; and if the sun's light was so refracted as to keep it in sight above the horizon (as occurs sometimes in nature, that ships, distant mountains, etc., far below the horizon are thrown into our sight by the refraction of light), the required conditions are fulfilled, and the power of faith over the elements is as fully illustrated as in the other case. But whatever the means were, Joshua had daylight, all he needed for victory: and we should all have more sunshine on our path and in our conflicts with the powers of darkness, if we had more faith.

BETHLEHEM.

South of Jerusalem we see Bethlehem. We think of the crowded inn the stable, the stall; of the shepherds out on the hills; and the angels and their song; of the wise men and their gifts; of cruel Herod and the weeping mothers, for whom as for every mourner God's word has comfort. "Refrain thy voice from weeping! Thy children shall come again"—from whence? The poet says

> "Around the thro[illegible] God in heaven
> Thousands of [illegible]"

Did Jeremiah [illegible]. He said "from the [illegible] of [illegible]y." (Jer. 31: 15–17.) Put that down in your note book: for according to Jeremiah, if the dead children are in heaven, heaven is the "enemy's land!"

THE DOUGHFACE.

North of Jerusalem, we see Ephraim and remember the words of God's prophet (Hos. 7: 8): "Ephraim is a cake not turned"—a religious doughface; baked only upon one side, and the other soft, ready to receive impressions from whatever source. "He hath mixed himself among the people." Ah! there are only too many Ephraims in these days. When with the church they talk religion; when with the world, they give no sign of their faith. Nor is it individuals alone that merit this censure; but often whole churches present one side, at least, for the impress of the world. Let such beware lest the terrible words be spoken them—"Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone!"

And another class of Ephraims is made up of those who have convictions upon unpopular truths, but fearing the the frown of orthodoxy, or the sneers of the world; or consulting self-interest and ease, they conform, one side, to prevailing opinions. And the church cares nought for their private, opinions so long as they are private. Meanwhile the cause of truth suffers for lack of their sympathy and support. May God turn the other side of many such to the fires of persecution, that they may be baked through—or become of equal consistency throughout.

DAMASCUS.

Away in the north Damascus, with its rivers, Abana and Pharpar, remind us of Naaman and his dreadful disease; of Elisha and his lying servant, Gehazi; and of that wonderful man Saul of Tarsus, better known as Paul the Apostle, who started for Damascus the proud leader of a persecuting band, entered the city humbled, and blinded; and left, in a basket, let down by the wall. Oh! what a fall was his, in the eyes of the world! But what a rise, in the sight of God, angels and Christian men.

CARMEL.

On the left we see Mt. Carmel, looking out upon the Great Sea. And we must pause here for a little. And we seem to see the prophet whose prayer had brought over three years drought upon the sinful land, standing alone—over nine hundred priests against him, and not one of the people to raise a voice in his behalf, or say amen to his prayer. With what pitying scorn he watches their all-day ineffectual prayers. Now he urges them to greater vehemence suggesting that their god may be hunting, or on a journey, or possibly asleep. Let them cry louder, and wake him! But their cries, their cutting themselves with knives availed nothing. "There was none that heard, or regarded."

And now Elijah prays. A few, simple words, directly to the point, expressing his desire, and immediately the fire of God falls, consuming not alone the sacrifice, but the altar, and the water in the trench about it. And from the people, amazed and astounded, arises first a faint murmuring, which swells gradually into a deafening shout—"The Lord he is God! The Lord he is God!"

O wondrous land! O wondrous story! Fain would we linger over spots sanctified by the heroic deeds or the simple history of God's people in other days. But we must forbear.

CANAAN A TYPE.

We remarked that Canaan was a type. It was both a type and a pledge. After God had called Abram into Palestine, he made him two promises: a promise to himself and his seed, and a promise that included his seed—his natural descendants, alone. The first is recorded in Gen. 13: 14–17, where he is told to look "northward, southward, eastward and westward," and God says, "all the land that thou seest will I give to thee and to thy seed forever." Now it is clear that this promise did not refer to Palestine particularly, because he could not see the whole of that; but the idea is, a boundless possession—an estate whose boundaries are the points of the compass: as far as one can travel in any direction, so far this promise extends. Hence we read in Rom. 4: 13, that Abram should be "heir of the world"—the kosmos, or earth, the globe. But Stephen says (Acts. 7: 5) that God never gave Abram as much of the land for his own, as even to set his foot on. He bought a burial place in it; and that is all the land Abram ever owned here. But, says Stephen, "Yet God promised that he would give it to him for a possession." Can God's promise fail. Nay, verily. Then we may expect to see, yet, Abram in possession of his inheritance.

And we have a pledge, a surety that cannot be shaken that Abram will yet possess the earth, in company with all the meek. (Mat. 5: 5.) In Gen. ch. 15, we find him asking the Lord, "Whereby shall I know that I shall possess it?" [illegible]eply God lets him know tha[illegible]st first die; but he gives, h[illegible]ssurances, some of which were [illegible]e fulfilled long after his death, which should go upon record for all the people of God in time to come, as a "whereby" they might know that God would keep his promise. Passing over, here, other items of this pledge we come to the last, relating to the land shown upon our map. (Gen. 15: 18–21.) "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram saying;

UNTO THY SEED

[not thee and thy seed, as in case of the promise in the preceeding chapter] have I given this land [not to the four points of the compass, but within definite bounds] from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates: the Kenites, the Kenizzites, and he Kadmonites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Rephaims, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Girashites and the Jebusites." This is definite; there is no misunderstanding it: it promises the land shown in our map—for there was the abode of those very nations to Abram's natural seed.

Has the promise been fulfilled?

If so, have we not the assurance that God keeps his word, although there is an apparent delay, as stated by Stephen, in the case of Abraham? Most certainly. Has the promise, then, been fulfilled? We answer, it has. Hear Nehemiah:

"Thou art the Lord the God, who didst choose Abram, and brought him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees, and gavest him the name of Abraham; and foundest his heart faithful before thee, and madest a covenant with him to give the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites and the Perrizzites, the Jebusites and the Girgashites, to give it, I say, TO HIS SEED and HAST PERFORMED THY WORDS!"

There need be no more said on that point. The covenant of Gen. ch. 15, is fulfilled. But Stephen says the covenant to Abraham has not been fulfilled. This fulfilled covenant, then, is the pledge, the warrant, the surety of that in the future, yet to be fulfilled.

As to when this covenant was fulfilled, the careful student can trace the history in the list of references we will give. Commencing with Ex. 23: 22, 23, 28, we find Israel reminded that they are on their way to the fulfillment of the covenant in Gen. ch. 15. Again and again this reminder is unmistakably pressed upon them. Ex. 33: 1–3; 34: 11; Num. 34: 1-3; Deut. 1: 7, 8; 4: 21; 7: 1; 9: 1–6; 11: 24, 25; 20: 17; 25: 19; 30: 20; Josh. 1: 3–6; 3: 9, 10; 11: 3–6. And in Josh. chs. 23 and 24 the story of the giving of the inheritance is told, and from thence forth we find the references to this covenant looking back to this division of the land by Joshua instead of forward, as is the case in all the passages we have referred to thus far. Not to be tedious we quote one passage from Joshua (24: 11): "And ye went over Jordan, and came unto Jericho: and the men of Jericho fought against you, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, the Hittites, and the Jebusites; and I delivered them into your hand." "And ye know that not one good thing hath failed of all the good things the Lord your God spake concerning you." (Ch. 23: 14.)

We think we may consider it settled, that this minor covenant has been fulfilled to the letter; and that the only reason why the Jews are not in possession of Palestine to-day, is because they have failed to perform their part of the covenant. See Deut. 29: 21–29; Josh. 23: 14–16.

Passing down the other side of the fulfillment we find references to it, as we have remarked, as having been fulfilled: 1 Ki. 4: 21; 2 Chron. 9: 26; Neh. 9: 7, 8, 22–24; Ps. 44: 2; 105: 10, 11, 42–45; 135: 10–12; Jer. 32: 21–23.

We have done with the type: let us now consider the antitype. First, then, we inquire, who are included in the promise to Abraham—"To thee and thy seed." We might never have understood this point had not Paul been inspired to reveal to us the great things veiled in so simple a promise. In Gal. 3: 16, he tells us that God said "not to seeds, as of many, but as of one, To thy seed, which is Christ." Now read the whole chapter, and you will learn that this inheritance is not of, or through, the law, but is by faith. And that if we are Christ's, then we are, also, Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Again turning to Rom. 4: 13, we learn that this promise, sealed to Abraham by his faith, was that he should be heir of the earth.

Now we begin to see light. Looking back to David, we find him seven times over declaring that the meek shall inherit the earth. Read, for instance, Ps. 37: 29—"The meek shall inherit the earth, and dwell therein forever," in connection with Gen. 13: 15—"All the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever."

In his first sermon Jesus taught that "the meek shall inherit the earth." He taught it in a parable—Mat. 13: 14, where we have it revealed that Christ has purchased the world for the sake of the treasure—his people—in it. Peter tells us (2. Pet. ch. 3) how it is to be cleansed, rid of all sin and defilement, and renewed—made into new heavens and new earth. John (Rev. chs. 21, 22) saw it in its new form, a place of wondrous glory and blessedness. And it was earth still, though so wonderfully transformed: for it was said there shall be "no more curse." Now it would only be proper to say no more curse of a place where there had been a curse. We know a curse rests upon the earth—but there is no curse in heaven. Hence we know that the place described in Rev. chs. 21, 22 is the earth renewed and not a distant heaven or other sphere.

Besides in Rev. 5: 9, 10, we have a song of the Redeemed themselves, which we may be certain was sung with the spirit and the understanding: and they sing, "WE SHALL REIGN ON THE EARTH!"

These then are some of the lessons of our map. Our readers by study at their leisure can find much more of deep interest. We recommend them to make the geography of the Holy Land familiar to their minds. It will aid them in the study and proper understanding of the word.

And, finally, let all remember the exhortation of Paul; that though a rest remaineth for the people of God, nevertheless as in the type many were cut off and failed to enter the temporal rest because of unbelief, even so we may be shut out of the saint's everlasting rest, if the promise of God is not mixed with faith in our hearts. "Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any should seem to come short of it." (Heb. 4: 1.)

Communications.

Christ's Transfiguration. Mat. 17: 1–9.

This circumstance is often cited as proof that human spirits are conscious between death and the resurrection. The argument is about as follows:

In the transfiguration, Moses and Elias appeared talking with Christ. Moses had been dead fifteen hundred years; and as he could not have been there bodily, he must have been there in spirit. Therefore the spirit is conscious between death and the resurrection.

Will the argument drawn from this passage in favor of immaterialism stand the test of criticism? Is it in harmony with facts brought to light in other Scripture declarations? Or, does it not rather contradict them?

Jesus spake as follows: "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." (Mat. 16: 28.) This promise refers to a scene which must have occured, in some sense, during the lives of the disciples. Some of them were not to die until they beheld the Savior appear in his kingdom. This could take place in but two ways—in reality, or in vision. And it could not have taken place in reality, because Christ's coming in his kingdom brings the judgment. "Who [Christ] shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." (2 Tim. 4: 1.) With the coming of Christ, then, the judgment comes. Therefore, Christ did not appear in his kingdom in reality during the lives of his disciples, as the judgment did not then take place. Consequently he must have appeared in vision. And this position is sustained by the Scriptures.

After stating the declaration that some should not taste death till they should see the Son of man coming in his kingdom, the record continues: "And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here. If thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them; and behold a voice out of the cloud which said, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their faces, and were sore afraid. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only. And as they came down from the mountain Jesus charged them saying, Tell the VISION to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." (Mat. 17: 1–9.)

This testimony forever settles the fact that Peter, James and John beheld a vision while with Christ upon the mount. And what appeared in the vision? Let Peter answer: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory. This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount." (2 Pet. 1: 16–18.)

Peter here affirms that he had not followed cunningly devised fables, in making known the POWER AND COMING of Christ, for they were EYE-WITNESSES of his majesty, WHEN THEY WERE WITH HIM ON THE HOLY MOUNT. Hence the vision represented Christ's coming in his kingdom.

We are told however by a certain class of theologians, that the primary definition of "vision" is to see; and that as Moses appeared with Elias, he was actually there in a disembodied state. But this assumption cannot stand the test of criticism. The Greek word horama, here translated "vision," is found in the New Testament twelve times. It is once translated "sight," and eleven times "vision." Greenfield defines it thus: "A thing seen, sight, appearance; a supernatural appearance, a vision."

That the reader may fully understand the New Testament usage of horama, I give every instance in which it occurs, quoting from the Englishman's Greek Concordance. The words in Italics are from horama:

Mat 17 : 9, Tell the vision to no man.
Acts 7 : 31, He wondered at the sight.
9 : 10, To him said the Lord in a vision.
12, And hath seen in a vision a man.
10, 3, He saw in a vision evidently
17, When this vision which he had.
19, While Peter thought on the vision.
11 : 5, and in a trance I saw a vision.
12 : 9, But thought he saw a vision.
16 : 9, A vision appeared to Paul in the night.
10 And after he had seen the vision.
18 : 9, To Paul in the night by a vision.

Any one can see that according to New Testament usage, the Greek word horama signifies "vision," and that it is properly translated in Mat. 17 : 9.

Webster's fourth definition of "vision" is as follows: "In Scripture, a revelation from God." Hence whatever was seen in the transfiguration, was seen in a revelation from God.

We are now prepared to examine what the other Evangelists have recorded in reference to the same scene. "And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man be risen from the dead." (Mk. 9: 9.) Here it is affirmed that something was seen. What was it? "And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." (Lk. 9: 30, 31.

Mark the force of this language. It was not one man and a ghost, or a spirit; but TWO MEN that appeared. Mark affirms that they were seen, and Mathew teaches that they were seen in a vision.

Moses and Elias, according to Luke's testimony, appeared "IN GLORY;" and it is certain that the righteous will not receive glorified bodies this side the resurrection. Hence the vision refers to a time when Moses will appear in his glorified body.

Will not Moses appear in his GLORIFIED STATE when the Son of man comes in his kingdom? Most assuredly. Inasmuch, then, as the vision represents Christ's coming in his kingdom, according to Peter's testimony, I conclude that it represents Moses in his glorified state beyond the resurrection.

The object of the vision seems to have been twofold: (1) To show the disciples that Christ must suffer and die. See Lk. 9: 30, 31. (2) To show them the glories of the Second Advent. See 2 Pet. 1: 16–18. At the Second Advent, Jesus will appear in his kingdom, as seen in the vision on the mount. Moses and Elias will appear in the kingdom, also, as they appeared in the vision. And, as seen upon the mount Moses appeared as the representative of the righteous dead in the resurrection; and Elias appeared as the representative of the righteous living who will be changed at the coming of the Lord.

An Exhortation.

"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength." (Ps. 8 : 2.)

How peculiarly was I reminded of this passage of Scripture the other day when a party were playing "Croquet," or "Lawn Billiards." Amongst that number were those that professed Christianity, and some who believe the Lord is soon coming. A child of eleven or twelve years was invite to participate in the game, and refused, because she thought it wrong. The one who should have been taught by those that were older (some gray headed), became the teacher; and let us hope that they may profit by the teaching. Shame on Christians who will let such things lead them away. Would they like to have the Savior come and find them in such business? And can they do it to God's honor and glory? I do not believe they can; and I do believe that such vain and frivolous amusements must be given up by professed Christians, if they ever get into the kingdom. We see such doings in the popular churches, but we look for better things among those who believe Jesus is near.

Brethren and sisters, I believe that Christ will soon appear "to reward every one according as their work shall be." And let us hope he will find none of us giving way to vain and foolish things, but let us be up, and doing what we can for the Lord; not idling our time, which is not ours, but his. God help us to be faithful, and finally meet in the blessed kingdom, is the prayer of AN ADVENTIST.

Resurrection Blessings.

Who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his own glorious body (Phil 3. 21.)

The day is coming in the which Christ, who is our life, shall appear, and by his resurrection power raise the dead and remove the sin which mars our pleasures. The dead dust which slumbers silently shall hear his voice and come forth. This body of sin shall be exchanged for a more glorious one, personal identity preserved, but clothed upon with immortality, and so transformed as to be perfectly adapted to enjoy the occupations of a better state. The ungenial qualities and influences of the mortal shall vanish away, and in the likeness of the glorified body of Christ the resurrected ones shall live forever. The expectation of the Christian shall be fully realized, as he stands among the shining host, and greets with exclamations of joy his long lost friend.

In that great day, not one hope shall be darkened, the earth so full of graves and desolate hearts shall abound with realizations of Christian desire. Hope changed to fruition shall live forever in the presence of the eternal, and the griefs of earth shall yield to the unfading blessings of a new creation. Father, mother, your joy shall be complete, as you then embrace your now 'dead in Christ," your "loved and lost;" and ye who wander lonely and friendless, and read dear names on marble monuments, shall then fully understand the unspeakable blessings of the resurrection.

"According to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Jesus the Christ possesses the power; and that he will ultimately subdue all sin, and banish forever every vestige of it from God's fair universe, we need not, we can not doubt. He who upon Gennesaret's wild waters, bade wind and wave subside, was Lord of all, and in every instance which he afforded of his power, he but gave us intimations of that which he will exercise in coming ages. Sin has torn a world from God, and bathed it deep, in unspeakable misery, but the mighty vanquisher of death and hades shall restore it all. "We," says one of old, "look for a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." As a believer in divine truth then, an expectant of the manifestations of the sons of God, at the second coming of our Lord, I confidently believe that Christ is able to subdue all things.

The salvation from sin is as extensive as the guilt and contaminations of sin. Death is conquered, hades disappointed, the devil confounded, and sin totally destroyed! Amen. Hallelujah. "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

Fellow-traveler to Zion's-hill; be of good cheer. God's words and promises are precious. They are all yea and amen in Christ Jesus. That which he hath promised he will fulfill. Care little for the disappointments of this world; these work out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

"Sing on your heavenly way,
Ye ransomed sinners sing;
Sing on rejoicing every day,
In Christ the eternal king."

Our Pulpit.

The Foundations of the Righteous.[1]

BY ELD. C. E. BARNES.

"If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Ps. 11 : 3.)

That every superstructure needs a sure foundation to insure its permanency, is a self-evident fact. That every character, to be esteemed, must be based upon certain just principles of equity, is also apparent. And it is equally important that a system of religion should have a firm foundation, that it may not be overthrown by the assaults of skeptics and enemies.

The foundation that will resist successfully all attempts at its overthrow, is a foundation of truth. All systems founded upon anything else, no matter how ancient, must crumble and fall in the day where every man's work will be made manifest.

Our religion, the Christian system, has a foundation; its basis is truth; and that which supports it and causes it to tower majestically above all the schemes of men, is its pillars of truth, its doctrinal pillars, on which all our hopes for the future depend. If these doctrines stand, our hope is good, and our salvation certain; but "if the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

I. The first great pillar is the fact of the divine existence. "He that cometh to God, must believe that he is." (Heb. 11 : 6.)

If what "the fool hath said in his heart" be true, that "there is no God," we may say with the Epicureans, "let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die."

The existence of God can be known (1) by our own existence, and from what is existing about us. Many centuries ago a celebrated King spoke and said—"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." (Ps. 19 : 1.) And he must indeed be a "fool" who can gaze upon the wondrous works of nature, and yet conclude that no Creator's power called them into being.

The fact that we ourselves exist is proof that a Creator exists also. We are creatures. There was a time when we had no existence, and if we trace our way back into the remote past, at length we shall come to the beginning of the race, beyond which no man existed.

If, then, there was a time when man did not exist, and then, subsequently, a time when he does exist, there must have been a cause to bring such existence into being. This cause, Scripture and reason declare to be God.

But some, to do away with the necessity of a Creator, say man became such as he now is not by one creative act, but by degrees, by progression from the lower orders of intelligences, through successive stages of growth and development, until he reached his present condition. But even admitting this absurd theory to be true, it does not avoid the difficulty in the least. The blade of grass demands a Creator's power to give it existence, as much as the universe of which it is a part. The least and lowest of living intelligences is as much dependent upon his power as is man or the highest angel. "The old assumption of an eternal succession of finite beings was made to get rid of the idea of One Eternal Being. That the supposition is unphilosophical and absurd, has been shown thousands of times. The mind, from its very constitution, disowns it. Men may form as many links in the chain of causes as they choose, but they must, at last, reach an uncaused cause. It is strictly true that from nothing, nothing can proceed. Something must have existed before all finite beings, or whence came these finite beings into existence? That something must be self-existent, underived, necessary, and eternal. It is he who is the I Am, and to whom we apply the sublime language of the ancient seer: 'Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.'" (Pearson on Infidelity, p. 19.)

The existence of God can be known (2) by the order and designs seen in creation. Disorder might denote chance, but wherever order and design are seen, we are assured that intelligence so arranged them. If we should find pieces of silver, brass and steel, together with glass and other material, all lying about promiscously, we might be justified in attributing such confusion to accident or chance; but if we see these several and different pieces arranged so as to make a watch which keeps correct time, we can attribute the combination to chance no longer; but must say, "This is the designed work of an intelligent being."

Thus it is in creation: order and design are on every hand. Order and design in the movements of the planetary system. Order and design in the animal kingdom. Order and design everywhere and in everything. And this design points us, not to chance, not to accident or circumstance, but to the great and eternal God.

Belief in him is the main pillar of our religion. On him our hopes depend—if faith in him were destroyed, what could the righteous do?

II. The second pillar on which our religion is founded, is the fact that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that as such he has made atonement for sin.

Not that he is a Son by creation, as are angels and men; if this were all, the Spiritist and Infidel would believe it, too. That he is a divine Son is the teaching of Scripture; that he is "the only begotten Son," is what the Bible demands our assent to, and is a doctrine on the truthfulness of which depends the efficacy of the atonement.

According to Dr. A. Clarke, the atonement was made by Christ's "sacrificed human nature." (Note on Heb. 1 : 6.) Yet he strangely contradicts himself by saying, elsewhere, that "God will not have man's blood for sacrifice, any more than he will have swine's blood." (Note on 2 Sam. 21 : 10)

The Savior whom Paul preached was more than "sacrificed human nature." Human nature was never in the form of God; but he who took upon him the form of a servant, and that was made in the likeness of men, and who became obedient unto the death of the cross, was one that had such pre existent glory.

"Human nature" was never with God in the beginning, but the Word, the Logos, was; and "the Logos was made flesh and dwelt among us." (John 1 : 14.)

That which Paul first preached to the Corinthians was "how Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. 15 : 3); and "according to the Scriptures" he was to "pour out his soul unto death." (Is. 53 : 12.) And that he did so, he himself affirms: "I am he that liveth, and was dead." (Rev. 1 : 18.)

And now, being "reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." (Rom 5 : 10.) Are we not right then, in considering this doctrine of the atonement and the divine Sonship of Christ to be a main pillar in supporting the superstructure of Christianity?

If the doctrine of our creation and Creator is important, is not that of our redemption and our Redeemer equally so? If, then, the doctrine of the atonement is destroyed, what can such sinners as we do?

Through Christ's death and resurrection we have been begotten to a hope of life (1 Pet. 1 : 3), and it is promised us through a resurrection: hence,

The resurrection of the dead becomes a third great pillar supporting the Christian's hope.

I assert, then, that the only sure hope of a future, eternal life, is based upon the resurrection: but here we get upon controverted ground. We are confronted at once by the Swedenborgian, who maintains that "death" is "the gate to life." We are met by the Spiritist, and he, too, extols death as being that which ushers us into the higher and nobler realms. And following close in their wake comes the current orthodoxy of the day, saying, "Oh! how bitterly has death been slandered....Oh! blessed death." (Baptist paper.)

If the theories above alluded to were true, a resurrection would be unnecessary, as the dead of the past would have already entered upon the glories of eternity. Indeed, the first two classes alluded to do not believe in a resurrection of the dead. Believing their personality and individuality to be lodged in an immaterial spirit entity, they look upon death as the change that will bring liberty to the imprisoned captive, and say "good-bye" to that workmanship which God called man, having no farther concern what becomes of it.

If their theory be correct, they are consistent in their belief; so we are not surprised when we find many of the orthodox going over to them, likewise discarding a belief in the literal resurrection of the dead. It is evident, then, that these hopes (?) are not based upon the resurrection; but it can be easily shown that the Bible hope is.

Job says that man in death "lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." (ch. 14 : 12.) David said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake, with thy likeness." (Ps. 17 . 15.) And as in Peter's time he had "not ascended into the heavens," but was "dead and buried," his sepulcher being with them up to that time (Acts 2 : 29, 34), we conclude he has not yet awoke.

Instead of denying the resurrection, or assuming that which leads to its denial, namely, the putting of the redeemed in glory at death; instead of so teaching, Paul said that except the dead rise again, then they that have fallen asleep in Jesus are perished (1 Cor. 15 : 18); language that could be used by none but he who based his entire hope of future life upon the resurrection.

If, then, the Bible hope is based upon the resurrection of the dead (and really there is no "if" about it, it is so based), and the hope cherished by the masses of to-day is not based upon it, does not that conclusively show that the two hopes are different one from the other? And if different, who that wants Bible doctrine can hesitate about which hope to accept? Again I ask, if this foundation, if this pillar of our hope be removed, "what can the righteous do?"

Here are three great supports; one more is needed, and that is

IV. The return of our Lord to consummate our hope.

To-day the doctrine of the Lord's personal coming is not universally believed. Indeed, so little is it relished that the people whose hopes center about it, whose faith depends upon it for consummation, is among the most unpopular peoples in all Christendom. You may believe almost anything else, so long as you hold to man's inherent immortality, and you will be tolerated; but come out upon the Bible platform, and center all your prospects of a future life upon "that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," and you at once lose caste.

That the doctrine meets with such reception, or rather rejection, is not, however, to be wondered at, for if the current opinions of man's nature be true, it is wholly superfluous. Spiritism does not need it, and hence it is discarded. Orthodoxy does not need it, for by teaching the doctrine of rewards at death, it does away with all necessity for Christ to come in the future and bestow them: and, indeed, how can he reward men when he comes, if they have received reward years, yes centuries prior to his coming? Indeed, if it were to be proved that Christ never would come again, it would not affect their hopes, as they are not founded upon that truth. But how would it affect Paul?

In the Bible we find everything pointing to the Bridegroom's return, not only as being the time when the dead will be raised, but as being the time when we shall appear with him in glory (Col. 3 : 4); as being the time of our coronation (1 Pet. 5 : 4); in a word, as being the time when our redemption, physical and spiritual, is made complete by our being made like him. (1 John 3 : 2.) Christ's second advent is the great central truth, about which all others revolve; it is the sun from whence the others are illuminated—all other doctrines being but secondary. It is the all and in all to the rightly informed Christian. If this is destroyed "what can the righteous do?" Surely, they would be "of all men most miserable."

In the theological world there are many contested doctrines, such as what constitutes the new birth, some thinking it to be one thing, and some another. Or they may dispute as to where the final home of the redeemed may be, some contending it is to be upon this earth renewed, and others that it is to be "beyond the bounds of time and space;" but which ever way these might be decided, the fulfillment of the Christian's hope would not be delayed. They are interesting and important, but they are not all-important. The Christian does not regard such doctrines as the foundation of his hopes, but the four doctrines I have presented in this sermon are all important: they are the foundation of all his hopes.

1. What could we do if there was no God? When trouble, and want, and distress surround him, what could the Christian do if he had not a merciful God to sustain and support him?

2. What could we do had there been no atonement? When polluted with sin, when groaning beneath its burden, and crying out, "O wretched man that I am!" when filled with shame and remorse because of iniquity, what could he do had he no advocate with God, the Father? What could we do had we no "merciful and faithful high priest" to "make reconciliation for us?"

3. And when loved ones die, and we see them laid away in the tomb, how could we ever expect to see them again, unless a resurrection therefrom had been guaranteed?

4. And since a resurrection has been promised, how can it be accomplished, except that mighty One, who has power over death and the grave, shall come again and break their bands.

Surely the question is an important one, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

[1] A sermon preached in Salem, Mass., Sunday, Oct. 9, 1870.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... Editor.

Tuesday Afternoon, Oct. 3, 1871.

Wanted—everywhere. Men of God, "apt to teach," "sound in the faith," to preach the gospel of the kingdom.

At his latest writing the editor of The Times was in Batesville, Ark., just preparing to mount a mule, for a ride of nine miles into the country; and he remarks—"I was never in better health or spirits."

Br. Mackie suggests that the ministers send to the office for lists of the subscribers of The Times in their vicinity, and then act as collectors, especially in stirring up the delinquents. We wish they would all do so.

One journal thinks these are the times the Bible mentions, when men were to "wax worse and worse," and wishes the waning time would come. But there will be no permanent waning till "the end of the world."

The London Quarterly Journal of Science has an article in which the writer after going over the subject in the light of science comes to a conclusion that cannot be better stated than in the words of Paul at Athens—that God has made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the whole earth; and

For only $2.50 one can obtain "all the special devotions" of a new church, now building near London, in behalf of their dead friends now in Purgatory. So runs an advertisement in a London Romanist journal. Rome does not estimate the progress of this age as highly as some do, or she would not dare insult its boasted intelligence with such a display of an absurdity of immaterialism

A sister who wishes to help the tract fund says: "I wish I could do more; but this is all I can give. [A silver quarter of a dollar.] It was a keepsake, but I am sure the one that gave it to me would rather have it doing some good than lying idle in any hands." This was not a very great sacrifice, but a gift is accepted by the Lord according to what a man hath, not what he hath not. It is willing doing according to ones opportunities that secures the blessing.

How to help young preachers. Always stay at home when they preach; or if you go to meeting, go to sleep also; or else close your eyes, drop your head, and pretend to sleep. In that way you will help discourage them, and very likely they will soon quit the field. Then you can hear old preachers—provided you can get one!

All the preachers once were young, and somebody helped and encouraged them, or we should have been without ministers now. Help the young preachers, by your presence and attention.

The New York Tribune lately remarked that the cheapest way to obtain notoriety was to attack the Bible. Some one, perhaps acting on the suggestion, is advertising Thomassen's Nature of the Bible, said to be an abler work than Voltaire, Paine, Strauss or Renan ever wrote. Nearly three hundred thousand copies are declared to have been sold in Germany, which declaration is no doubt a falsehood.

The work professes to "set aside heaven and hell, those torturing phantoms, so adroitly manipulated by the clergy and theologians upon humanity, upon scientific, logical and and philosophical principles." Whatever may become of the popular theories of heaven and hell, which 'torture' the saint as well as the sinner, the Bible will stand, long after false theories and false theology have perished.

When the Advent church ceases to be a missionary church it will decay. "He that watereth shall be watered," is the divine law. We want no sleeping churches, they must be awake, and must act, and give out light and truth or die. And so the ministry. Those who are not filling posts as pastors with their hands full of work, should not sit on their dignity, or move in a narrow circle, in which they accomplish nothing. Wake them up, and drive them out into the field where they may do something for God, and not die childless. Let none be supported unless they do something. Bring forth fruit. And give according to the work done. We want a self-reliant, progressive ministry and church.

that the talk about the Africans descending from one original pair, the Indians from another, the Caucasians from another, is all unwarranted by scientific knowledge.

'Unwholesome.' This is what Rev. J. Bowman says in the Christian Advocate of the 'intermediate state' theory. The word means 'pernicious, injudicious.' We are inclined to think he is right. He says the theory 'finds support only in tradition, the dark ages of the past, not from the divine word.' Now we are surprised: for he objects to the detention theory because of its foundation, while his own notion of passing into the presence of the 'Triune God' at death rests on precisely that basis. Besides its traditions are not so old by some centuries, as those the 'detention' theory can boast of.

All error is 'unwholesome.' We trust this vigorous writer will renounce both theories, and accept the truth of sleep for the dead, until the resurrection. (N. B. This Eld. Bowman is not Br. Bowman of South Carolina. Would that he might soon follow in his footsteps.)

QUERIES.

W. H. B. The resurrection is undoubtedly the second-birth. In it we are "born again." But the Scriptures also imply a spiritual birth in this life. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."

C. E. D. We did not refer to categorical questions as so what we do or do not believe personally, but to questions concerning the views held by Adventists generally, designed to elicit information. However we will reply to your queries:

"Do you believe in the triune God as being three distinct personalities?",

We believe of God all that can be stated in Scriptural phrase. "Triune God" is a theological invention. "But to us there is but one God, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." (1 Cor. 6: 8.)

Do you believe man was created mortal, or was he immortal?

We do not know what you mean by mortal or immortal. According to Webster man was created mortal: for he died. Immortal beings cannot die. However, it was not a matter of necessity that he should die, but of his own choice. If he had stood his trial, he would eventually have been "changed," as all the living saints will be at the judgment.

Do you believe Christ was ordained to be the Savior of all men?

He "is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." (1 Tim. 4: 10.) We do not believe he was ordained to give eternal life to any who reject him, or disobey God.

Do you believe the intermediate state to be a place or condition of repose, into which all men fall and remain until the resurrection?

We believe that all the dead go into hades or sheol; that it is a state and not a place; that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol." (Eccl. 9: 10.) "The dead know not any thing." (v. 6.)

Do you believe that all men will be raised from the dead and judged at the same time?

We do not believe that all are raised at the same time. We do not know what you mean by "judged." Sometimes it means pronunciation of a sentence; sometimes its execution; sometimes the process of hearing and weighing evidence. This last, in the case of man is settled at his death; the first is before the resurrection, because the righteous are raised immortal (1 Cor. 15: 52); the execution of punishment, and enjoyment of reward, is after the resurrection.

Do you believe all men will be raised spiritual personalities?

Most certainly not. Those who sow to the flesh, will of the flesh reap corruption. (Gal. 6: 8.) Only the righteous will have a birth of the Spirit, which is to everlasting life. This answers the next question, also, that the wicked will be punished with "everlasting destruction." Why should we not believe it; when Paul affirms it will be so? And David says—"All the wicked will God destroy." Yes, the devil and all wicked intelligencies, will be "annihilated," if you prefer that term to "destruction." "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested." (Heb. 2: 14; 1 Jno. 3: 8.)

J. P. Aside from the signs of the times in general, we think the next sign of Jesus' coming will be that called "the sign of the Son of man in heaven," very likely the appearance of "the brightness of his coming." "The midnight cry" is the proclamation of the testimony that the end is at hand, by whatever agency.

J. R. In Rom. 5: 14, Paul refers to the fact that children, who had not attained years of accountability died, although they could not have sinned; thus showing that the race was fallen under condemnation of death. The victims of the flood and at Sodom will come to judgment as much as "the eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell," or the victims of the last coal mine explosion, or railway or steamboat disaster. The perishing and judging of ch. 2: 12 are both at the judgment (v. 16), not in the past. The apostle would seem to teach that those who have no revealed law, such as the Jews had, will be judged by the law of conscience, which will excuse or condemn them at the last day.

SOMETHING FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Very many of our Sunday schools are using the lesson papers published by various houses, and generally are well pleased with the system. But some may ask what is a "lesson paper." We answer, it is a sheet folded in two leaves, or with four pages, containing a Sunday-school lesson for each Sunday in a month; consisting of the Scriptures dwelt upon, observations and explanations, and questions. Each scholar receives a copy of the paper the last Sunday in each month, and has his lessons for the ensuing month plainly before him; and all in the school have the same lesson.

Now, as may be expected, the papers published for the "evangelical" schools, so called, are calculated to instill some errors into the minds of pupils—such as natural immortality, eternal misery, etc. This has led some to ask, why we cannot have papers in our schools that shall teach a plain Bible theology, in practical and doctrinal points, also?

The answer is, that there are not enough schools among us to sustain such a publication. But is this so? cannot we supply our schools with this needed facility, for the increase of their interest and usefulness? We think it can be done if we will to do it.

The papers cannot be gotten up quite as cheaply as those already referred to, because we should only need a thousand where they dispose of ten times that number. But we think they can be published from a cent and a quarter to a cent and a half a piece; and possibly for even a dollar a hundred.

Let us hear from those interested. Shall we have a series of lesson papers the coming year for our Sunday schools that shall call attention to "the present truth," or live issues in the doctrine and practice of Scriptural religion. We wish to hear from all interested.

Next week we hope to give a sample page of the proposed "lesson papers."

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

There are two ways in which Quarterly Conferences may be kept up. In districts where there are a goodly number of ministers, heartily united and "pulling together" in the work, the interest is sustained by their presence and union. But in districts where there are but few preachers, and these scattered so that they but seldom get together, the officers of the Quarterly Conference should arrange with some interesting speaker, able to present and defend the truth, to attend and do the most of the preaching, and give notice of this fact through the paper. This will create an interest, and draw the brethren and sisters together, and, usually, insure success. There are a number of districts in several Western Conferences that have neglected these quarterly gatherings entirely of late; and hence some have pronounced the system of Quarterly Meetings a failure. Anything will be a failure that is not made a success. And in order to success in any work the proper means must be used.

Let the Conference officers who have forgotten or neglected to act, at once arrange for the fall and winter campaign. Write and secure help, and write in time, for strong, able men. Do something for yourselves, and God will bless you. But he has nothing for those who will not help themselves with all the means they may already hold in possession.

"ALTON BAY" REPORTED.

The New York Times for Sept. 23, has a report of "the Millerite Campmeeting at Alton Bay." It is quite as fair as the press reports of camp-meetings generally—for they are usually prevailed by a spirit of scoffing from beginning to end. He sneers at the baptismal scene; grants that the attendants are in earnest—"not holiday campers;" draws a lively picture of the natural amphitheater in which the stand is placed; makes a little sport of a blind preacher, who said he liked to "see little girls;" scornfully regrets that he arrived too late to hear "Mrs. D. R. Mansfield of Buchanan, Mich.," who, in his phrase was "the heroine of a discourse that elicited praise from all lips;" gives the people the credit of dressing plainly; etc.

He also learned that the sect extended "as far west as Michigan," which is certainly true. He gives the Crisis a fair notice, the time-ists a jeer about "ascension robes," the prophetic chart a sneer generally, and closes up after this fashion:

"From all I could learn, however, the great majority of the "Adventists" content themselves with the general assertion that the time for the second appearance of Christ is at hand, without attempting to specify its exact date. In anticipation of this great event they are laboring, preaching and organizing after their fashion, and having, so far as they could, hitched the railroad and printing press to their creed, they seem to be at least making themselves a permanent and considerable place among the sects of our day, in this part of the Union."

—We wish it were true that we have "as far as we could hitched the printing press to our creed." We have not half done our duty in this direction. Let us wake up and employ every means Providence places within our reach for the spread of the doctrine of one creed—i. e. the Bible, and we shall see more "Alton Bays," or like places, demanded for meetings of souls "waiting for God's Son from heaven."

FOUND GUILTY.

The Chicago Tribune says:

Rev. P. G. Bowman, South Carolina, has been found guilty by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South of a belief in the annihilation of the wicked, and the unconsciousness of the soul from death to the resurrection. His resignation of the ministry in that Church has been accepted, and he proposes to labor as a missionary in the Advent Church.

—This crime was formerly punishable with death, in various forms. Now the penalty is loss of caste and being "cast out of the synagogue—a punishment not hard to bear when the heart is full of love for God's truth.

"Guilty of belief." What is the result of the belief? The Doctor writes: "Let me beg you, every time you get on your knees to pray, do pray particularly for me, that God may give me love to all men, so that my heart may be kept in perfect peace, and that I may have wisdom and prudence sufficient for this emergency, and be ready to meet the speedy coming of Jesus." Very good fruit, we think, and trust Br. Bowman will continue to plead "guilty."

GOOD TIDINGS.

We referred to this new work last week, and desire again to call attention to it.

It will certainly command the attention and interest of every one of our readers, and not one should be without it.

It is one of the cheapest books (not sold at absolute cost) that has been published; for it contains a large amount of reading matter.

The price is only dollar, post-paid. Or, if one wishes something cheaper yet, sixty-five cents, for a copy in paper covers.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Several persons living in the West subscribed for copies of this work, at or soon after the Rochester Conference. They can obtain them, now, from this office, at cost, according to the agreement there made.

Send in the amount of your subscription, and we will send the books at once.

Get the "Good Tidings." Read it, lend it, scatter it everywhere.

Reached by Affliction.

In the street between the two palace gates was a shoemaker's shop. Going in, you saw at once a poor cripple deprived of the use of his limbs except his arms. This paralytic was the son of the shoemaker; his name was Barthelemy. "Ah," said his father, Robert Milon, to those who expressed compasion on seeing him thus, "he was not always like that; in his youth he was very different, and was endowed with every bodily and mental gift." In truth, Barthelemy had been the finest young man of the neighborhood, very clever, and full of rivacity and imagination. He abused his gifts, he followed his passionate nature, and plunged into life, yielding to all the lusts of youth, the follies and disorderly ways in which the young are so easily entrapped. Ceaselessly carried away by impetuous impulses, he sought out pleasures and quarrels. Wherever there was strife he must mix in it, and he exhibited an unrivalled boldness in all his disputes. He organized balls and concerts, and despised the things of God, ridiculing the priests, and mocking good men. Every one spoke of Barthelot, as they called him, and of his powers—some with admiration, other with fear. All the young people acknowledged him as their leader.

One day, when engaged thoughtlessly in his ordinary diversions, he fell and broke his ribs. Not being willing to submit to any remedy, he aggravated the evil—the different parts of his body gradually failed, and he became entirely paralyzed. What a change in his life! Poor Barthelemy! formerly so proud of his beauty, now weak, infirm, deprived of the use of his limbs, unable to go out with his friends, was obliged to keep at home in his father's shop. He was overwhelmed, not only by the sharp pain he suffered, but by the view of his deformity. Seated near the window, his only recreation was to look at the passers-by, and his malice being as great as ever, or rather being increased by his misfortunes, he was not sparing of his taunts. One day, seeing an evangelist pass by the shop, he began at once to insult him, and to scoff at the terrible majesty of God. "Ha, Lutheran!" he cried, adding all kinds of mockery. The Christian stopped. He was touched to see the pitiable state of the man who insulted him. He drew near and said, kindly,—"Poor fellow, why do you insult those that pass? Do you not see that God hath thus bent your body to set straight your soul?" This simple word touched Milon. He had never thought of his soul being crippled. "Oh," said he, "can it be true, that God has brought upon me this infirmity to restore his erring creature?" He was attentive to the passer-by, who spoke with him, and giving him a New Testament, said, "Here is a book, and in a few days' time you will see what you think of it."

Milon seized the gospel, opened it, and having begun to taste the fruit of his reading, he could not lay it down night or day. This little volume was enough; he needed no other teacher. The sword of God's word struck to the bottom of his heart, and his past life terrified him. But the gospel consoled him. It was for him a sounding trumpet, publishing the praise of Christ's mercy. Milon found the Savior. Mercy is shown to me, he said, that the love of God, in pardoning the greatest sinner, may be exhibited as on a scaffold, whence it may be seen by all the world. He had now a bridle which restrained him from entering into insults, riots, diversions, and contentions. The wolf became a lamb. Barthelemy communicated the riches which he found in the word of God to his father, the other members of the family, and all the customers who came to the shop. No other room in Paris presented such an inter-ng and varied scene. In truth, his istian love became inexhaustible his worldly skill had been to la- t amusement. He devoted wholly God the burning activity which been squandered on the world. certain hours of the day the poor ng man unrivalled in his skill as a ter, gathered the children of the ghborhood and dictated to them n his bed some words of the Bible, king it plain and easy for them, and ching them to form their letters l. Then he employed fruit of his labors to maintain sev- needy professors of the gospel. o, he had a very beautiful voice, a singularly graceful touch for eral instruments. Morning and ning he consecrated to the Savior's ise those talents formerly devoted leasure, and sung with an accom- iment psalms and hymns. People ne from all parts to this shop, which in the center of Paris. Some ne because of the rare and exquisite ngs he made; others frequented it hear the music and singing. "Best what?" I asked: "Best [illegible] most joyful feelings, instead doubts and fears," she answered. rother A. said: 'It is very crossing me to rise and speak, but I feel it I ought.' "Then," said Brother A., 'I have en thinking, I feared a large pro- rtion of professing Christians would ally be lost, and I often fear I shall of that number.'

"It made me feel gloomy to hear n. Brother B. continued in the ne doleful strain, and so did others. ey all spoke as though they had no vior to intercede for them. I know ey do not really mean so, but it es sound like it."

"But," I asked, "you would have em talk as they feel, would you not?"

I wish the brethren would learn ore that the "joy of the Lord is their strength." It would fill their own hearts with a new happiness, it would benefit those who listen, and it would honor Christ.—S. R. M.

Doctrinal Preaching.

A great change seems to have taken place in Satan's war policy. Balak wished Israel cursed by Balaam that he might overcome him, but failing in this, he suddenly changes his outward policy, becomes a great friend of Israel, they intermarry, Israel feasts with him—worships his gods and thus brings down the wrath of God upon itself so that twenty-four thousand Israelites were cut off with the pestilence. Thus our great adversary seems to have changed his outward policy and with a like success. Now he comes forth as an angel of light; advocates practical preaching instead of doctrinal—doctrinal tends to alienate—we must have less fighting and more union; less doctrine and more practice; he advocates broad church principles, and glories that there is not a drop of sectarian blood in his veins.

A wise writer, in a past age, said—"Among no sort of persons does practical religion run lower than among those who hear little else but what they call practical discourses pressed upon them."

In this part of the land where doctrinal preaching has almost ceased, morals have declined, and bold defiant wickedness has increased with a rapidity which I believe no age before ever witnessed. God often permits the wicked to go unpunished in this world. But when his church becomes corrupt, by and by his judgments will fall upon them. When the abomination that maketh desolate is seen standing in the holy place, then it is time for those who sigh and cry for the desolations of Zion to look for a hiding place till those calamities be overpast.—C. D. C. in Christian Observer.

Beecher on the Millennium.

Mr. Beecher devoted a column of the Christian Union to answering a criticism of Lange, the commentator, upon his view of the second advent. The doctrine of the Plymouth preacher is this:

"That there is to be a literal visit of Christ to the earth again, they may believe who are wedded to physical interpretations of Scripture. I do not so read the word of God. But that there is to be a power of Christ upon the earth, that may fitly be called his second coming; that the world is to be so filled with his glory that no man shall have occasion to say to his fellow man, 'Know the Lord,' because all shall know him from the greatest to the least; and that there shall be a new heaven and earth, in which dwelleth righteousness, I do profoundly believe. I believe in a glorious period of development, that is to make the world's history as bright as noonday."

This Dr. Lange pronounces an unscriptural delusion. Mr. Beecher, of course, defends it. He says there is only one passage, 2 Thes. 2: 1-12, which seems to sustain the view of a general apostasy—the coming of the Man of Sin—when the being of God shall be denied and all worship of him renounced. But Mr. Beecher claims that most of the reformers stand on the same ground with him, applying this passage to the Romish apostasy, which is past. He thinks the German commentators are too much influenced by the atheistic developments around them, and say that "all who look for a physical second advent of Christ, as the only hope of the world, are constantly tempted to exaggerate the power of evil in this age, and to doubt the possibility of a victory by intellectual and moral power." To which it may be replied that those who are looking for the triumph of Christianity by the simple force of truth, and the preaching of the word, are equally tempted to the other extreme of exaggerating the triumphs of the church and depreciating her reverses. We have not much faith in the theory of "development;" all the developments seem to go the wrong way. The present signs of the times, are thus graphically summed up by Lange:

"A wide-spread, daring fundamental unbelief; a more and more conscious hatred of the divine; even in the better class of spirits a deep gnawing skepticism, that undermines the lowermost foundations of divine and human truth and authority; so that little holds its ground as sacred which was formerly so held even by rude transgressors; all piety is with many utterly shaken, and revolt elevated to a principle; to this is added the worship of genius, the emancipation of the flesh, the arrogance of rule over nature, and a coarse self-deification."

To destroy the works of the devil is there not some special divine interposition necessary, more than we have in our present system of preaching? Do facts warrant us in believing that the true church is at the present time, in any country, increasing in equal ratio with the physical and material progression of the race? We think not. Looking at mere human probabilities, we should say that without some new dispensation, or special manifestation of divine power, there can be little hope of such a millennium as the Bible leads us to expect.—Am. Baptist.

Not Afraid—But Ashamed.

It is related of a distinguished Massachusetts clergyman, that on a certain occasion, having partaken too freely of a charming but dangerous delicacy, he was suddenly prostrated by violent illness. His symptoms were so alarming that the physician in attendance found it proper to warn him of the possible fatal termination of the attack. Even a clergyman has a right to be disconcerted by such a communication. The physician saw the distress of his patient, and remarked: "But you certainly are not afraid to die." "Not afraid but ashamed," was the clergyman's answer. He escaped the shame of death under such circumstances; but the shame of illness and danger from his imprudent gratification of mere appetite probably prolonged his life, by making him "temperate in all things," and abstinent from such things as are positively pernicious.

There is a world of wisdom in the substitution of shame for fear, or the addition of shame upon fear, when a man knows that his illness is distinctly the effect of his own imprudence. It is not simply indulgence in "hot and rebellious liquors," which causes disease and death. There are many dishes, especially among those which are classed as luxuries and delicacies, which are poison rather than food. And a scientific analysis of what people eat would, probably, cause many things of common consumption to be classed among irritants, instead of edibles. It was the custom a few years ago with a prominent school of physicians to give their patients a list of forbidden and another of permitted articles of diet. The patients were enjoined to abide by these tables, or the medicine would be valueless. Perhaps it is not too much to say that, if the patients had added the medicine to the list of forbidden things, and followed the wholesome diet indicated, without medicine, their recovery would have taken place in most cases, if not in all.

It would be, perhaps, a good idea for a new school of medical practice to institute a series of scientific analyses of the articles of food in current use. The doctor, then, might send his prescriptions to the cook in the kitchen, instead of the apothecary. That different articles of food act in various modes upon the human constitution is a fact universally admitted; and the new school of medicine, hygienic rather that therapeutic, would meet at the beginning some if not all the ills that flesh is said to be heir to. No man can truly be said to be "heir" to that which he procures for himself; and the truth that many of the diseases in the world are simply of man's own procuring, or invitation, may well make us, when ill, like the New England parson, ashamed rather than afraid, if not both ashamed and afraid too.—Public Ledger.

Words Easy Understood.

"Except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken." (1 Cor. 14: 9.)

Not long since I had an occasion to listen to a distinguished speaker among the Catholics, and being quite anxious to hear the prayer prior to the meeting I hastened early to the meeting. When the preliminaries were over, he ascended the desk, and offered prayer. To my utter astonishment I could not comprehend a single sentence or word in his whole prayer. On inquiry I was informed that he had prayed in Latin. I asked if they could understand? The answer was in the negative. Who was benefitted? We think none were edified.

Let him, says Paul, "that speaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret."

I have observed that ministers will use phrases more adapted to a court or jury, than to an audience who are seeking divine instruction. We find the word of God written in a plain simple manner—words mostly easy of comprehension by even the children. If it were not so, we fancy but few would avail themselves of the chance to know the will of our heavenly Father. As it is, but few do try to understand, and if it were filled with dark sayings, we fear there would be none. But no, the good Master has caused it to be easily understood by all who desire to look into its revelation.

Dear Brethren: Use such words as will be understood by all who may listen, without a lexicon to follow you. Then your labors will be crowned with success, the people will be edified, no misunderstanding caused, no interest dying out. How often one dark sentence in a discourse, will cloud the interest of the hearers. We cannot be too careful in giving utterance to our words.

Leave out the Latin, Greek and Hebrew where the people are only conversant with English. And, like Paul, prefer to speak five words understandingly, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. Seek to be a workman fitted for the Master's use—'apt to teach.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We hear that Br. Marston has been invited to return to the Winebrenarians: but it is too late. He is too much of an Adventist.——The probable church near Volga Ind., which we mentioned last week, is now a living fact. Twenty-five members, and a move to build a chapel are a good beginning. Br Tibbetts' family have give a site and $115 to start the house enterprise, and others will do as nobly.——Br O. R. Fassett expects to be in Chicago, Sunday, Oct 15, and in San Francisco the following Sunday.——Br. R. R. Dutton contemplates changing his residence. See notice.——The church in San Francisco have rented a chapel on Mission St., where Dr. Stabler formerly preached. It will seat some 300 persons. They have not passed under the law, but enjoy the freedom of the gospel, in Christ Jesus, under grace.——Br. J. C. Kinsey, of Kansas, formerly a Methodist preacher, and zealous opponent is now teaching Adventism with equal zeal. At the late conference in Osage Valley, over forty sat down to the Lord's table, at the close. More Adventists, says one, than I supposed were in all Kansas. We trust Br. K. will be greatly blessed in his work.——The Wisconsin Q. M. (Br. G. Thomson's District) at Menomonie, was excellent. One entire family, formerly identified with different branches of the Baptist church, at last all sat together at the Lord's table, rejoicing in the "blessed hope," in short, as Adventists. May they sit an unbroken band in the Kingdom.——Br. Geo. W. Turner has returned to Northern Wisconsin not much improved in health. He will however, continue to preach on Sundays. He is located at Eau Claire, Wis. ——Sparta, Wis., "interest good; two new converts." Such is the latest report from that place.——A Chicago daily told us last week that Eld. Frank Burr was preaching that the soul is naturally immortal. However the next day's paper contained a denial of this charge of heresy from Br. Burr, himself, which the editor acknowledged, with some truthful remarks upon the influence and tendencies of popular theology.——Sixty five were baptized at the Alton Bay campmeeting. Two young men were ordained to the work of the ministry.——At the Vermont campmeeting (Bethel) a very interesting service during the week was an old people's meeting. There were present twenty upwards of seventy years; nine upwards of seventy-five years, and four upwards of eighty years of age. One brother, aged eighty-four years and past, walked fifteen miles to attend the meeting. Their testimony was cheering to the younger hearts. They felt youthful in hope, although with trembling limb and bowed form.

The Times.

AT HOME.

— — — Our government has had a variety of "Indian policies." The latest is using Indians to fight Indians. This is 'progress,' we suppose.

— — — Somebody utters this bit of sarcasm upon the base ball mania: No people under heaven can excel the Americans in the manly art of sitting on a bench and seeing eighteen men play ball!

— — — It appears, from statistics at the Land Department, that 19,000 settlers made bona fide entries on the public lands last year. Since the passage of the homestead act, in 1863, there have been 100,000 entries. These alone make 20,000 more landholders than there are in Great Britain.

— — — The enormity of the peculations in New York, makes the thieving by some United States officials, whose thefts of from half a million down have just been discovered, seem quite small affairs. Henry W. Beecher's late sermon on stealing is quite in good time. The work of government seems to have fallen into the hands of robbers to an alarming extent.

— — — Thousands of people along the Gulf and Atlantic coasts of the Southern States have been frightened half (or quite) out of their wits by the prediction by somebody (no one knows who), of an immense tidal wave, to overflow the lands Oct. 5. According to one journal, the people on the North Carolina coast have become very religious, are holding extra religious services—to continue we suppose till Oct. 5, and then the people will return to their old ways. Converts scared into piety are worthless. Hearts changed by love and the Holy Spirit are the only true conversions.

— — — If the public confidence withstands the strain put upon it by the revelations of these, it will prove nothing better than credulity. The corruption of the New York city officials is of such a character that one is, as it were, stunned by the reports of enormous steals, which follow one upon the heels of another, and which appear to exist in every department of the city and county government. We cannot do the subject justice in our columns. It would require our whole paper should we attempt to give our readers a clear idea of all the frauds which have been unearthed. At present there is some hope of a better day at hand. Certainly it can hardly be worse.

— — — The Mormon question is exciting much attention. The discovery of precious metals in Utah has called in an immense population of "gentiles," and backed by this force, the United States courts appear determined to enforce the laws against polygamy. Brigham Young himself, will, it is said, be arrested, as other of his disciples have been already. A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune gives a succinct account of the terrible evils of Mormonism—the reign of lust—not only licentiousness, but of power, of gold and of blood that have long run riot in Utah. Whatever the result may be it seems that the government has come at last to face to face with this politico-ecclesiastical power, and the inevitable, but the long delayed struggle is about to begin.

ABROAD.

— — — Accounts of dreadful shipwrecks are abundant, losses of from six to over two hundred lives.

— — — There have been two other colliery explosions—one in England, one in Switzerland, both fatal.

— — — The cholera continues in Russia, and at one point in Prussia, but seems not to spread further.

— — — Brazil—by its Chamber of Deputies—has voted to abolish slavery. Would that moral slavery could be abolished by law.

— — — A rumor of a plot by Napoleonists to restore the Empire, was, last week, succeeded by another that he was scheming for the throne of Belgium. And both rumors proved false.

— — — Russia is to have a grand dress parade of her entire army. All the officers and men now on furlough are to be called in, just to see how promptly the work might be done in case of a war.

— — — A letter from Bonn tells a story of a German General who, on inspecting his troops, not long ago, addressed them thus: "Now, my children, we can once more get seriously to work. The pastime of war is at an end, and drill must go on regularly as heretofore."

— — — The rumor that Austria's emperor will resign rather than face the political difficulties by which he is confronted needs confirmation. Such things are possible, they have been; but they are not within the pale of probabilities.

— — — The insurrection in Cuba is subdued. Four thousand fresh troops are to be sent from Spain to put down the insurrection in Cuba.—Both these items of news were received in one day last week. Our readers will take their choice. It is a sample of a good deal of the matter which burdens the telegraphic wire.

— — — Disraeli is credited, by telegraph, with a sensational speech, intimating that the Queen is becoming insane, and had better abdicate. But the cable gives us no very clear idea of it. Accounts by mail are awaited with interest. It can hardly be possible that the Tories will turn upon the Queen because of her abrogation of the royal warrant which made army commissions an article of trade. But no other motive can be conceived for such an attack upon Victoria.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

— — — Zachary Eddy, a Brooklyn preacher leaves that city for Chelsea soon. The point occasioning remark is that he goes to a salary of only about half that he can retain by remaining in Brooklyn.

— — — The Freeman's Journal London, has an earnest appeal from a Roman Catholic priest, headed: "Help for the Souls in Purgatory," in which it is promised that all who will aid in building a new church in Kensalton, near London, can forward the name of any deceased relative or friend for every ten shillings to be enrolled on the mortuary list, and share in all the special devotions of the church.

— — — As religion goes in those days, we presume the following item may go under this head: A North Carolina newspaper states that, in consequence of the prediction concerning a tidal wave, the people living along the coast are holding prayer-meetings night and day, hoping thus to avert the supposed impending calamity. Many are joining the church, and a general religious feeling prevails.

In this part of the land where doctrinal preaching has almost ceased, morals have declined, and bold defiant wickedness has increased with a rapidity which I believe no age before ever witnessed. God often permits the wicked to go unpunished in this world. But when his church becomes corrupt, by and by his judgments will fall upon them. When the abomination that maketh desolate is seen standing in the holy place, then it is time for those who sigh and cry for the desolations of Zion to look for a hiding place till those calamities be overpast.—C. D. C. in Christian Observer.

Beecher on the Millennium.

Mr. Beecher devoted a column of the Christian Union to answering a criticism of Lange, the commentator, upon his views of the second advent. The doctrine of the Plymouth preacher is this:

"That there is to be a literal visit of Christ to the earth again, they may believe who are wedded to physical interpretations of Scripture. I do not so read the word of God. But that there is to be a power of Christ upon the earth, that may fitly be called his second coming; that the world is to be so filled with his glory that no man shall have occasion to say to his fellow-man, 'Know the Lord,' because all shall know him from the greatest to the least; and that there shall be a new heaven and earth, in which dwelleth righteousness, I do profoundly believe. I believe in a glorious period of development, that is to make the world's history as bright as noonday."

This Dr. Lange pronounces an unscriptural delusion. Mr. Beecher, of course, defends it. He says there is only one passage, 2 Thes. 2: 1–12, which seems to sustain the view of a general apostasy—the coming of the Man of Sin—when the being of God shall be denied and all worship of him renounced. But Mr. Beecher claims that most of the reformers stand on the same ground with him, applying this passage to the Romish apostasy, which is past. He thinks the German commentators are too much influenced by the atheistic developments around them, and say that "all who look for a physical second advent of Christ, as the only hope of the world, are constantly tempted to exaggerate the power of evil in this age, and to doubt the possibility of a victory by intellectual and moral power." To which it may be replied that those who are looking for the triumph of Christianity by the simple force of truth, and the preaching of the word, are equally tempted to the other extreme of exaggerating the triumphs of the church and depreciating her reverses. We have not much faith in the theory of "development;" all the developments seem to go the wrong way. The present signs of the times, are thus graphically summed up by Lange:

"A wide-spread, daring fundamental unbelief; a more and more conscious hatred of the divine; even in the better class of spirits a deep gnawing skepticism, that undermines the lowermost foundations of divine and human truth and authority; so that little holds its ground as sacred which was formerly so held even by rude transgressors; all piety is with many utterly shaken, and revolt elevated to a principle; to this is added the worship of genius, the emancipation of the flesh, the arrogance of rule over nature, and a coarse self-deification."

To destroy the works of the devil is there not some special divine interposition necessary, more than we have in our present system of preaching? Do facts warrant us in believing that the true church is at the present time, in any country, increasing in equal ratio with the physical and material progression of the race? We think not. Looking at mere human probabilities, we should say that without some new dispensation, or special manifestation of divine power, there can be little hope of such a millennium as the Bible leads us to expect.—Am. Baptist.

Not Afraid—But Ashamed.

It is related of a distinguished Massachusetts clergyman, that on a certain occasion, having partaken too freely of a charming but dangerous delicacy, he was suddenly prostrated by violent illness. His symptoms were so alarming that the physician in attendance found it proper to warn him of the possible fatal termination of the attack. Even a clergyman has a right to be disconcerted by such a communication. The physician saw the distress of his patient, and remarked: "But you certainly are not afraid to die." "Not afraid but ashamed," was the clergyman's answer. He escaped the shame of death under such circumstances; but the shame of illness and danger from his imprudent gratification of mere appetite probably prolonged his life, by making him "temperate in all things," and abstinent from such things as are positively pernicious.

There is a world of wisdom in the substitution of shame for fear, or the addition of shame upon fear, when a man knows that his illness is distinctly the effect of his own imprudence. It is not simply indulgence in "hot and rebellious liquors," which causes disease and death. There are many dishes, especially among those which are classed as luxuries and delicacies, which are poison rather than food. And a scientific analysis of what people eat would, probably, cause many things of common consumption to be classed among irritants, instead of edibles. It was the custom a few years ago with a prominent school of physicians to give their patients a list of forbidden and another of permitted articles of diet. The patients were enjoined to abide by these tables, or the medicine would be valueless. Perhaps it is not too much to say that, if the patients had added the medicine to the list of forbidden things, and followed the wholesome diet indicated, without medicine, their recovery would have taken place in most cases, if not in all.

It would be, perhaps, a good idea for a new school of medical practice to institute a series of scientific analyses of the articles of food in current use. The doctor, then, might send his prescriptions to the cook in the kitchen, instead of the apothecary. That different articles of food act in various modes upon the human constitution is a fact universally admitted; and the new school of medicine, hygienic rather that therapeutic, would meet at the beginning some if not all the ills that flesh is said to be heir to. No man can truly be said to be "heir" to that which he procures for himself; and the truth that many of the diseases in the world are simply of man's own procuring, or invitation, may well make us, when ill, like the New England parson, ashamed rather than afraid, if not both ashamed and afraid too.—Public Ledger.

Words Easy Understood.

"Except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken." (1 Cor. 14:9.)

Not long since I had an occasion to listen to a distinguished speaker among the Catholics, and being quite anxious to hear the prayer prior to the preaching I hastened early to the meeting. When the preliminaries were over, he ascended the desk, and offered prayer. To my utter astonishment I could not comprehend a single sentence or word in his whole prayer. On inquiry I was informed that he had prayed in Latin. I asked if they could understand? The answer was in the negative. Who was benefitted? We think none were edified.

Let him, says Paul, "that speaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret."

I have observed that ministers will use phrases more adapted to a court or jury, than to an audience who are seeking divine instruction. We find the word of God written in a plain simple manner—words mostly easy of comprehension by even the children. If it were not so, we fancy but few would avail themselves of the chance to know the will of our heavenly Father. As it is, but few do try to understand, and if it were filled with dark sayings, we fear there would be none. But no, the good Master has caused it to be easily understood by all who desire to look into its revelation.

Dear Brethren: Use such words as will be understood by all who may listen, without a lexicon to follow you. Then your labors will be crowned with success, the people will be edified, no misunderstanding caused, no interest dying out. How often one dark sentence in a discourse, will cloud the interest of the hearers. We cannot be too careful in giving utterance to our words.

Leave out the Latin, Greek and Hebrew where the people are only conversant with English. And, like Paul, prefer to speak five words understandingly, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. Seek to be a workman fitted for the Master's use—'apt to teach.

We hear that Br. Marston has been invited to return to the Winebrenarians: but it is too late. He is too much of an Adventist.——The probable church near Volga Ind., which we mentioned last week, is now a living fact. Twenty-five members, and a move to build a chapel are a good beginning. See notice.——The church in San Francisco have rented a chapel on Mission St, where Dr. Scudder formerly preached. It will seat some 300 persons. They have not passed under the law, but enjoy the freedom of the gospel, in Christ Jesus, under grace.——Br. J. C. Kinsey, of Kansas, formerly a Methodist preacher, and zealous opponent is now teaching Adventism with equal zeal. At the late conference in Osage Valley, over forty sat down to the Lord's table, at the close. More Adventists, says one, than I supposed were in all Kansas. We trust Br. There were present twenty upwards of seventy years; nine upwards of seventy-five years, and four upwards of eighty years of age. One brother, aged eighty-four years and past, walked fifteen miles to attend the meeting. Their testimony was cheering to the younger hearts. They felt youthful in hope, although with trembling limb and bowed form.

The Times.

AT HOME.

- - - Our government has had a variety of "Indian policies." The latest is using Indians to fight Indians. This is 'progress,' we suppose.

- - - Somebody utters this bit of sarcasm upon the base ball mania: No people under heaven can excel the Americans in the manly art of sitting on a bench and seeing eighteen men play ball!

- - - It appears, from statistics at the Land Department, that 19,000 settlers made bona fide entries on the public lands last year. Since the passage of the homestead act, in 1863, there have been 100,000 entries. These alone make 20,000 more landholders than there are in Great Britain.

- - - The enormity of the peculations in New York, makes the thieving by some United States officials, whose thefts of from half a million down have just been discovered, seem quite small affairs. Henry W. Beecher's late sermon on stealing is quite in good time. The work of government seems to have fallen into the hands of robbers to an alarming extent.

- - - Thousands of people along the Gulf and Atlantic coasts of the Southern States have been frightened half (or quite) out of their wits by the prediction by somebody (no one knows who), of an immense tidal wave, to overflow the lands Oct. 5. According to one journal, the people on the North Carolina coast have become very religious, are holding extra religious services—to continue we suppose till Oct. 5, and then the people will return to their old ways. Converts scared into piety are worthless. Hearts changed by love and the Holy Spirit are the only true conversions.

- - - If the public confidence withstands the strain put upon it by the revelations of these, it will prove nothing better than credulity The corruption of the New York city officials is of such a character that one is, as it were, stunned by the reports of enormous steals, which follow one upon the heels of another, and which appear to exist in every department of the city and county government. We cannot do the subject justice in our columns. It would require our whole paper should we attempt to give our readers a clear idea of all the frauds which have been unearthed. At present there is some hope of a better day at hand. Certainly it can hardly be worse.

- - - The Mormon question is exciting much attention. The discovery of precious metals in Utah has called in an immense population of "gentiles," and backed by this force, the United States courts appear determined to enforce the laws against polygamy. Brigham Young himself, will, it is said, be arrested, as other of his disciples have been already. A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune gives a succinct account of the terrible evils of Mormonism—the reign of lust—not only licentiousness, but of power, of gold and of blood that have long run riot in Utah. Whatever the result may be it seems that the government has come at last to face to face with this politico-ecclesiastical power, and the inevitable, but the long delayed struggle is about to begin.

ABROAD.

- - - Accounts of dreadful shipwrecks are abundant, losses of from six to over two hundred lives.

- - - There have been two other colliery explosions—one in England, one in Switzerland, both fatal.

- - - The cholera continues in Russia, and at one point in Prussia, but seems not to spread further.

- - - Brazil—by its Chamber of Deputies—has voted to abolish slavery. Amen. Would that moral slavery could be abolished by law.

- - - A rumor of a plot by Napoleonists to restore the Empire, was, last week succeeded by another that he was scheming for the throne of Belgium. And both rumors proved false.

- - - Russia is to have a grand dress parade of her entire army. All the officers and men now on furlough are to be called in, just to see how promptly the work might be done in case of a war.

- - - A letter from Bonn tells a story of a German General who, on inspecting his troops, not long ago, addressed them thus: "Now, my children, we can once more get seriously to work. The pastime of war is at an end, and drill must go on regularly as heretofore."

- - - The rumor that Austria's emperor will resign rather than face the political difficulties by which he is confronted needs confirmation. Such things are possible, they have been; but they are not within the pale of probabilities.

- - - The insurrection in Cuba is subdued Four thousand fresh troops are to be sent from Spain to put down the insurrection in Cuba.—Both these items of news were received in one day last week. Our readers will take their choice. It is a sample of a good deal of the matter which burdens the telegraphic wire.

- - - Disraeli is credited, by telegraph, with a sensational speech, intimating that the Queen is becoming insane, and had better abdicate. But the cable gives us no very clear idea of it. Accounts by mail are awaited with interest. It can hardly be possible that the Tories will turn upon the Queen because of her abrogation of the royal warrant which made army commissions an article of trade. But no other motive can be conceived for such an attack upon Victoria.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

- - - Zachary Eddy, a Brooklyn preacher leaves that city for Chelsea soon. The point occasioning remark is that he goes to a salary of only about half that he can retain by remaining in Brooklyn.

- - - The Freeman's Journal London, has an earnest appeal from a Roman Catholic priest, headed: "Help for the Souls in Purgatory," in which it is promised that all who will aid in building a new church in Kensalton, near London, can forward the name of any deceased relative or friend for every ten shillings to be enrolled on the mortuary list, and share in all the special devotions of the church.

- - - As religion goes in those days, we presume the following item may go under this head: A North Carolina newspaper states that, in consequence of the prediction concerning a tidal wave, the people living along the coast are holding prayer-meetings night and day, hoping thus to avert the supposed impending calamity. Many are joining the church, and a general religious feeling prevails.

Father, Take My Hand!

THE PRAYER.

The way is dark, my Father! Cloud on cloud
Is gathering thickly o'er my head, and loud
The thunders roar above me. See, I stand
Like one bewildered! Father, take my hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
Thy child!

The day goes fast, my Father! and the night
Is drawing darkly down. My faithless sight
Sees ghostly visions; fears, a spectral band,
Encompass me. O Father! take my hand,
And from the night
Lead up to light
Thy child!

The way is long, my Father! and my soul
Longs for the rest and quiet of the goal.
While yet I journey through this weary land,
Keep me from wandering. Father, take my hand;
Quickly and straight
Lead to Eden's gate
Thy child!

The path is rough, my Father! Many a thorn
Has pierced me; and my weary feet, all torn
And bleeding, mark the way. Yet thy command
Bids me press forward. Father, take my hand;
Then safe and blest,
Lead to thy rest,
Thy child!

The throng is great, my Father! Many a doubt
And fear and danger compass me about,
And foes oppress me sore. I cannot stand
Or go alone. O Father! take my hand,
And through the throng
Lead safe along
Thy child!

The cross is heavy, Father! I have borne
It long, and still do bear it. Let my worn
And fainting spirit look to that blest land
Where crowns are given. Father, take my hand;
And, reaching down,
Lead to the crown
Thy child!

THE ANSWER.

The way is dark, my child! but leads to light;
I would not always have thee walk by sight
My dealings now thou canst not understand:
I meant it so; but I will take thy hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
My child!

The day goes fast, my child! But is the night
Darker [illegible] than day? In me is light!
Keep [illegible] and every spectral band
Of [illegible] shall vanish. I will take thy hand,
And through the night
Lead up to light
My child!

The way is long, my child! But it shall be
Not one step longer than is best for thee
And thou shalt know, at last, when thou shalt stand
Safe at the goal, how I did take thy hand,
And quick and straight
Lead to Eden's gate
My child!

The path is rough my child! But oh! how sweet
Will be the rest for weary pilgrims meet,
When thou shalt reach the borders of that land
To which I lead thee, as I take thy hand,
And safe and blest
With me shalt rest
My child!

The throng is great, my child! But at thy side
Thy Father walks: then be not terrified,
For I am with thee, will thy foes command
To let thee freely pass; will take thy hand,
And through the throng
Lead safe along
My child!

The cross is heavy, child! Yet there was one
Who bore a heavier for thee—my Son,
My well beloved. For him bear thine; and stand
With him at last; and, from thy Father's hand,
Thy cross laid down,
Receive a crown
My child!

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

TUESDAY, Sept. 12. I took the steamboat, Illinois, for Columbus, to-day, and thence came by rail to Memphis. We had to ride through the oppressive heat and suffocating dust. It is very dry, and the whole land is suffering for want of rain.

I was kindly received by Br. and Sr. Wadsworth, who were on the point of leaving to spend some time in St. Louis. The Freedmen one and all are very reluctant to have them go away, even on a visit. But the promise of a return satisfied them. Her school is the most interesting thing with them. They are willing to sacrifice or do anything to have their children educated. And some of them had rather pay their tuition to her, than send to the free schools. I spent the evening visiting and conversing with the Freedmen on the things of the kingdom. It was time well spent, and it gave mutual joy. Some of them are always to be relied upon, while many are unreliable, and turn aside, as do white people. But I find that the restless spirits that gave us so much trouble in time past, are either dead, or have moved away. The remnant left are in peace, and desire help to live as a church, and maintain their meetings. And our Missionary Board made provision for them out of the sale of the Mission property here. But the African Methodists who purchased it have not yet made payment, and the matter hangs in suspense for a few days as to what they will do. The men that the Bishop placed here have not succeeded in building up a society as they expected.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 13. Heavy rains to-day, by which all are refreshed. Our meeting to-night was given up on account of the rain and mud.

THURSDAY, Sept. 14. Had an interview with Mr. Barnum, late Superintendent of the Freedmen's schools. He told me that since the colored schools had been taken into the charge of the City Board, with the assurance that they would do better for them than their Northern friends, the promise had proved an utter failure. And while the colored people pay taxes to support the public schools, some of them now hire teachers to educate their children in private schools. This is noble in them.

Our flourishing school so long under the care of Dr. Leslie, with from one to two hundred scholars, is crushed out, and the colored people are calling for him to return. The young people that he, and Brn. Eastman and Cole, and others, trained, are taking their places in useful positions. And, in these young people the Mission Board and the friends of the colored race now have the rich fruit of their labors in the South.

When the schools were given up here by some of the societies, they supposed their work was done, and the schools would be sustained. In this they have been disappointed. Some have resumed their work. Mr. LaMoyne, of Pennsylvania, has given $20,000 to build a new school-house in Memphis, for colored youth, to give them a Normal and Commercial education. The building is up, and the school will soon be in successful operation under the care of J. H. Barnum.

I spoke to the Freedmen to-night from Heb. ch. 11; on the faith of the ancients, and cheered their hearts with the hope of the heavenly land, which the saints will have when Jesus comes.

FRIDAY, Sept. 15. Called upon Mr. Volk, the Disciple preacher. He was absent, but I had a conversation on our faith with his intelligent wife. She said she knew but little of the Adventists. She had barely heard of their views of soul-sleeping, and she with her husband having been brought up Methodists, held their view on the subject. Being convinced that immersion was the only true baptism, they had joined the Disciples. "But," said she, "I do not know where you find 'soul-sleeping' in the Bible. I do not know of a text that teaches it." I said, perhaps she had not looked at the matter critically. And I assured her there were more than fifty plain texts in the Bible teaching 'soul-sleeping.' She was surprised at this statement; but said it was a dreary thought to lie and sleep so long. I replied there was no realization of time in sleep. The first thing we know after death is the waking in the resurrection. "Well, if it is so, I do not care to know it!" and here the matter dropped. "But," said she, "call on Mr. V. on his return." The Disciples, sometimes called Christians, who follow Mr. A. Campbell in his "reformation," all hold to the immortality of the soul. The sect called Christians in the East, arose, chiefly under the labors of Eld. Elias Smith, about 1807, and generally hold to the same notion. But Eld. Smith was a materialist out and out; and for years many churches and ministers followed him. But within the last thirty years there has been a change. Spiritualism and immaterialism are the orthodoxy of the nineteenth century, with Catholic and Protestant alike. But there are some who read and follow the word of God, which teaches that the dead sleep, and the future life depends on the resurrection at the second advent of Christ.

SATURDAY, Sept. 16. Attended the Jewish service at their chief synagogue. It being the first sabbath in the Jewish calender, it was a great day with them. There was a large attendance, a respectable and fashionable audience. The reading, prayers and chanting were in the highest style of art, and the services were more solemn and orderly than any I ever witnessed before among the Jews. I sat for more than an hour absorbed with thoughts of the past. Abraham and his descendants came before me in all the phases of their history. In Canaan and Egypt. The exodus and settlement in Palestine. Their prosperity under David and Solomon, and the glory of the temple and kingdom. Their captivity in Assyria, and Babylon, and return under Cyrus. The birth of Jesus, the Messiah, their rejection of him, and final overthrow by the Romans, and the dispersion among all nations, "as a hissing and a by-word." And here I gaze upon a portion of this wonderful race, still rejecting Christ, and given over to all sorts of fables and superstitions, while clinging to the "law and the prophets," understanding neither; but "groping in darkness and the shadow of death." God be gracious unto them, and yet save some before the return of the Messiah.

I spent the evening with Dr. P. D. Beecher in a conversation on the Scriptures, as to what they teach of the state of the dead, and I met the "popular superstitions" of the day, as brought up by my questioners.

At the request of several friends I am to speak to-morrow to the white people. Hitherto my labors here have been among the Freedmen. The following notice has been given, and I hope for good:

Where do the dead go? The soul; what is it? Does it sleep in death? Heaven, hell; what and where? These questions will be discussed Sabbath, Sept. 17, at 10 1-2 o'clock a. m., and 3 p. m., in the second Circuit Court room, County Building, Union St., by Eld. Joshua V. Himes, editor of THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, Buchanan, Mich.

At 7 1-2 o'clock p. m., Mr. Himes will also meet objections and answer questions that may relate to the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus! the Thief on the Cross! And other Scriptures that may seem to teach the immortality of the soul, and the eternal life of the wicked in torture. All are invited, especially Bible students.

SABBATH, Sept. 17. Went to the Court Room, and found a large audience of intelligent appearing men, with a few women. Several colored people people were present, and occupied seats without objection by or offence to any. And the audiences continued full through the day. I spoke in accordance with the notice and had a fine hearing. It was a glorious day for the Advent cause.

At night I answered objections, and questions by the audience. The meetings continued two hours, with intense interest. The usual objections were brought up, and met in a way that the objectors evidently did not dream of. Some gave their adhesion to the truth, and I think most present were favorably impressed. A number of professional men were present, and some ministers. Among them was Rev. Mr. Watson, a Methodist, who lately discussed spiritism with Eld. Graves. I had a conversation with him. He is a sort of Swedenborgian as to his opinions of the soul, believing that when it leaves the body it becomes an organization, just as we are now, only spiritual; and that these spirits have constant intercourse with the inhabitants of this world. He might as well be a Spiritist; and I frankly told him so.

A number of intelligent Freedmen took a deep interest in the discussion, and some received the truth.

MONDAY, Sept. 18. Had another interview to-day with Rev. Mr. Watson and with Mr. Johnson, at the office of the Western Methodist. The subject of my preaching yesterday came up at once, when we had a spirited talk on the state of the dead. Br. Watson finally owned up that he did not believe that there is any death, in reality. The body falls, the man lives on. Br. Johnson, the editor, said but little, but apparently thought the more, though he did not dissent from Eld. Watson's views. Such views are not very apostolic; but the church is drifting in this way, and might as well go over to Spiritism.

The Western Methodist is a large quarto sheet, and is their denominational organ for the South West. It is ably edited by Rev. W. C. Johnson. It has a circulation of some six thousand a week. I gave them some of our works, including those of Br. Collins. As Eld. Bowman, of Lydia, S. C., has come out an Adventist, the subject will now be more generally agitated in the South, and if opposed, will bring on a conflict that must result in the spread of light.

The Southern Methodists are now taking great interest in the colored churches, and are assisting them to a more perfect organization, and are helping them to rise. Mr. Watson has been appointed by the white conference to aid them in this good work. They have now organized a "Colored Methodist Episcopal Church," and elected two colored Bishops. The African Episcopal church is an older body and quite distinct, as are, also, the African M. E. Bethel, and the African Zion churches. Bp. Miles, of the new church, says "these older organizations are arrayed against us; and the Northern Methodists, the 'Old Mother,' as she calls herself, is another enemy. And what is it that stirs up their hate? We all have the same doctrine. What is the matter?" The Bishop tells it: "This is what they hate—the whites respect us as a church." That is, the white Methodist church, South, respect and help them. And they add: "We are glad to know we have so conducted our church-history as not to lose the good will of our white brethren" at the South.

The colored Episcopal church publish the Christian Index in Memphis. It is a well conducted sheet. Br. Watson is one of the editors. This is progress. I find the colored people of this land, who number more than four millions are rapidly rising in their different organizations, in education and wealth. And their religious institutions have more strength than we could expect.

I addressed the Freedmen to-night from 1 Cor. ch. 13: on the subject and importance of love; as without it we are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." Many spoke, and seemed to feel the importance of the subject.

TUESDAY, Sept. 19. I expected to have a report from the Conference of the African Episcopal church, in relation to their final action in taking our chapel and school-room in North Memphis, but failed to receive it. I cannot wait longer now, but must leave this a. m. for Arkansas, for some weeks to preach the gospel in a new field.

Parted with Br. and Sr. Wadsworth, who go to St. Louis, and at night met the Advent church, and took leave of them. They are full of faith and hope. Their trials have done them good. They have never been stronger in the faith, or more united and active than now. They look forward with interest to the time when they will again have a place of worship, and prosper still more in the Lord.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20. At an early hour left Memphis, crossing the River to Hopefield, Ark., where I took the Little Rock Railroad to Davall's Bluffs, eighty-five miles. The first forty miles was through tall heavy timber, and swamp lands, without a single village on the road, and the only buildings an occasional shanty or log-house at the watering places for the locomotive. The land is low, and at high water the river overflows to what is called the Ridge, some forty miles. They are now raising the bed of the railroad above high water mark.

The next forty-five miles was varied with timber and clearings. In the clearings I saw some of the finest and richest corn and cotton-fields. The cotton is the best I have seen South. We also passed through some villages, but they all show the features of a new, wild country. At 3 p. m., after eight hours riding, we came to Davall's Bluffs, and took the steamboat on White River. This River rises in Southern Missouri, and runs through Arkansas to Victoria, and there empties into the Mississippi. It is navigable for 600 miles. It is a beautiful stream. Its banks are lined with rich foliage. But while the waters of most rivers in the wide Southwest are soft, the water of White River is hard. It rises in and runs some distance through a region of land strongly tinctured with lime and alkali.

This vast region of country is as yet thinly populated. There are many large and rich farms, but the poor people have not got in the way of cultivating small farms, with economy and industry, for a living. But they must learn this, and then all will be making homes for themselves in this rich domain.

On the banks of the River there are but few houses or farms. The water rises over the banks and floods the interior for many miles. Stopping at a wood-station for a little time, I went upon the bank and saw the family residing there. The house was built of logs thrown together in a loose way, giving them no protection from the wind. The roof was tight. No chimney, fire-place, or stove. A large fire of logs is kept up night and day in the door-yard. And everything looks primitive. No room for pride or worldly show here.

I asked them about their religious interests, and they said they had meetings some miles away, and some interest. I gave them a copy of THE TIMES, for which they seemed thankful.

There is much ignorance and vice in these destitute regions; but not more in proportion than in many of our populous cities, among the poor and degraded. The world is full of sin and ignorance.

We sailed up the White River for 180 miles. Nothing of moment occurred on the way. I found but few religious men on board, but with one I had much conversation on the subject of our faith. He was very intelligent, but knew only the popular theology. He questioned me on every point relating to the state of the dead, and I gave him chapter and verse, much to his amazement, and finally to his satisfaction.

From O E Barnes, Salem, Mass.

A convert to Bible materialism amounts to something. A convert to immaterialism gets into the fog, but a convert to materialism gets out of the fog into a bright light, and clear atmosphere. I find it so by my own experience, and see it corroborated by that of others. I am glad I received the light when I did. And I am glad that my mind was turned from business pursuits, to the ministry, as it was fully, at the DeKalb, Ill. meeting, three years ago. And I am glad that the door of the tomb is not the entrance into glory. I am glad that death is not the gate to life, for if such it was, I should always dread the day of reward. I am glad in Christ, that the Christian's hope is the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; but above all I am glad that this hope is mine, for it has saved me; it has kept and it does keep me.

From Wm Branch, St Johns, Mich.

I have just returned from Bridgeville, Gratiot Co., where I have preached a number of times and I am glad to report a good interest. A minister who lived there about a year, had left them and denounced them as heathen; whereas I learn that the reason he was unsuccessful among them was that they l not have confidence in him. My er is that all Advent ministers may tice as well as preach. Surely we t gain the confidence of people if expect to do them any good.

As often as we look at bituary notices in our paper we reminded, every week of some of faithful ones who have bid adieu arth, and are sleeping with the l, whose lives are now hid with st in God, to be revealed at his ing and kingdom. O brethren sisters, let us pray more fervently oftener, 'Thy kingdom come, thy be done."

From A B Huntington, Clinton Co. Iowa.

I want to say to the dear brethren and sisters who like myself, are readers of THE TIMES, and are "looking for that blessed hope," of which Br. Paul wrote, that I am still seeking for glory, honor and immortality, in the way of God's appointment, and that though often weary and foot-sore (so to speak) I have not become tired of the way, during my pilgrimage of more than forty years. I feel that the afflictions and trials of this life are as nothing, compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us, at the appearing and kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; "who shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his most glorious body;" and give us an inheritance with all them that are sanctified.

It is now about thirty years since I embraced the hope of the soon-coming of the Lord, a hope of which I have never been ashamed, though often reviled, and my name cast out as evil; and this hope I would not part with, for all of this poor world's riches and honors. For the greatest part of the past fifteen years my wife and I have been almost alone here in this section, in this gospel hope; but latterly there is a change for the better. Last June Br. J. S. Heath, of Neponset, Ill., came here and spent about a week, preaching and distributing tracts and other Advent publications, by sale and otherwise, and thus got up quite an interest, though principally among the unconverted and non-professing class, and stirred up a good deal of opposition among church members, who at first refused to open the church to him, although they afterward yielded a reluctant consent, as they saw that it was working to their disadvantage. Good was done and the truth fastened in some minds.

A week or two ago I had the privilege of attending meeting with the Advent church in Toronto, in this county, which has been raised up principally through the labors of Br. P. S. Buck, assisted occasionally by Brn. Dutton and Chandler. I shall hope to enjoy the privilege occasionally of meeting with them, though at the expense of a twenty miles walk each way; not a very easy matter for one of my age—almost seventy years. I did it once, and found it to pay well. I enjoyed a rich repast; three good square meals, besides the communion season, and witnessing the immersion of a dear youth who thus put on Christ. May he have a part in the resurrection of the just, is my earnest prayers.

Beloved, I long to see Jesus and be made like him. Pray for me, that I may be found of him in peace, when he shall come to make up his jewels.

Minutes of a Discussion.

EIGHTH SESSION; FENN'S THIRD SPEECH.

Burgess has given us from the primer some thoughts on the terms sheol and hades. He makes them to mean a very dark place, quite as dark as the grave, I conclude. Now what particular advantage can there be in going into such a dark place wide awake? For my own part, I prefer to go there asleep; and this my opponent would have you think is a terribly gloomy doctrine. I wonder if it is any less gloomy to be sent into hades, where it is as dark as darkness itself, wide awake, than it would be to go into the grave where it is no darker, fast asleep?

The passage in Mat 10: 28—"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell," is a strange text to prove the undying and uninterrupted, and indestructible nature of the soul. Why, it is one of the strongest proof-texts in favor of my faith. Instead of proving anything in favor of the soul's indestructibility, it proves the reverse.

The 37th Psalm furnishes a strong fortification for my faith. We have many positive declarations relative to the final lot of man, in this Scripture. And no plainer fact can be adduced, than that the Psalmist believed that man would be rewarded as a being, and that in the earth.

I have placed before you upwards of fifty passages that apply directly to the question, and no single one of them can be construed so as to favor the negative of the question; and they have not been shown to mean other than what I claim, viz.: that death is an unconscious state, and that man is rewarded at the resurrection, and the second coming of Christ. I have proved man to be the subject of salvation, or damnation instead of man's spirit being [illegible] subject. I have proved materiality an organism to be indispensable [illegible] exercise of the functions and [illegible] of man's being. I have showed [illegible]utiful harmony between rea[illegible] philosophy.

My faith has [illegible]terally declared in the proo[illegible] brought to bear upon the qu[illegible] while that of my opponent has been inferred from some passage that did not declare in round terms the spirit or soul to be this, that, or the other, as he would desire.

My opponent's arguments are well illustrated by the story of the boy who claimed to have built a meeting house out of corn cobs. When asked what made it a meeting house, he replied. "Because I say so!"

Burgess' third speech.

Reference has been made to my view of Rom. 6: 23—"For the wages of sin is death." I never said it was spiritual, but moral.

The inner man thinks through the instrumentality of the body; but does that prove it cannot think without it? Why does not Fenn take up the case of the fallen angels? He thinks he has illustrated my position by the cob meeting house; and now I will illustrate his position by the young man who thought he could make a horse-shoe nail; and when allowed by the blacksmith to try, he only shivered the iron all to pieces; upon which he cried out, "I can make a fizzle," and plunged the iron into a pail of water. [Laughter.] Friend Fenn has "made a fizzle," if he has done nothing else. [Laughter.] I do not think that Br. Fenn has gained anything by introducing the cob meeting house. I have matched him in his pleasantry, as well as in his arguments.

This question has been presented in its most favorable light by my opponent. I have the satisfaction of knowing that I have spoken the honest sentiments of my heart, and we shall have to meet what we have said at the bar of God. I expect you to take the Bible and look at this question and believe that your heavenly Father has something better for you than nonentity. A number of familiar texts were hastily glanced at, and an appeal to the audience made, and Burgess' last speech was ended.

Fenn's closing speech, of ten minutes.

Br. Burgess has placed me before you in rather a ridiculous light by the blacksmith story; but let us look at that story. Br. Burgess will of course, have to take the place of the blacksmith in the application he has made.

You will remember that the young man "shivered the blacksmith's material all to pieces;" and that is just what I have done with the material Br. Burgess has furnished; and there is not enough of it left to "make a fizzle." [Laughter.]

My arguments have been formed to persuade you of the truthfulness of one of the most obstinate facts with which we have to do, viz: that man dies, and that after he dies. he is dead. It seems almost absurd that any one should have to produce argument to persuade you that a dead man does not know any thing. But I flatter myself you see things in a very different light as the result of this discussion. I commend you to God and to the keeping of the Holy Spirit, and pray you to let the Bible be your instructor; and the truth your choice wherever it lies. The truth is unchanged, whatever may be the verdict you render. It will stand the same as when God gave it birth, though a thousand may oppose it, to where one will embrace it.

The efforts of my opponent or myself will not change a shade in one of its beautiful folds. Like the diamond it may be covered, it may be hid in the rubbish of tradition, but let it once be bared to the rays of light, and it flashes forth with all the beautiful colors of its nature.

With its sanctifying power truth will make the believer free. Put away from your heart the vain imaginations of a spirit land, and look at the glorious hope of the resurrection through Christ. Grasp the arm of Jehovah by faith, and trust its power to give you again life and consciousness and being, though in death you sleep the undisturbed repose of unconsciousness.

Jesus is Coming.—No. 3.

Well, here we are once more, to have a little talk about this blessed theme.

Since our last chat I have thought much about—"And before him shall be gathered all nations." And as you suggested, there is manifestly a difference between gathered and gathering; for this chapter does not refer to the process or work of bringing together, but to the result itself. The process is clearly spoken of elsewhere, and this is what I wish to speak of at this time.

You mean to stick by the plain declaration of the Bible do you not?

Yes, I do; and you shall be the judge. Of course you have read Mat. ch. 24, where "most everybody" says is recorded the declaration that "no man ever can know, not even the angels of heaven, neither the Son," when this great event is to take place.

Yes I was reading that not long since; but, bless you, it don't read that way.

True, but that is the way it is frequently quoted. But I was to call your attention to v. 31, where Jesus after speaking of his coming in the clouds of heaven, adds: "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect," etc. Here then we have the grand process by which God's children are to form that glorious assemblage, spoken of by John in Rev 7: 9—"A great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands." You will please notice that angels are to be employed in this work of gathering God's people; and again, our Savior says in Mat. 13: 49, "at the end of the world, the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just." But how will they do this? By gathering together his elect. You will remember what the Lord says by David, Ps. 50: "Gather my saints together," etc. And this is said in connection with the declaration that "Our God shall come, and not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." Again, in Is. ch. 43: "I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west. I will say to the north, Give up! and to the south, Keep not back! Bring my sons from far and my daughters from the ends of the earth."

Well that does look like gathering together his elect from the four winds of heaven; and the "angels" are to be engaged in this work. I must confess that it is a beautiful idea, and it accords well with the apostle's statement; "they are ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." So far you have shown who are the agents in this work of gathering the saints. Now, is there any plain declaration in the Bible as to how this process is to be carried out?

Yes, I think there is. First, then, you remember the statement of Jesus while speaking of his coming. "Two shall be in one bed; one shall be taken, the other left; two in the field one taken, the other left; two at the mill, one taken, the other left." Now here is a reference to the work of the the angels, who take one and leave another.

Yes, but where, and how do they take them?

Let Paul answer: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout; with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." Here we have the way in which they are taken. "Caught up," of course by the angels, "together with" God's precious dead, now made alive, "to meet the Lord" in the air.

But you don't suppose they are going to be caught up bodily, do you?

Certainly.

What, this body of flesh and bones?

No, not exactly this body; for Paul affirms that "our vile body shall be changed, and fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body." You see, it is a "changed body." Again, he says (1 Cor. ch. 15), We shall all be changed: for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

Oh! yes! I see it now. Their change is not in throwing away of the body, but in having added to it something of which until then, they are destitute.

Certainly: and that "something" is immortality; for which by a patient continuance in well doing they have been seeking, and now they obtain it.

Well, I must acknowledge in all candor that there is very much more of importance connected with the coming of Jesus, than I had been in the habit of thinking.

I am glad to hear you speak so candidly. Jesus' coming is of itself an event of great importance to us, is measured by the events connected with it. Therefore, the better we understand the nature and character of these events, the greater will be the importance we shall attach to the advent,—and the more likely will we be to seek a suitable preparation for it, and so, according to Peter's admonition, be "looking for, and earnestly desiring the coming of that day."

That reminds me of what I was reading a few days ago, in Heb. ch 10; the admonition "not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Now the idea to my mind, was this: that somebody would have an understanding of the approach of that day, and would be looking for it.

I think your idea was correct; for Paul affirms that, "unto them who look for him, shall he appear the second time," &c. Now, how can any look for him unless they are expecting; and how can they expect him, without a proper amount of evidence showing that his coming is approaching?

True; that's logical. But is there any thing in the Bible that sustains such logic?

I think there is: but, as my time is limited, and not knowing how soon we shall meet again, and believing you to be an inquirer after truth, I would recomend for your perusal such works as treat specifically on this subject, which you can readily obtain from the office of THE TIMES. And by the by hadn't you better become a permanent subscriber for THE TIMES? You have tried the "trial subscription" long enough to judge of the value of our paper. You will not only reap a benefit yourself, but it will encourage those who issue the paper; and by encouraging them we give greater efficiency to it. But for the present we must take the parting hand, with our usual good-by. D. O. HINK.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 3, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil, the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR, Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,
To whom all communications should be addressed.

"Good Tidings."

The long-looked for "Conference Book" has now appeared with the above title. See notice in another place, and send for a copy. $1. in cloth. 80c. in paper, postpaid.

The Good Way.

The next regular issue of the Good Way, will be in October. Orders will be promptly filled in the order that they are received. 75c. a hundred. Special notices for any locality inserted, without extra charge, when not less than 250 copies are taken.

Send a Stamp.

When you write a letter which requires an answer, make it an invariable rule to enclose a stamp, to pay the postage on the reply. Editors—and ministers, too—find their postage bills a heavy tax on their pockets.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

Advertise "The Times"

We furnish envelopes and paper bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, at the following prices:

Twenty-five (25) envelopes, post-paid, 10c.—25 sheets flat note (2 pages) 15c.—25 sheets flat letter, 20c.—40 sheets of flat note and 25 envelopes, 25c.—40 sheets flat letter and 25 envelopes, 35c.—100 sheets of flat letter, 50c.—100 sheets flat note, 35c.

Rich Man and Lazarus.

We express our surprise at the growing popularity of this exposition of the parable of Dives and the beggar. By L. C. Collins, author of "An Address to the M. E. Conference of Minnesota." The first edition was exhausted ere we were aware. A new edition is now ready. 48 pp. 5c. by mail, pre-paid. By the quantity, a discount of 25 per cent. will be allowed. To those who wish a large number, strictly for distribution, we will make very liberal terms.

New Music.

A sheet with seven pieces, "I love to tell the story," etc. Price 20c.

"Jerusalem Forever Bright," by Amanda Bailey. Price 5c.

"Rest Over There," by Geo. E. Lee. 5c.

Praise Songs 32 pp. of choice tunes. 15c.

Camp Meeting Music, 16 large pages. 10c.

The four last named, to one address, 30c. For sale at this office.

Whitmore—Cheap Edition.

We are pushing this along as fast as possible. It [illegible] better printed than the last, for our new press [illegible] good work. We are anticipating fresh and [illegible] al orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies [illegible] $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We have heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." [illegible] Every one can afford to have Whitmore and Collins, and Sheldon [illegible] and then [illegible] in places the authors themselves [illegible]. Buy and distribute, or lend the works.

The Proposed Chart.

We [illegible] realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, [illegible] to publish if a sufficient number of [illegible] could be obtained. The responses [illegible]. Shall we have the other ninety names?

John S. Lawver, M. B. Greer, Eld J. Raymond, C. C. Marston, F. Burr, The Chicago Church, D. O. Hink, I. C. Wellcome, J. F. Huber Grand St. (New York) Church.

Who will help fill up this list?

Nothing Better

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canadas) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists; and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 15c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

Which Is It?

Last week we received a letter wishing THE TIMES sent to Hillsdale, to E. E. Goff. If there was only one Hillsdale, we should know where to send it. Which is it?

Please never write us a business letter without giving us your POST OFFICE, and STATE, and NAME, IN FULL, PLAINLY WRITTEN.

Don't imagine that J. V. Himes remembers you, and will know where you live and remember all about the matter. When J. V. Himes is in Arkansas we can't ask him about it, very well. Besides he may forget. Write it out in your letter, all about it. Then we will willingly bear the blame of our own blunders.

We have now twenty or more letters in our "Reference File," with which we can do nothing on account of the writers having neglected to give their Post Office Addresses. Whose are they?

Obituary.

BILLINGS.—In Bloomington, Ill., Sept. 23, after a lingering illness Lewis Billings: in his 57th year.

Br. Billings was regarded by all that knew him as an exemplary Christian. He was long connected with the Congregational church, till some years since. When that organization was dissolved in Bloomington, he with others joined the Presbyterians. He was active in his duties, and taught a class in the Sunday School.

About two years ago he became convinced from reading THE ADVENT TIMES, and some works thrown in his way, that the doctrine of inherent immortality was false, and that there was eternal life only through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead. This led him to see the importance of the personal coming and reign of Christ, which he embraced most heartily. He could not keep his light hid, but let it shine; which so disturbed his brethren in the church that they took away his Sunday School class from him, lest his influence and teachings might spread. Still they professed friendship to him, and did not formally cast him out, for he was much beloved not only by those who knew him, as a brother, but by all who knew him, for his consistent life.

He fell asleep trusting in God that he would soon send Jesus, "whom the heavens must receive till the times of restitution spoken of by all the holy prophets," to redeem him, with others, from the grave, and give him that inheritance promised to all the saints.

W. K. EVERSON.

LEDDICK.—In Bridgeville, Gratiot Co., Mich., Sept. 24, 1871, Georgie D., son of Samuel and Lucinda Leddick; aged 2 years, 9 months, and 6 days.

Within six months death has twice entered this family circle; and now the dear little sister is followed to the land of the enemy by her brother. Side by side they await the glorious dawn of the resurrection morning. The parents deeply mourn their loss; yet they sorrow not as those without hope. They expect to meet the loved ones in the land where no tears of sorrow shall be shed.

Sermon by the writer, from Ezk. 37:34.

Dear Lord, may we submissive be,
Whatever be our sorrow;
For by the eye of faith we see
Joy cometh on the morrow.

WM. SHELDON.

Book Notices, Etc.

We have received two pieces of new music from G. E. Lee—"Life in the Future," and "The Father's Mercy." The first is one of Br. Lee's best. The other is good, too. 5c. single; 50c. a dozen. Br. Lee's address is 287 Main St., Springfield, Mass.

THE Leonard Scott Publishing Company (140 Fulton St. New York) furnish the American public with some of the most important literary matter of the day. We refer to their publication of the four great British Quarterlies—The Edinburg, The London Quarterly Review, The Westminster, and the British Quarterly Review. The reader of these magazines of literature is kept fully posted in the progress of modern thought.

In the last Edinburg we notice especially interesting article upon the military policy of Russia, which unmistakably means—Constantinople. It contains also, articles upon the Vatican Council, on Darwin's theory of man, France under the Commune, and other interesting topics.

The London also gives us a good article on Darwin, with another on Austria and the results of its crushing defeat by Prussia. Jeremy Taylor and his works are discussed, as is Shakespeare and Dumas. A discussion of the origin and influence of music opens with taking paragraphs. Other essays fill out the number.

The Reviews are $4 a year each. Single numbers, $1. A discount to Clubs. Address as above.

Notices, Etc.

Notice.

I shall print a paper soon, on the season of the judgment. Will send it free to all who will send for it, either for themselves or to scatter.

Newark, N. J. ABRAHAM FLAVELL.

Notice.

All letters, communications and remittances for the monthly journal entitled Woman and her Work, should hereafter be addressed to Mrs. E. S. Jennings, No 74 Williams St., Rochester, N. Y.

To Iowa Brethren.

Having lost their addresses, will Br. Dutton and others who requested me to visit Iowa this fall and hold special meetings, be so kind as to write, stating the time they will need me, so that I can make my arrangements accordingly? C. C. MARSTON.

P. O. Addresses.

S. C. Wellcome, St. Charles, Winona Co., Minn.
A. F. Moser, Linden, Genesee Co. N. Y.

All letters for Anna E. Smith or the Star of Hope Mission should be directed to Box 75, Station A, New York city.

Any who have sent letters during the year past which have not been acknowledged, will please write to me immediately, informing me when and from what office the letters were sent. ANNA E. SMITH.

Notice.

I wish to locate in some neighborhood where my family will have the privilege of Advent meetings. Would like to find a farm of from 25 to 40 acres; with a comfortable house and water. Can pay about $600, but only a part of it down. Would like to settle where I could supply preaching, more or less, to the brethren in the vicinity. Parties interested can address me at Iron Hill, Iowa. R. B. DUTTON.

NOTE. We recommend Br Dutton very freely, as "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Brethren anywhere need not hesitate to send for him. He will build you up and do you good. ED. TIMES.

Discussion.

There will be a discussion at the Baptist church in Money Creek, Winona Co. Minn., on the evenings of October 3, 4, 5 and 6, between Eld. C. F. Dikeman (F. W. Baptist) and Eld. E. T. Himes (Adventist).

QUESTIONS.

1. Resolved, That when man dies he remains in a state of unconsciousness until the resurrection."

H. affirms; D. denies.

2. Resolved, That the future retribution of the wicked will consist in banishment from God to endure the torments of endless remorse.

D. affirms; H. denies.

The sessions will begin at 7 p. m. and continue two hours. The speakers will be confined to twenty minute speeches.

Minnesota.

A number of brethren desiring to move to Minnesota, take this method of inquiring where they can find good land to take up claims under the Homestead Law. Will any Advent brethren in Minnesota or Dacota, who would like to have other Adventists settle near them, please write, giving information as to the character of the country; the water; if near a river, and if so, if it is navigable, etc.

Tuesday Afternoon, Oct. 10, 1871.

New Light.

In traveling over the country I occasionally meet some good, pious brethren who wish in all things to be perfect, and would not for the world be wrong in anything, who have come into "new light," as to the great value and importance of a name. They have come to see clearly that without the right name, we are surely wrong, and hence the name is an essential thing.

Conscientious, zealous for God and truth, they will follow the light they have at all sacrifices. I admire them for this. I love their piety and their zeal. But in this thing of a "name," I fear they have a zeal which is not according to knowledge. It somehow strikes me that like our old "Rule of Three, Inverse," where "more required less, and less more," so the more knowledge, the less zeal in this direction, will be indicated in the quotient. That this whole thing of a name is but an outside affair, merely the shell, the husk, the clothing, so impresses my mind, I cannot throw off the conviction. And to make it a serious question, looks to me like children that have fallen to scattering and wasting their meats, in a foolish wrangle about the shucks.

Perhaps in this I may be all wrong. Phrenologists tell me that my bump of reverence is small; and that I would naturally have but little regard for relics, old institutions as such, or mere forms and names. And the more I study the matter of a name, the less importance I confess seems to attach to it. I can see that some name becomes a necessity in social life. If you have a dozen more or less horses and cows, a name for each becomes a necessity, that you may talk intelligently about them with your man who cares for them. But the name could neither detract from nor add to of any one of them a single farthing. Calling a rock a stump does not make it one; and should all consent to call it a stump, it would be a rock still. And this new name would soon attach to its signification, all the qualities of the name rock, and thence forward would become just as good as the other; and just as appropriate a name ever after, to indicate anything solid, permanent and durable.

But what I wish to come at more directly, is the idea that a "church organization should bear no name but a Bible name." There are good Bible names I know, by which to designate the people of God. But these are all generic names, not specific. Existing facts require specific names; names that denote not only God's people in general, but any peculiarity of their faith. A difference in doctrinal views has divided the real people of God into different church organizations. Now what I want to say is this; that if we have any right to differ in opinion, one from another, we have a perfect right to a name, expressive of that difference. And if that difference involves an important truth, one that has been overlooked or suppressed, is it not our duty, either to take or accept of a name, that will bring out that truth more prominently before mankind?

Now Bible names will not do this. There are generic names, and of universal application. Take the name "Christian." Every real believer in Christ, is a Christian; and it gives no idea of any distinctive faith any further. So of the name "Church of God;" all true believers belong to it; no sect or people can appropriate the name to themselves as expressive of anything more than a common faith; and it is understood by universal consent. Now to reject every name that expresses just because it is not a Bible name, seems to argue that we are either ashamed of what is our peculiar faith, and shrink from sailing under our true colors; or that there is a lack of good judgment in the matter, so that we are really, "more nice than wise." Some may be "novices," and be "lifted up, and so fall into the snare of the devil" from a desire to be leaders in a new movement; but generally it arises from conscientious scruples, that any other than a Bible name is wrong. I can but think a correct view of the subject would dispel all these as notions unfounded in truth.

For, first there is no renunciation of our claim in full, to any Bible name God has given us. We adopt them all: they are the very foundation; the ground work; absolutely our proper rightful names. All sects and denominations are classified under these generic Bible terms; and the world understand, that they are "Christian" denominations, belonging to the "church of God." Having a distinct name no more deprives them of this right, and fact, than our given name deprives us of our surname; or that our having a given and surname, so disinherits us from any claim to our generic name "man," as thereby to forfeit our manhood.

And, secondly in taking a distinctive name we hang out before the world we are making every sacrifice to get them to see and believe. Union under such a name becomes a very effective means among the "all means" to be used, for the spread of the truth. And all honest opposition to such a name would seem to indicate a dyspeptic state of mind rather than one vigorous and healthy, one of Bible growth.

Let me illustrate my idea further. My name is Collins. Now this is not a Scriptural name at all; it is not found anywhere in the Bible. And, moreover, God never gave it to me; it is a Gentile name, given me by others. "Man" is the name given by God to the whole human family. This is the generic name, he never gave any other. (Adam means this—i. e., the man. Gen. 2: 19. Marg.) Now for me to have a specific name, one God never gave me, is wicked. I cannot pray and serve God, and be his child and honor him, and bear such a name. Now I will come out of this thing of an unscriptural name altogether; and I will "reorganize under a Bible name." God made "Man," and he called him Man; he did not call him Collins; and there is no Bible for such a name. Hereafter I shall own to no name but Man. So I write to some of these sticklers for a Bible name, and sign my name "Man." Now if they could find out who wrote the letter, and why it was so signed, wouldn't they say—"that is straining at a gnat; there must be a screw loose in that fellow's head sure!"

But, still further; supposing we have no right to any but a Bible name what one among the many shall we take? Why, say a dozen voices, "Christian!" Now this name is regarded by some, I know, as an inspired one; and hence it becomes the duty of all Christ's followers, they claim, to take it. But where is the evidence of its inspiration? All evidence goes to show, rather, that this was a name given not by God at all, but in derision and contempt, as a reproach by their enemies; just as "Methodist" was to the followers of John Wesley, and "Millerite" to those who espoused the views of Wm. Miller. "The disciples were first called Christians at Antioch," where dwelt a "people noted for their scurrilous jesting," as three Latin writers independently testify. We have also this testimony of Tacitus, who, speaking of the persecution of believers under Nero, says, "the vulgar called them Christians;" thus clearly indicating how the name originated. Still further had the name been by divine appointment, it could not be but that it should have been constantly occurring, both in the Acts, and in the Epistles, all of which were written subsequent to this historic data. But what are the facts? There is but one single instance of its use in the mouth of an inspired penman. And then, reference appears to be made to it as a term of reproach, imposed by their enemies, and they are exhorted not to be ashamed of it. (1 Pet. 4: 16.)

How much confidence then can one have in this as

AN INSPIRED NAME.

It is first used by the scurrilous jesters of Antioch; once it is found in the mouth of a Jew, and once only, it is referred to by an inspired penman; and then evidently as a name of reproach, of which he tells them they need not be ashamed. Now, candidly, where is the evidence of its inspiration?

Again, by others it is claimed, that the "church of God," is a Scriptural Name, which all his people should adopt. Now that it is a Scriptural name we freely admit; but then it is not a distinctive name, and cannot be. As a name it is already, and always has been adopted. Every church on the earth, has this name. The simple name church implies and includes the whole thing. The Methodist church, is the Methodist church of God; the Baptist church is the Baptist church of God; the Advent Christian church is the Advent Christian church of God. "Why then," you say, "not express it fully?" Because (1) it is fully understood to be included, without being so expressed. And (2) it is the more Scriptural to have it implied, than expressed. Jesus Christ never expressed it fully, and the Apostles very rarely. The term church—with its plural—is used some one hundred times in the New Testament and only seven times is it called in full the church of God. Now if we would be the more Scriptural we should never use the name "church of God;" but simply "church." For the simple name "church" is fourteen times more Scriptural, than is the name "church of God." Now let those who claim to be very Scriptural, be as Scriptural as possible!

"But why have any prefix to it, like Methodist, Baptist, and Adventist?" For the same reason that you call one boy John, and another Simon, and another James, when they all belong to the same family, and bear the same family name. If one is wrong, so is the other.

In the name "Advent Christian Church," the term "Christian" is entirely superfluous. It to the name, inasmuch as the term "church includes all those over the face of the earth who profess to believe in Christ," excluding any idea that a church may be a body of Mohammedans, pagans or unbelievers. The Advent Church expresses the whole idea, and expresses it better. "Christian" was added by way of compromise; and other terms might be and no harm done. But then, is not a simple name, which fully expresses the idea, the more convenient and sensible? Not a few honestly think so.

But we are told, "there is the name 'Disciple:' is not that a Bible name?" Certainly it is, but it is not the name of a church. It does not express the idea. Disciple signifies scholar, learner, pupil; and from its signification, it is applicable to all believers in Christ, and to all followers of any religious teacher or leader among mankind.

To suppose we are to take upon ourselves a name, because we find it applied in the Bible to believers, is certainly being wise above what is written. The multiplicity of names, show there was no such design. The term "brethren" is ever occurring, numerically outstripping any other. And then we have "Children of God," "Sons of God," "Heirs of God," "Flock of God," "House of God," "Household of Faith," "Believers," "Saints," "Sheep," and very many others. Christ personally applies the last term "sheep," to his followers oftener than he does any other. "My sheep hear my voice;" "Other sheep I have;" "I lay down my life for the sheep;" "Feed my sheep;" "Fear not little flock;" and at the last he sets his "sheep" on his right hand. We give these as a sample of found scattered through both the Old and New Testament Scriptures. And yet who ever dreamed that it was his duty to call himself a "sheep," because it is a Bible name for a believer! But we need hardly be surprised should the idea creep into some heads to do so.

But there are serious evils always attending a punctilious spirit that will distract the body for the sake of a name. It disintegrates the building, divides interest, weakens the cause, and hinders the truth, more than all outside enemies could do. Whatever profession of attachment for the truth such may have made, it is manifest that their hearts have turned away from it. It is not the mother of the child that will see it divided for a name. The true mother will say, "Nay, but let the child live!

In conclusion I would say, that it is made the duty of God's people to unite together as such to maintain divine worship; to have the word of God read, or expounded, and the sacraments duly administered. Such a union of believers is called a "church." This one name "church" expresses fully the whole idea; and all Bible names and appellations, are shared as a common inheritance by each and all. All true believers in every church and every where, make up "THE CHURCH"—the true and universal church. And it is a very simple idea, that any particular church may take a name indicating its locality, or anything peculiar in its faith, and be in perfect harmony with all Bible names and Bible teachings on this subject.

And it has been so, that when the church has moved forward in proclaiming

ANY DISPENSATIONAL TRUTH,

a name has been given or taken indicative of that truth. And from this fact, there stands upon the pages of church history, a vast array, a long list of persecuted SECTS, each bearing a name that lives to tell how nobly for the truth they fought, and suffered, and perhaps died. First in this list, of reproach for Christ, is the name "Christian." When that came to be honored, it would no longer answer the persecutors of the faithful. Then suffering saints are stigmatized by the names, Waldenses, Albigenses, Wiclifites, Lollards, Moravians, Lutherans, Reformers, Protestants, Baptists, Methodists, with many others, in perfect keeping with the spirit that has given the names Millerite, and Adventist to those who now look for the Savior's return. These names, given in reproach in their day, were accepted by the persecuted ones, and so nobly worn, as to become their badge of honor, in the Church militant ranks. And who if he had lived in the days of Peter Waldo, Wiclif, Luther, Wesley, and their compeers, would not have esteemed it an honor to have stood by their side and shared with them, both in the perils of the conflict, and reproaches of the name. They bore those names for Christ; they bore them nobly, and they will of them, in the day of reckoning. In that day, what witnesses will all these names be to those tried and persecuted ones who suffered for Jesus and his word.

And if there be anything in a name, anything to be coveted or venerated, it is a name rightfully earned by him who wears it, upon God's great battle-field of truth. And if we are right; if we are now upon the eve of Christ's second coming, as the fulfillment of all the prophetic Scriptures indicate, of all the names God's people have ever borne, the name "Adventist," is the most desirable. It is the crowning one of all. What a privilege to be marshalled under the banner that bears inscribed upon its folds, this exponent of God's last dispensational truth to men—"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." What honor shall those have, who herald his glorious appearing and kingdom, and are found "giving meat in due season." "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Of a truth I say unto you, he will make him ruler over all that he hath. (Lk. 12: 43.)

And can this great truth be loved, and yet the name eschewed? Who can say it? L. C. COLLINS.

Wanderer's Return.

AIR: ANNIE LYLE.

Down from the bending willows,
Now my harp I'll take;
And from strings so long neglected
Heavenly themes awake.
From this land of death I'll hasten
To my Savior's side;
By this dark and sickly water,
I'll no more abide.

CHORUS.—Bending willows, land of darkness,
Babel's stream farewell!
Thoughts of Zion lovely Zion,
Now my bosom swell.

Gone has been all heavenly comfort,
Gone my Savior's smile;
Nought of earth could give me pleasure,
Nought my grief beguile.
Mocking foes would often chide me,
Saying, why so sad?
But, when I remember Zion,
How could I be glad?

Now my Savior comes to meet me,
With a smile of love;
Pilgrims, too, with welcome greet me,
As I homeward rove.
Angels look with joy to see me
In the narrow way,
And one kindly comes to guard me,
Lest again I stray.

Now as onward still I'm gazing,
Rises to my sight,
My long looked for, lovely city,
Gemmed with heavenly light;
Tones of sweet, seraphic music
Floating on the air,
Charm me on, with hastening footsteps—
Soon I shall be there.

J. A. LIBBY.

The Day-star is Rising.

AIR: A LIGHT IN THE WINDOW.

Oh! the day-star is rising for thee, brother,
The day-star is rising for thee;
For the Savior is coming with the mansions prepared
Oh! the day-star is rising for thee.

CHORUS.—Those mansions of glory we'll share,
Which Jesus has gone to prepare;
Those mansions of glory we'll share,
And praise him who brought us safe there.

Soon the angels are coming, be glad, brother,
The angels are coming for thee,
For the archangel's voice shall be heard everywhere,
"Now, gather my saints unto me!"

Our dear ones who sleep in the tomb, brother,
The summons will gladly obey;
They'll arise all immortal, and glorious, and bright,
And the angels shall bear them away.

Then be watchful, and waiting till then, brother,
For the morning is coming I see
When the good angels gather the dear ones of earth,
They, will not fail to find, you and me.

Good News.

TUNE: "AWAY, AWAY," in FRESH LAURELS, P. 72.

Good news, good news, for Jesus is coming;
Lift your heads, rejoice and sing;
Be watchful, be ready, and love his appearing
Jesus is our King.

CHORUS.—Where the pearly gates, will never, never close,
And the Tree of Life by the crystal river grows;
In the city of God, with its calm repose,
Our glorious home shall be.

Good news, good news, for Jesus is coming,
Swift the hours are gliding by,
Oh! soon we'll drink from the clear flowing river,
And never, never die

Good news, good news, for Jesus is coming,
Soon we'll meet him in the air,
When the good angels come, to gather his children,
May you and I be there

I love to think of the Savior's appearing,
When our loved ones we shall meet;
And with them join in the song of redemption,
At our Jesus' feet.

Amen! amen! Lord hasten thy coming,
Burst the barriers of the tomb;
Oh! send the bright angels, to gather thy people,
To their eternal home

A Word for the Young Men.

In one of the popular works of a lately deceased author (about whose present existence, whether in heaven or hell, the world made "much ado"), there is a character introduced, who, from that time in youth when he left the associations of home for a distant school, until he reached the maturer years of manhood, was solemnly impressed with the idea that the world in general, and the people he met in particular, regarded him as "a very young gentleman." They seemed agreed that he should be treated courteously and listened to patiently; but after all, his words and thoughts were to be accepted with due allowance for his extreme "youthfulness." Such an impression conceived early in life, with no encouragement from his parents to stimulate him to a noble life, dwarfed his energies and kept him effeminate in mind and action for almost the remainder of his life.

This character, however fictitious the story of his life may be, is a true type of scores and hundreds of young men all over our land, in every community, in every church, who appreciate too well their "youthfulness."

While it is a fact that there are many, too many, who have a sufficiently important opinion of their merits; who use great swelling words and who seek the admiration and applause of men; who pray with themselves (if they pray at all), "God I thank thee that I am not as other men are," yet we must not overlook the other fact, that there are very many in the background, waiting for the waters to be troubled, who need to be sought out and an expression of sympathy shown toward them, and a kind word of encouragement whispered in their ear; who need to be placed where their powers will be taxed and their strength developed, and for these young men we speak this word.

That man or woman who takes this work into their heart, who determines to lend a helping hand to those who do not appreciate their powers, and who do not assume the responsibilities to which God calls his disciples, will be engaged in a noble enterprise.

John says—"I write unto you young men because you are strong." The apostle looked after the young men and sought to gain what they could give to the cause—vigor of mind and body, which is so necessary to an earnest and wise Christian life.

In the early history of the propagation of the gospel in this country, the work of bringing men to a knowledge of God was largely in the hands of the ministry. The pastor preached a long sermon and the Spirit convinced scores in the congregation of their sins. The work seemed done by wholesale, if I may so speak of it; but now a different state of affairs exist, and a new but more vigorous preaching of the gospel is required. In those days if the brethren lived good moral lives by faith, they considered their duty done and the privilege theirs of departing in peace. To-day the work of bringing men to Christ is very largely in the hands of the laymen, and the most effectual work accomplished for God, is by those who, believing that with Christ's help they can do all things, go out into the highways and hedges; in other words, who meet men on the street, in the office, at home, anywhere, everywhere, and cease not to tell the story of the cross, and how eternal life may be gained.

The work is now a retail work—one that you and I must do, my brother and sister, if we would see the grand results promised to those who sow beside all waters.

Especially is it true that young men are needed to scatter broadcast the truth; and shall we leave the word of encouragement unsaid that may influence some young man to commence a more zealous warfare against sin and error, who now fears to let his voice be heard in the prayer or social meetings, lest he be thought "too young" to speak for the Master?

This age filled as it is with corruption and error, demands a bold, outspoken Christianity. Everyone who has named the name of Christ should not only "depart from evil," but they should take a manly stand against the skepticism and the so-called 'Liberality' of the day. To do this successfully we must be familiar with, and know how to wield the "Sword of the Spirit"—The Bible must be opened and its truths in all simplicity given to the people. No book in the world was ever so generally possessed and so little comprehended as an English Bible in the present day. Everything in society is unfavorable to its profitable perusal. The ceaseless activities of the good—the restless insinuations of the bad—the multiplication of books—the mingling of things sacred and profane, all tend to keep men from feeding in the green pastures or reposing by the side of still waters.

Who will look after the young men and see that their activity, zeal and love for the cause is properly directed, and their labor encouraged? Such an one will be doing a much-needed and faithful work, and will one day hear it said, "As ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me.

C. H. S.

Just to the Point.

I was much gratified with an article in THE TIMES for Sept. 19. It was headed "A Word with Women Preachers." I commenced preaching in this country when a woman preacher was a thing to be despised. But my heart was so full of love for God and his cause and poor sinners, I forgot myself in my great earnestness to do good. The result was, God blessed me and set before me an open door, and suffered no man to shut it. I rarely made an apology. In fact I am opposed to apologies in the desk, any how. People don't come to the place of worship to learn whether we are tired, and overworked, or have a cold, or did not think of speaking just then, or any of that sort of thing. They come to hear the gospel; and we, if we have any strength at all to speak, we had better be pointing poor sinners to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, than drawing attention to ourselves.

But, after all, in nine cases out of ten, perhaps the people are more to blame than the poor woman, who, weak and trembling, ventures forward to speak a word for Jesus. Oh! it is hard, terribly hard, to brave public opinion, even though you know you are doing right. And when all this is pressing you down like a cart under sheaves, perhaps some beloved brother or sister whispers in your ear—"Now sister, just make a few remarks about woman's right to preach; for there are many here who don't believe in it." Would it be anything strange for a woman in such a case to make an apology? Not at all. Yet, very likely, by doing so she lessens herself in the minds of her congregation.

But there are times when a woman without any thought of alluding to herself or women's preaching, upon standing up in the desk feels impressed to speak a few words on this subject. If so, speak right out, and say all you feel. The better way, in my humble opinion, is usually to attend to the work at hand. If you come to preach the gospel, preach it, and if you feel an opposition against you because of your sex, announce that you will speak to them on that subject at a certain time and place, when you can take up the subject in a clear, concise, methodical manner that will leave an impression upon the public which half a dozen apologies would fail to accomplish.

The editor of THE TIMES says: "Fitness for the work, and not sex, is the required qualification for preaching the word." I was once present at a minister's meeting of one of our most popular denominations in this State where the question came up as to woman's right to preach; and the presiding elder gave a finely written essay, stating that women could do a great deal for Christ, and, among other things, she could, like Priscilla, take the minister to her home and instruct him in the way of God more perfectly. He closed and sat down to listen to criticisms. Mr. Eggleston, then a settled pastor in Winona, since an earnest worker elsewhere, arose. I listened intently for what he might say. He took the different points made in the essay, and met them in his own masterly style. I have time to refer to only two points. What an idea, said he, our presiding elder presents to us, when he says, a woman can instruct a preacher how to preach, and yet not preach herself. I should think if she could teach the preacher, she would be the one to preach! The question in my mind, said he, is not whether she should preach, but can she preach?

Then, beloved sisters in the Lord, lead holy and pure lives. "Study to show yourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed;" and, let me assure you, your heavenly Father will sustain his workmen in the most trying situation, and prove to gainsayers that in the gospel dispensation "there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

RUTH M. ROWELL.

The Lord's Coming.—Its Prominence and Importance.

BY A CONGREGATIONALIST.

Why do the truths of the Second Advent fail to be appreciated and recognized by most of the professed people of God? is a question more easily asked than answered. Is it not difficult to understand, with the accumulation of passages from God's word, why there are believers in the Second Advent faith, who make the doctrine a speciality, for the burden of the Bible leans in that direction, but why every one who reads does not believe the doctrine and enjoy it, is one of the enigmas that cannot be fully explained this side of eternity. Is it because "the god of this world" has blinded their minds, lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears and understand with their hearts and be converted? Are they afraid of acquiescing in a doctrine that is unpopular and may bring upon them opposition and abuse? Does the doctrine of the world's conversion step in and leave the believer slumbering in his own splendid fancy of millennial progress and material advancement? Does the church take it for granted that because the general teachings of the pulpit are against the personal reign of Christ, therefore what the ministry says must be true? and so the conclusion is, if my minister, whose learning is so profound, be wrong, there cannot be much harm in my indifference!

Such are a few of the causes which operate to stupefy the people of the doctrine of the Lord's return. But this indifference will be seen to be wrong when we consider the great importance of the subject. If I am indifferent to it, I am careless respecting the hinge on which a large number of the prophecies turn. I am also indifferent to the tone and structure of the Lord's parables—to his transfiguration—the last supper, which is to be observed as a remembrance "till he come"—to his resurrection as the first-fruits—and to his ascension, coupled as it was with the promise of the angels: "This same Jesus who is now taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

When the disciples entered upon the work of their mission, as harbingers, to declare the gospel of the kingdom to all the world, the greatness of their task—which might have been appalling—had no terrors for them, for they were permitted to see to the end of their labors and persecutions; and this angelic promise ever acted as a charm and as an incentive to industry and perseverance.

Among the first lessons that we hear taught after the days of Pentecost, was that of Peter: "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3: 20, 21.) Paul, in writing to the church at Rome says: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us; for the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God....For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." (Rom. 8: 18–23.) To the church in Corinth he writes: "So that ye come behind in no gift: waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 1: 7, 8); and in the same letter he exhorts the brethren to "judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness and will make manifest the counsels of the heart; and then shall every man have praise of God." (ch. 4: 5). The 15th chapter is nearly all taken up with the same subject. The Christians at Ephesus are represented as "sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." (Eph. 1: 14). To the church at Philippi the apostle says: "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself" (Phil. 3: 20, 21). To the Colossians his utterances on the same topic are emphatic; but in writing to the Thessalonians he makes the subject so prominent, that, like some of the believers of our own day, they thought Christ's coming would be then; but in the second letter he corrects their mistake by showing how the development of the Papacy was first to be brought out—how this terrible system of iniquity had to grow and mature—how the Man of Sin had to "exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped, so that he as God" would sit "in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God;" which event has been most signally fulfilled in the late proceedings at Rome, and may possibly be the filling up of the measure of iniquity and blasphemy which should precede the final overthrow of the great western apostasy. Thus one might go on quoting largely from the scriptures of the Old and New Testament bearing on these things; but especially would we lay stress upon the Apocalypse of St. John, as bridging over the whole period from the first to the second coming of our Lord, and as telling us as plainly as the symbols can tell, of his personal reign and and triumph, after Popery and the false prophet are destroyed, and all "the heathen" who have been arrayed against him are dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel.

How the church can be indifferent to this all-important subject it is difficult to understand. Mr. Bickersteth says that "after careful examination" he has found "that at least, one verse of thirty in the New Testament relates to the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," and if there be included allusions to this great event, as well as different references, the proportion will be much greater, for "there are more than three hundred and twenty verses out of seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine found in the New Testament that point forward, as with eager gesture, to the future appearing of our Savior." So says Mr. Brooks, and he adds: "All the truths of God's word are of course important, but their relative importance, if I may so speak, can be fairly estimated by considering the prominence given to them in the revelations of the Holy Ghost. When, for example, we find the doctrine of our Lord's divinity repeatedly affirmed in every book of the New Testament, and the doctrine of human redemption through his blood pervading the gospel, and the doctrine of faith or belief in his name, as essential to salvation, stated about five hundred times, it is proper to infer that these doctrines possess special value to the mind of the Spirit. What shall we say, then, when we discover that the doctrine of our Lord's second coming is distinctly pro-claimed or incidentally mentioned in one verse of every twenty five, perhaps, in the New Testament? Can it be right to neglect such a truth? Can it be right to banish it from our thoughts as a forbidden subject? If our minister and professors in our theological seminaries should rarely or never clearly announce the doctrine of Christ's true and proper divinity, or his atoning sacrifice for sin, or the necessity of faith in him, they would be justly regarded by every real Christian as sadly derelict in duty, and surely they are no more derelict when they fail to announce the second coming of the Lord—no matter what their views are of his coming in relation to the millennium."

But whether men are interested or not interested in this theme, the drama of evil is coming to a close. Satan, the great embodiment and originator of evil, will soon have his career stopped. His day of spoliation is nearly at end. The arch-enemy of God and man will soon have done all the amount of damage to the race that he will be permitted to do. Then will come the fulfillment of the twentieth chapter of Revelation, and how glorious the scene! The great enemy of our race, the terrible calumniator and accuser of the brethren, the one who tried to frustrate our redemption in the wilderness by tempting our Savior to make bread of the stones, to cast himself from the temple's pinnacle, and to fall down and worship him, ends his career, and the awful reign of terror and devastation is over. The being who has so long held sway amongst principalities and powers of spiritual wickedness in high places, and who caused our first parents to be driven from the garden, is himself driven from his throne. The chain in the angel's hand—a fit symbol of subjugation—is placed around him, and he is secured. The agony of Gethsemane, the sufferings of the cross, and the scenes at the tomb, have fresh light thrown upon them. Death and hell are vanquished foes. The "restitution of all things" is begun. Man's probation is ended, and the great Sabbath of rest has commenced. The King of kings and Lord of lords reigns from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, without a rival. Every knee bows to him, and every tongue confesses that he is Lord of all, to the glory of God the Father.

Though this sublime picture of the destiny of man and of his inheritance is so clearly portrayed in God's word, we too seldom hear it mentioned in our pulpits, and hence arises, in part, the distaste in the mind of the public of hearing the truth on this subject. The supposition that the Advent doctrine is connected with errors of a grave nature may have also something to do with it. It seems to me to indicate a want of courage not to proclaim these sentiments to the people.

Journeyings No.—3.

After driving more than a hundred miles over the prairie, through rich fields of ripening corn, stacks of gathered wheat and other grains, dotted here and there with the farm house of the well-to-do farmer, or the pioneer's rude shanty, like islands in the sea; the wild fall flowers cover many acres yet unbroken by the plow, and arrest the attention by their varied form and color. Yet there is a sameness to these scenes, and the traveller gradually becomes weary of the unbroken waste, and as I neared Janesville on the evening of Sept. 11, the shrubs, vines and [illegible] trees of the forest were a relief to the eye, while the song of the bird is made music for the ear. I found that my letter sent some three weeks before had reached its destination only about two hours previous to my arrival, too late to announce the appointment; consequently there was no public service. The evening however was well spent in conversation with Br. J. Dana and family. Br. and Sr. D., though united with the F. W. Baptist church here, are firm believers in the Advent doctrine, and joined this body at their earnest solicitation. He is superintendent of the Sabbath-school and has been blest in working for God with this people. They have urged him to go out into the field to preach the word, and this he intends to do as soon as circumstances will permit. But when he does so, he will go as an Adventist, and not hold his Baptist brethren responsible for the so-called heresy, which it will be necessary for him to proclaim if he is true to his conscientious convictions.

As I was leaving in the morning I was introduced to Eld. A. R. Brockett of the F. W. Baptists, formerly of the Christian order. We travelled on together through the timber and had a very busy time discussing points of interest on which we differed, all in good spirit, which made it very agreeable. At Mankato we separated, and I passed on to Kesota. I trust a door may soon be opened in Mankato, to proclaim the truth unto that people. Before holding the evening service at Kasota, a few friends assembled at Br. Butter's house, and we celebrated the Lord's supper—a precious season. I find that the interest awakened at the campmeeting has not died out. They are having interesting prayer-meetings, and two more are waiting to be baptised. The flock are few in number, and have not organized as yet.

Sept. 13, I stopped at Ottawa, and preached in the evening. A 'magic show in town that night took the largest congregation and their money. So we had but few out. But the occasion was one of profit. I here met Elds. Scott and Bacon, with several friends who were among my first acquaintances in this State. Some were detained at home by sickness whom I visited, with comforting words.

Passing on down the Minnesota valley on the 14th I called at Belle Plain on Br. H. Lewis, agent at the Railroad station, and here fell in with an old gentleman by the name of Fearing, who proposed that I should stop and preach that night. We went to inquire about the Baptist chapel, and found an open door and free pulpit. But the hour was so late that we could not announce an appointment in season to secure a congregation; so the meeting was postponed till some future time.

I arrived at Jordan that evening, and found a place of rest at the hotel. Early in the morning I called on Sr. E. L. Stoughton, near Shakopee. She formerly lived near Rockford, where she had had heard Br. and Sr. Fassett and others, and by searching the Scriptures had become convinced that we have the truth. She was a Methodist, and her pastor told her to "keep away from those Advent meetings." But that made her the more anxious to hear what they had to say.

In the evening met with an attentive congregation at the Presbyterian chapel at Bloomington, and tried to show them the signs that indicate the Lord's speedy coming, and that the saint or sinner is not now receiving their reward or punishment, and will not until Jesus appears as judge of mankind.

Br. Pond, the pastor of this church, has been a faithful laborer in this country for about forty years. He first came here as a missionary among the Indians, but now and for several years past his labors have been principally with this church. They have a flourishing Sunday-school and maintain interesting prayer-meetings. These two departments of a church are indispensable to its prosperity.

This is my third call at this place, and though perhaps the most of the church regard my views as erroneous if not dangerous, yet they have kindly opened their doors and given me an opportunity to speak to these interested to hear. Br. J. D. Scofield and family are the only Adventists I know of in this community. E. T. HIMES.

Atonement.

This is the word used in the Scriptures to denote the redemptive work performed by the Son of God for the race. That this work was a positive necessity for their future existence and welfare no believer in the Bible can doubt; but the question may legitimately arise when was this necessity provided for by Omnipotence, and what was the [illegible] of the work of Jesus as a sin-bearer?

In reply to the first question it must be obvious to the candid mind that this necessity was not only foreseen but amply provided for ere man was created, else how can we understand the expression—"The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world;" of being "chosen in Christ, before the foundation of the world; of eternal life promised, and grace given to us in Christ, before the world began;" etc. It would be difficult to interpret these and kindred passages on any other hypothesis than the one herein suggested. And why should we try to do so? Why not be willing to admit our Father knew the need of his children before he created them, and as a kind parent made provisions for that need? And why not believe that the sorrow and afflictions of this life, instead of being introduced by the devil, contrary to God's will, were designed for our benefit, and are calculated, as the apostle Paul declared, to work "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Or as Peter expresses it, "now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

The popular view suggests the belief that God's law was too severe for the race, and necessitated the death of his Son as a substitute to bear its penalty, else all was lost. What a reflection on the character and wisdom of our Creator! True the death of Christ was a sacrifice for sin—the antitype of the burnt offering under the law, and the ground of our acceptance with God. In him we receive the atonement. But atonement is more than Divine friendliness to us, even through the medium of sacrifice. It is our reconciliation to God. And the death of Christ opens the way and furnishes the means by which this may be effected. But instead of its being secured to us as substitution necessitates we are required to use the means or forfeit the benefit.

What then was the object of Christ's life and death on earth? Let Peter reply. "He was manifest in these last times for you, who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God." (1 Pet. 1: 21.) Or Paul: "That he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 14.) Or the angel of the Lord: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." (Mat. 1: 21.) Yes, this was the work of Christ; not to placate God, but to redeem man. The cup there given by the Father was evidently the endurance of evil permitted, not inflicted; for the reference to it is followed by the words: "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me twelve legions of angels?" He suffered "the just for the unjust," not that the unjust might escape punishment, but "to bring us to God." How? Not by bearing the penalty for us, but by opening a way whereby we may escape from bearing it for ourselves. Guilt in terms of God's law is not the fact that we have sinned, but the final refusal to use the remedy. This is the only capital offense man can commit, but when it is committed, his doom is sealed. God is "in Christ reconciling the world unto himself;" but he did not go there to reside in consequence of Adam's sin; but was there already before he was created. Christ's death, then was not the cause of the Father's forgiving love, but the highest form of of its manifestation. Christ bore our sins in his body on the tree—died for us, not however in a penal, but in a remedial sense. The Father did not punish sin in the sufferings and death of his Son, but grieved over it.

How glorious the doctrine of the atonement appears when received from this stand point; and how we ought to reverence and love our heavenly Father, who in mercy gave his only Son to suffer and die that we might live. Our beloved Master was perfected through sufferings, and glorified as the result. His faithful followers will experience the same result from the same cause. He overcame the world, and thus he says: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even also as I overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Rev. 3: 21.) Our present lot then in this mortal, suffering state was designed by our heavenly Father to be, and is, the best for us, and will so prove in the end, unless we will it to be otherwise by continuing in disobedience. Nor are any of the race children of the devil, in a full sense, unless they have finally rejected the remedy for sin, and thus become incorrigibly wicked. E. ROYCE.

Universalism in a New Dress.

A man by the name of Henry Dunn of England, has lately made the marvelous discovery that the entire human family, antediluvians, Sodomites, and all others, who have lived and died in sin—and that too, under the teaching of prophets, Jesus and his apostles—are to have a resurrection unto final salvation. He excepts a few who sin against the Holy Spirit, and says they will be lost. But with this slight exception the whole of Adam's posterity will ultimately be restored to life, have probation and such a flood of light and spiritual influence as to make their submission to the Lord Jesus Christ certain, and as a result all will be saved.

All the passages of Scripture usually quoted by Universalists are brought into requisition to sustain this new theory. The terms applied to the end of the wicked, such as destroy, destruction, perish, devour, consume, burned up root and branch, death, cut off, etc., etc., are interpreted to mean only temporal or temporary penalties for sin—having no eternal significance. Mr. Dunn explains all these words and phrases in the Universalian sense. The terms applied to the "some" or "few" whom he says will be lost are no stronger than those just mentioned, expressive of the doom of the mass of wicked men; and by a little figuring and spiritualizing, the "some" or few left out of the general restoration could be brought in, and so all would be saved, without the loss of a human being.

Eld. Jacob Blain of Buffalo and George Storrs of New York, are converts to, or advocates of this new phase of Universalism—for such it really is—and are sending out their publications proclaiming the good news that there is "Hope for our Race," namely that all who have lived and died in rebellion against God with a few exceptions will finally be saved! This wonderful discovery affords them great relief. Their troubled minds are now at rest. God is all love with them, and no justice—no consuming fire!! With this new light, bad men can rest easy, and take their fill of worldly pleasure. Criminals of every grade and shade can ply their atrocious calling without the risk of being lost forever!

Well, these brethren will never refute what they have written against the old lie of the devil: if they were to live until they were as old as Methusaleh, they could not overthrow their masterly arguments against the doctrine that they are now advocating. The Universalists will claim them, and with them they will have to affiliate. It is of no use to deny the fact that the new departure is a slightly modified form of Universalism.

N. FIELD.

From Southern Indiana.

As the continued progress of truth is always interesting to those of like precious faith, I will endeavor to give you an outline at the least of the very interesting meeting of more than a week in succession under the labors of Dr. N. Field. Quite a number of worthy brethren and sisters in this place and the adjacent neighborhoods, have for some years past rejoiced in the doctrine of the second advent of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus, to set up his glorious kingdom upon the new earth, give the saints the long promised inheritance, and "put down all rule, all authority and all power," and sit "upon the throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever."

We tried lovingly and Scripturally to bring these things before the minds of our brethren and sisters, and while some received the truth in the love of it, glad to learn that "the time of the end has come," "when the wise shall understand," and "the kingdom be given to the saints of the most High under the whole heavens" (not above them), yet there were others who rejected this latter-day message, and can see nothing either in prophecy or the signs of the times to indicate the approaching footsteps of our coming Lord; and they are unwilling to investigate the sacred page to see if these things are so. They turn away from the plain declarations of the holy oracles, in some instances saying that if the views we teach are in the Bible, they do not wish to believe them.

In view of these things and much more that could be said on the subject, we felt it our duty to call for letters from our respective churches and organize ourselves together as Advent Christians, loving and looking for the coming of our blessed Lord and Master. We all received (at least those who called for them) letters of dismissal, and last Sabbath we commenced spiritual housekeeping for the Lord, with seventeen members, most of them earnest workers in the Lord's vineyard.

Our meeting went on with increasing interest, and the Lord was pleased to bless the labors of our brother, and those of the church, so that eight more were added to our number; six by confession and baptism and two by relation. I never saw happier converts in my life, nor those who seemed to better understand the glorious plan of salvation than those who have come in to live with us. It has often been alleged against us, "that our doctrine never converted sinners," but made inroads upon professed Christians. I think none who heard some of the young converts speak in our morning meetings, would ever again urge that as an objection to our views. One young man who holds an honorable position in the United States service, and who has given his youth to the pleasures of the world, said on one occasion "I have been in many places, have loved the pleasures of the world, have given much of my time and means to the opera, the ball-room, and the theater, and thought I enjoyed myself; but I have enjoyed more real peace and pleasure in the last twenty-four hours than ever before in all my life."

And there were other testimonies similar to that. One who had been a ring-leader in his neighborhood for fun and frolic, a young man of more than ordinary talent, was brought to see his condition, and (like Frank Dudley at Holton) rose without being invited, and made a noble confession of his life, and asked to unite with us. Oh! it was a joyful time, and we received him, I assure you, with a hearty welcome, and hearts overflowing with gratitude for what the Lord had done for us.

One elderly sister, very feeble in body, said as she came out of the water where she had been "buried with Christ in baptism," I feel as though I was in a new world." I could fill my whole letter with incidents of interest, but must hasten.

The next thing we did was to talk about putting up a house of worship for the Lord, and the talk was not all, but names went down upon an article drawn up for that purpose, to the amount of several hundred dollars, so that in a very short time we expect to have a place of worship, free to all who wish to use it, when not occupied by ourselves. Our young men as well as the old ones, are taking hold of this work with a zeal worthy the cause they have espoused. We now number twenty-five efficient working members; and though this movement has cost us many struggles of mind, feeling the separation from those we love in the Lord to be painful in the extreme, yet duty and conscience seem to demand that we should unite together for the purpose of promulgating the second coming of our blessed Lord, so precious to us, and, strange to say, so unwelcome to our brethren with whom we stood connected. But we love them still, and would say with good old Abraham (whose children we are by faith), "Let there be no strife between us, for we are brethren."

And I trust the time is not very far distant when the early prejudices of all will give place to a candid investigation of the word of God, and then, I am sure the light will break in upon many minds who are not now in sympathy with us.

We ask your prayers for this infant branch of the parent vine, that we may "bring forth much fruit" to the honor and glory of God.

MARY A. TIBBETS.

To Lovers of the Truth.

To one and all I would say—Have you seen the offer in THE TIMES to send it three months for the trifle of thirty-five cents, to any address in the United States? If so have you availed yourself of the opportunity? If not, try it at once. Just spend one dollar if no more, and you will be pleased with the result. Let us show our faith by our works. Jesus is coming. May he not find us sleeping. But engaged in sending the glad news far and near. VIRGIL HUNT.

Southern Wisconsin Camp.

The meeting closed Oct. 1. It was a profitable meeting to many weary saints. Eight tents were pitched, besides the large tent. Some gave their hearts to Christ, and some returned to the fold. Two were baptised. The most of the social meetings were seasons of special interest. Some pronounced it the best meeting they ever attended. Union and devotion characterized the meeting in the main.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 10, 1871.

WANTED.—More new subscribers for the ADVENT TIMES. Everybody is authorized to act as agents.

REMEMBER the dedication feast at Auburn, Ill. this week. Let there be a grand rally from all that region, and beyond.

ON our seventh page will be found a notice of a work which will command the attention of every Biblical student. Read it.

WE trust Br. Collins' article will be read carefully, and considered candidly. We refer to it simply to say that we endorse it, fully.

THE way to have an excellent paper is for writers to send in their best efforts, and then leave the editor free to select the best of these in every department.

SOMETIMES when friends write to complain of delays in the appearance of their contributions, we wish they would just say which article of others that have appeared should, in their opinion, have been left out to make room for their own.

REV. J. WESTON, D. D. of New York preached lately from Ezk. 21: 27—"I will overturn, overturn," etc., that God designed and would have America a land of religious freedom and toleration. No doubt of it; but what has the text to do with that?

THE Watchman and Reflector thinks the signs of the times are not altogether hopeful. The weakening of the marriage tie and breaking up of the home relations augur no good. It points to France, demoralized, ruined, and shows that the very principles it deprecates have tended largely to bring her where she is, and warns this nation to beware.

ONE Moses Hull advertises himself as "a reformed Adventist," now a spiritist preacher. He was once a follower of Ellen G. White, and among the Seventh-day Adventists. And the fact that he considers his present moral condition, as compared with even his former estate, a reform, shows how utterly perverted his moral sense has become. We are sorry for him.

WE return hearty thanks to brethren whose pens have enriched our columns for some months past. It might be invidious to mention names. But we assure them that their efforts are appreciated by our readers as well as ourselves. We plead that they will still remember us—especially those who have been silent for some time.

WE lately noted one of Alex. Clark's errors; with greater readiness we call attention to this tersely stated truth, as uttered by him: "Holiness is best promoted by a simple discharge of daily duties as they come, by quiet, earnest devotion to God at home, in places of business, in common vocations and in ordinary relations, as Christ the great Exemplar taught."

WE have two remarks to make upon the attempt of "U. S." in the Review, to be very sarcastic. First, it is not true that among Adventists interested in the time-question "almost every man has a time of his own;" and, second, if we, as a body, had a woman (or any body else), to tell us just what we should and just what we should not believe, doubtless there would be only one opinion on any point among us.

JESUS said it, but who believes it? "It is more blessed to give than to receive." What a world this would be if in families, the church, and everywhere the principle were carried out. Oh! this miserable selfishness—always 'looking out for Number One!' And when 'Number One' is provided for, then, possibly thinking of others. That is not Christianity. Let every one seek another's good. There is a blessing in it.

HENRY J. RAYMOND is reported by a medium to be 'running a daily' in the spirit land: and offers to send a copy into this sphere. If it is such a journal as he published in New York, we would wish an exchange. But as the Tribune remarks—"we know very well what will be the contents of that celestial journal. There will only be a fresh quantity of nonsense.'

—By the way is the paper on which 'spirit dailies' are printed an 'immaterial substance?' And what about the types and presses: are they the ghosts of old types and presses?

WE observe of late that in reports of meetings a great deal of stress is laid upon union and harmony prevailing. Is this such a singular feature of religious experience as to call for special mention? Ought not brotherly love always prevail? One would think so. Yet Paul wrote—"If it be possible, as much as lieth in you be at peace with all men.' He seems to think that sometimes it would be impossible to keep peace; and in such cases it should be our study to be free from the fault of the disturbance. And in any event we must insist upon the apostolic injunction "first pure, then peaceable." Peace at the sacrifice of principle is a rotten thing.

MR. J. W. BROOKS told a plain truth when he asserted of the Futurist systems of interpretation, that their apparent removal of certain difficulties, "is a great inducement to many superficial readers to receive their views, who would fain be spared the trouble of reading history and of studying and comparing prophecy, and who are now satisfied to wait for events which are to speak with sufficient plainness for themselves." We are prone to exaggerate the importance of our own times sufficiently, without running into the absurdity of interpreting the mass of prophecy in Daniel's and John's symbols of a few years in this generation. They are a pictorial history of the world from the times of the prophets to the end. Let us so understand them, and we shall not be led greatly astray.

Zion's Herald talks of being "unclothed and clothed upon," but is decidedly "misty." It brings up Christ in his resurrection body, notices what the Gospels say of it, and says Christ is an example of one that has "passed through death." And here is where the mistiness comes over the Herald; it does not see that passing through death he comes out of death, not half-way through, in an intermediate state, but clear on the other side by the resurrection. But the only way the intermediate state, and life in death and going to heaven theories can be bolstered is by appropriating resurrection and new earth texts. The Herald also tells Mr. Beecher he is mistaken when he says—"We are not to suppose that there is a hell—literally a place of fire and brimstone," and exhorts him to "preach the word."...

THE NATURAL SENSE.

We have more than once observed difficulties which prophetic expositors find in interpreting the "weeks" of Daniel. (ch. 9.) One would think the matter very plain; for it reads—"From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, there shall be," etc. Now as Jerusalem lay in ruins, or, rather, had been quite destroyed at this time, one would naturally suppose when they heard of a decree "to restore and build Jerusalem," that the event designed for the commencement of the sixty-nine weeks was now fulfilled. Nor would the mind be troubled or perplexed about the event referred to, should a dozen supplementary decrees, concerning details, repairs, material, etc., be issued.

Now God had said by the mouth of Isaiah "of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." (ch. 44: 28.) No one dare dispute that this refers to the rebuilding at the conclusion of the Babylonian captivity. Now let us put two things together:

"Cyrus....shall perform my pleasure ....even saying to Jerusalem thou shalt be built." (44: 18.)

"From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah," etc. (Dan. 9: 25.)

Is there room for misunderstanding here? Did not the Holy Spirit in the latter quotation clearly refer to the former utterance in the first? Whence, then, this talk about decrees of Artaxerxes and others. God said Cyrus should utter the decree; not Artaxerxes, nor any other of his successors.

And in Ezra's first chapter we read of this very decree, an extract from it; and Josephus gives it in full. Why, then, has there been any difference of opinion upon a point so plain? We are told, in reply, that 'Chronology' compels us to place the weeks at a later date, in order that they may reach to the time of Christ, at all. The objection is, then, that 'Chronology' contradicts the natural sense of the Scriptures: and we reply, so much the worse for 'Chronology.' The Scriptures assert that from Cyrus' decree, promised in Is. 44: 28 to Christ, shall be sixty-nine weeks of years: and if 'Chronology' says the 483 years fall short of Christ's birth more or less years, we reply, Let God's word be true, and 'Chronology,' we may depend upon it, is the liar.

But, says the objector, Ptolemy's canon is proved by eclipses, "and is it not to be set aside for the authority of any writing whatsoever." What, not for the Bible? We shall "set it aside," for that record and risk the consequences. Let those who will follow Ptolemy, and reckon from Artaxerxes: we choose to follow Daniel and Isaiah, and believe that from Cyrus' decree to Christ was 483 years.

But the readers of THE TIMES for the past few months need not be told that Ptolemy's boasted Canon has been tried and condemned. It has been clearly proved that he was guilty of the blunder of reckoning contemporaneous reigns as successive.

To illustrate. Suppose Victoria should this year associate her son with herself in the government of England, and then live on until she had reigned forty years, in all. Suppose, also, that her son should reign forty years from his accession to joint-rule with his mother. Now all can see that if in making a chronology of English history the chronologer should reckon both reigns by adding forty years to forty years, he would make eighty years from the accession of Victoria to the death of Albert Edward, which would be a blunder of four years, arising from his counting twice over the time of the joint-reign of mother and son.

Now several Persian kings did associate their successors with them in the government, just as we have supposed in the illustration; and Ptolemy in making up his Canon did make the blunder of adding together the entire years of the reign of each monarch, making no allowances for the years of joint-reigns.

And when we correct the Canon by deducting the sum of his mistakes, we find just 483 years from the time Cyrus gave the decree mentioned in Ezra (ch. 1), to the birth of Christ.

Let us not be too hasty in adjusting God's word to human systems. It will adjust itself in good time.

A REMONSTRANCE.

The following correspondence relates to an article from the pen of Eld O. R. Fassett, which appeared in THE TIMES during December, 1870.

TO ELD. J. V. HIMES:

Dear brother in Christ our Life: Allow us your attention to the communication of Br. O. R. Fassett, touching Br. Colegrove. So far as appears to us you violate your own rule in publishing such a review. It impugns wounds and wrongs most deeply one of the best men among us. To say nothing of the doctrine referred to (in which Br. Colgrove has as good a right to make a mistake as any of us), it is not good citizenship to write or publish such reproach, as is involved in said article.

We do not presume to analyze and correct the wrongs, beyond this brief notice—to suggest the obligation that may rest on yourself to make amends so far as possible to the wounded heart of an humble, devoted, and educated Christian minister, who loves and preaches the coming and kingdom of Christ at hand.

Our information is that our beloved brother has felt compelled to labor with his hands for the support of his large and fine family of seven children; but that he is still beloved by the Advent brethren, where he still lives and preaches—and not as reported that he has abandoned them to preach to the Baptist church. J. B. Cook heard his appointment made by himself, Sept. 17, at our Sunday service, for the Sunday following, Sept. 24; and in all our intercourse with the brethren I heard no word from anyone, save words of affection, interest and confidence in this worthy brother and fellow laborer in the gospel of Christ.

Please publish this in THE TIMES, and oblige, yours,

J. B. COOK, C. W. LOW, B. C. SIMONDS, A. C. NEWELL, C. F. SWEET.

—Besides the above we have received the following from Eld. Colgrove, himself:

Br. Colegrove in a note wishes to have it remarked with emphasis, that so far as Eld. Fassett's criticism upon the "Alarm Bell" is concerned, the assertion that he intimated the emperor William to be the "Prince of the Covenant," is wholly untrue. He insists that he neither suggested nor conceived any such thing, but quite the contrary; and the criticism had no basis or substance of truth, in this regard. That Napoleon will prove to be this character, he did and does maintain; and when time shall have disproved this earnestly cherished conviction, he will hope to receive meekly, any penalty which may be properly affixed to the error.

—Since reading the above we have reread the article by Eld. Fassett, referred to. We find in it no personalities, but a strong review of the person's erroneous teachings, such as many desired to see, and felt was due to the Advent body. For if the doctrine of the Alarm Bell—in its various forms of publication—were true, Adventism is a delusion and a snare.

Personally we have the highest respect for Br. Colegrove as a Christian, which feeling we endeavored to show in some attentions which were as kindly declined. Br. Fassett would join us heartily in these sentiments, we are sure. But when we come to his doctrine—the expositions of prophecy given by Br. C. we must protest against them as subversive of quite all we have held dear during the past thirty years. If he is right, Adventists are all wrong; and they ought to confess it, too. However we have no hesitation in saying we are not wrong. We have been right in the main, and God has a work for us, if we will do it. If we turn aside, he will raise up another people to do our unfinished work!

It seems to fall to our lot to speak out plainly upon these matters. Many in private endorse all we have just said, and speak as strongly, and with even more force than ourselves, against the tendencies which would draw Adventists off from their great work, and distract their attention to other issues: but not many speak out publicly. It is not often pleasant to do so. But some one must do it, and we are not afraid of expressing our convictions, whenever duty points that way.

But we would not misrepresent. Hence if in a review in our columns of Br. Colgrove's views, any misrepresentation has occurred, we are heartily sorry; and affirm it was not malicious, but an error of the understanding; and we are obliged to our good brethren, and to himself, for calling attention to it, and hope to receive forgiveness for the fault, if it is so called.

But we wish it distinctly understood, that if the so-called "Napoleonic theory," advocated in "the Alarm Bell" is right, then the principles of interpretation of the Scripture laid down by Wm. Miller, and defended by him and his compeers in the Signs of the Times, Midnight Cry, Advent Herald, World's Crisis and the Advent Times, are all wrong: and Adventism is worse than a failure; it is a delusion.

But says one—Futurism claims that the end is at hand, as well as Adventism. Very good: but upon what grounds? An argument is worthless if the premises are false. And this is why we speak so strongly. Futurism and Adventism are opposed to each other in their very premises, or first principles. One or the other is wrong. We have looked the matter over candidly, and we affirm that Adventism (we use the term because it expresses the ideas of truth we refer to better than any other word can) is right! We lay no yokes upon the necks of others; nor would we compel any man to believe as we do except by force of reason. But while we are honored to occupy the position of editor of an Advent journal (and one thoroughly Christian, too, we trust); we conceive it to be our duty to maintain and defend, in accordance with our convictions, the cause that paper represents. And when our convictions are no longer in harmony with Adventism, we will resign unless sustained in our views by the body whose servant we now are. We may fall into errors—we are only human—but they are of the head, not the heart.

We are in perilous times. Going into battle Nelson signalled to his sailors, "England expects every man to do his duty." Heaven has signelled for every Christian man to do his duty in this crisis of the ages. We shall try to do ours, whether it be in plain speaking or maintaining wise silence. We firmly believe that Eld. Colgrove's views are highly erroneous, and calculated to do harm. And nearly every Advent preacher connected with either the Eastern or Western Associations, either as members or officers, agree with us in this. But we accord Br. C., the fullest freedom to preach and teach his views to the extent of his ability. He stands or falls to his own Master; not to us. And, we repeat it, if in attacking so serious an error, any article in THE TIMES has erred in spirit or by misunderstanding we are heartily sorry. Br. Fassett wrote warmly; and the provocation was great. But he attacked not the person, but the error. If to any it seemed otherwise, he as well as Br. Colgrove has been misunderstood.

PLEDGES.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000), whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

The responses to our appeal last week are somewhat encouraging, and we feel more than ever like going on with our work. It has looked as though we must stop printing tracts for free distribution, and confine our publications to works for sale, until our debt was paid off. But we have hope, and a good degree of faith, too, that the time has come for a new impetus to be given to the cause in the West.

The first two replies to our call were from ministers—they will excuse mention of their names—Br. C. W. Smith, of Illinois, and Br. C. E. Barnes, of Massachusetts. What should we do without our sacrificing ministry, who, in violation of the old proverb, do seem to "go a warfare at their own charges."

Next, Br. Adams, of Portland, Me., says, with his gift—"I do hope and pray, that the minds of all the readers of THE TIMES may be impressed with the importance of this cause, and act as the Lord may direct." There is and has been much prayer on this subject; let there be still more, and we shall see glorious results.

Another, who has been on "the poor list," sends $1 for his paper, and says—"You do not require anything unreasonable in your appeal. And I am willing to do all I can, in so good a work." When we all get not only a willing mind, but, also, a will to act, we shall see great results.

"A subscriber" writes from Tennessee, Ill.:

"Br. Himes: I received my paper last night, and found folded in it The Good Way. I sat down and read it, and plainly saw where I have been in fault. I have always been anxious to give something to the cause, but it seemed that I could never find the

First, it is not true that among Adventists interested in the time-question "almost every man has a time of his own," and, second, if we, as a body, had a woman (or any body else), to tell us just what we should and just what we should not believe, doubtless there would be only one opinion on any point among us.

JESUS said it, but who believes it? "It is more blessed to give than to receive." What a world this would be if in families, the church, and everywhere the principle were carried out. Oh! this miserable selfishness—always 'looking out for Number One!' And when 'Number One' is provided for, then, possibly thinking of others. That is not Christianity. Let every one seek another's good. There is a blessing in it.

HENRY J. RAYMOND is reported by a medium to be 'running a daily' in the spirit land: and offers to send a copy into this sphere. If it is such a journal as he published in New York, we would wish an exchange. But as the Tribune remarks—"we know very well what will be the contents of that celestial journal. There will only be a fresh quantity of nonsense."

—By the way is the paper on which 'spirit dailies' are printed an 'immaterial substance?' And what about the types and presses: are they the ghosts of old types and presses?

WE observe of late that in reports of meetings a great deal of stress is laid upon 'union and harmony prevailing. Is this such a singular feature of religious experience as to call for special mention? Ought not brotherly love always prevail? One would think so. Yet Paul wrote—'If it be possible, as much as lieth in you be at peace with all men.' He seems to think that sometimes it would be impossible to keep peace; and in such cases it should be our study to be free from the fault of the disturbance. And in any event we must insist upon the apostolic injunction "first pure, then peaceable." Peace at the sacrifice of principle is a rotten thing.

MR. J. W. BROOKS told a plain truth when he asserted of the Futurist systems of interpretation, that their apparent removal of certain difficulties, "is a great inducement to many superficial readers to receive their views, who would fain be spared the trouble of reading history and of studying and comparing prophecy, and who are now satisfied to wait for events which are to speak with sufficient plainness for themselves." We are prone to exaggerate the importance of our own times sufficiently, without running into the absurdity of interpreting the mass of prophecy in Daniel's and John's symbols of a few years in this generation. They are a pictorial history of the world from the times of the prophets to the end. Let us so understand them, and we shall not be led greatly astray.

Zion's Herald talks of being "unclothed and clothed upon," but is decidedly "misty." It brings up Christ in his resurrection body, notices what the Gospels say of it, and says Christ is an example of one that has "passed through death." And here is where the mistiness comes over the Herald; it does not see that passing through death he comes out of death, not half-way through, in an intermediate state, but clear on the other side by the resurrection. But the only way the intermediate state, and life in death and going to heaven theories can be bolstered is by appropriating resurrection and new earth texts The Herald also tells Mr. Beecher he is mistaken when he says—"We are not to suppose that there is a hell—literally a place of fire and brimstone," and exhorts him to "preach the word."...

THE NATURAL SENSE.

We have more than once observed difficulties which prophetic expositors find in interpreting the "weeks" of Daniel. (ch. 9.) One would think the matter very plain; for it reads—"From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, there shall be," etc. Now as Jerusalem lay in ruins, or, rather, had been quite destroyed at this time, one would naturally suppose when they heard of a decree "to restore and build Jerusalem," that the event designed for the commencement of the sixty-nine weeks was now fulfilled. Nor would the mind be troubled or perplexed about the event referred to, should a dozen supplementary decrees, concerning details, repairs, material, etc., be issued.

Now God had said by the mouth of Isaiah "of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." (ch. 44: 28.) No one dare dispute that this refers to the rebuilding at the conclusion of the Babylonian captivity. Now let us put two things together:

"Cyrus. . . . shall perform my pleasure . . . . even saying to Jerusalem thou shalt be built." (44: 18.)

"From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah," etc. (Dan. 9: 25.)

Is there room for misunderstanding here? Did not the Holy Spirit in the latter quotation clearly refer to the former utterance in the first? Whence, then, this talk about decrees of Artaxerxes and others. God said Cyrus should utter the decree; not Artaxerxes, nor any other of his successors.

And in Ezra's first chapter we read of this very decree, an extract from it; and Josephus gives it in full. Why, then, has there been any difference of opinion upon a point so plain? We are told, in reply, that 'Chronology' compels us to place the weeks at a later date, in order that they may reach to the time of Christ, at all. The objection is, then, that 'Chronology' contradicts the natural sense of the Scriptures: and we reply, so much the worse for 'Chronology.' The Scriptures assert that from Cyrus' decree, promised in Is. 44: 28 to Christ, shall be sixty-nine weeks of years: and if 'Chronology' says the 483 years fall short of Christ's birth more or less years, we reply, Let God's word be true, and 'Chronology,' we may depend upon it, is the liar.

But, says the objector, Ptolemy's canon is proved by eclipses, "and is it not to be set aside for the authority of any writing whatsoever." What, not for the Bible? We shall "set it aside," for that record and risk the consequences. Let those who will follow Ptolemy, and reckon from Artaxerxes: we choose to follow Daniel and Isaiah, and believe that from Cyrus' decree to Christ was 483 years.

But the readers of THE TIMES for the past few months need not be told that Ptolemy's boasted Canon has been tried and condemned. It has been clearly proved that he was guilty of the blunder of reckoning contemporaneous reigns as successive.

To illustrate. Suppose Victoria should this year associate her son with herself in the government of England, and then live on until she had reigned forty years, in all. Suppose, also, that her son should reign forty years from his accession to joint-rule with his mother. Now all can see that if in making a chronology of English history the chronologer should reckon both reigns by adding forty years to forty years, he would make eighty years from the accession of Victoria to the death of Albert Edward, which would be a blunder of four years, arising from his counting twice over the time of the joint-reign of mother and son.

Now several Persian kings did associate their successors with them in the government, just as we have supposed in the illustration; and Ptolemy in making up his Canon did make the blunder of adding together the entire years of the reign of each monarch, making no allowances for the years of joint-reigns.

And when we correct the Canon by deducting the sum of his mistakes, we find just 483 years from the time Cyrus gave the decree mentioned in Ezra (ch. 1), to the birth of Christ.

Let us not be too hasty in adjusting God's word to human systems. It will adjust itself in good time.

A REMONSTRANCE.

The following correspondence relates to an article from the pen of Eld O. R. Fassett, which appeared in THE TIMES during December, 1870.

TO ELD. J. V. HIMES:

Dear brother in Christ our Life: Allow us your attention to the communication of Br. O. R. Fassett, touching Br. Colegrove. So far as appears to us you violate your own rule in publishing such a review. It impugns wounds and wrongs most deeply one of the best men among us. To say nothing of the doctrine referred to (in which Br. Colgrove has as good a right to make a mistake as any of us), it is not good citizenship to write or publish such reproach, as is involved in said article.

We do not presume to analyze and correct the wrongs, beyond this brief notice—to suggest the obligation that may rest on yourself to make amends so far as possible to the wounded heart of an humble, devoted, and educated Christian minister, who loves and preaches the coming and kingdom of Christ at hand.

Our information is that our beloved brother has felt compelled to labor with his hands for the support of his large and fine family of seven children; but that he is still beloved by the Advent brethren, where he still lives and preaches—and not as reported that he has abandoned them to preach to the Baptist church. J. B. Cook heard his appointment made by himself, Sept. 17, at our Sunday service, for the Sunday following, Sept. 24; and in all our intercourse with the brethren I heard no word from anyone, save words of affection, interest and confidence in this worthy brother and fellow laborer in the gospel of Christ.

Please publish this in THE TIMES, and oblige, yours,

J. B. COOK, C. W. LOW, B. C. SIMONDS, A. C. NEWELL, C. F. SWEET.

—Besides the above we have received the following from Eld. Colgrove, himself:

Br. Colegrove in a note wishes to have it remarked with emphasis, that so far as Eld. Fassett's criticism upon the "Alarm Bell" is concerned, the assertion that he intimated the emperor William to be the "Prince of the Covenant," is wholly untrue. He insists that he neither suggested nor conceived any such thing, but quite the contrary; and the criticism had no basis or substance of truth, in this regard. That Napoleon will prove to be this character, he did and does maintain; and when time shall have disproved this earnestly cherished conviction, he will hope to receive meekly, any penalty which may be properly affixed to the error.

—Since reading the above we have reread the article by Eld. Fassett, referred to. We find in it no personalities, but a strong review of the person's erroneous teachings, such as many desired to see, and felt was due to the Advent body. For if the doctrine of the Alarm Bell—in its various forms of publication—were true, Adventism is a delusion and a snare.

Personally we have the highest respect for Br. Colegrove as a Christian, which feeling we endeavored to show in some attentions which were as kindly declined. Br. Fassett would join us heartily in these sentiments, we are sure. But when we come to his doctrine—the expositions of prophecy given by Br. C. we must protest against them as subversive of quite all we have held dear during the past thirty years. If he is right, Adventists are all wrong; and they ought to confess it, too. However we have no hesitation in saying we are not wrong. We have been right in the main, and God has a work for us, if we will do it. If we turn aside, he will raise up another people to do our unfinished work!

It seems to fall to our lot to speak out plainly upon these matters. Many in private endorse all we have just said, and speak as strongly, and with even more force than ourselves, against the tendencies which would draw Adventists off from their great work, and distract their attention to other issues: but not many speak out publicly. It is not often pleasant to do so. But some one must do it, and we are not afraid of expressing our convictions, whenever duty points that way.

But we would not misrepresent. Hence if in a review in our columns of Br. Colgrove's views, any misrepresentation has occurred, we are heartily sorry; and affirm it was not malicious, but an error of the understanding; and we are obliged to our good brethren, and to himself, for calling attention to it, and hope to receive forgiveness for the fault, if it is so called.

But we wish it distinctly understood, that if the so-called "Napoleonic theory," advocated in "the Alarm Bell" is right, then the principles of interpretation of the Scripture laid down by Wm. Miller, and defended by him and his compeers in the Signs of the Times, Midnight Cry, Advent Herald, World's Crisis and the Advent Times, are all wrong; and Adventism is worse than a failure; it is a delusion.

But says one—Futurism claims that the end is at hand, as well as Adventism. Very good: but upon what grounds? An argument is worthless if the premises are false. And this is why we speak so strongly. Futurism and Adventism are opposed to each other in their very premises, or first principles. One or the other is wrong. We have looked the matter over candidly, and we affirm that Adventism (we use the term because it expresses the ideas of truth we refer to better than any other word can) is right! We lay no yokes upon the necks of others; nor would we compel any man to believe as we do except by force of reason. But while we are honored to occupy the position of editor of an Advent journal (and one thoroughly Christian, too, we trust); we conceive it to be our duty to maintain and defend, in accordance with our convictions, the cause that paper represents. And when our convictions are no longer in harmony with Adventism, we will resign unless sustained in our views by the body whose servant we now are. We may fall into errors—we are only human—but they are of the head, not the heart.

We are in perilous times. Going into battle Nelson signalled to his sailors, "England expects every man to do his duty." Heaven has signalled for every Christian man to do his duty in this crisis of the ages. We shall try to do ours, whether it be in plain speaking or maintaining wise silence. We firmly believe that Eld. Colgrove's views are highly erroneous, and calculated to do harm. And nearly every Advent preacher connected with either the Eastern or Western Associations, either as members or officers, agree with us in this. But we accord Br. C., the fullest freedom to preach and teach his views to the extent of his ability. He stands or falls to his own Master; not to us. And, we repeat it, if in attacking so serious an error, any article in THE TIMES has erred in spirit or by misunderstanding we are heartily sorry. Br. Fassett wrote warmly; and the provocation was great. But he attacked not the person, but the error. If to any it seemed otherwise, he as well as Br. Colgrove has been misunderstood.

PLEDGES.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000), whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

H. Hubbard, $5.00; S. Pike, 10.00. B P Betts, 5.00 Thos. Davidson 5.00

The responses to our appeal last week are somewhat encouraging, and we feel more than ever like going on with our work. It has looked as though we must stop printing tracts for free distribution, and confine our publications to works for sale, until our debt was paid off. But we have hope, and a good degree of faith, too, that the time has come for a new impetus to be given to the cause in the West.

The first two replies to our call were from ministers—they will excuse mention of their names—Br. C. W. Smith, of Illinois, and Br. C. E. Barnes, of Massachusetts. What should we do without our sacrificing ministry, who, in violation of the old proverb, do seem to "go a warfare at their own charges."

Next, Br. Adams, of Portland, Me., says, with his gift—"I do hope and pray, that the minds of all the readers of THE TIMES may be impressed with the importance of this cause, and act as the Lord may direct." There is and has been much prayer on this subject; let there be still more, and we shall see glorious results.

Another, who has been on "the poor list," sends $1 for his paper, and says—"You do not require anything unreasonable in your appeal. And I am willing to do all I can, in so good a work." When we all get not only a willing mind, but, also, a will to act, we shall see great results.

"A subscriber" writes from Tennessee, Ill.:

"Br. Himes: I received my paper last night, and found folded in it The Good Way. I sat down and read it, and plainly saw where I have been in fault. I have always been anxious to give something to the cause, but it seemed that I could never find the amount to spare that I wished to give, and I have consequently deferred it, hoping to be able soon. But I have resolved to give now, what I can, and give as often as I can. God help us all to do our whole duty. Please accept this fifty cents and my prayers."

—Very many have failed just here. Let us all do better. Will we not?

Another says: "I am trying to arrange my affairs, and improve my education [illegible] I can go out and labor in the Lord's vineyard. My heart is in the work, and you have my prayers—all I can give now."—And that is all that is asked, if it is all you have to give.

Another says: "Patient continuance in well doing is that which has a right to the hope of final success. What a blessing there is in letting patience have its perfect work....If you will walk by faith, buckle on that shield a little tighter, and do all things in Christ, and so there will be no failure."

—We do not anticipate a failure, brother. We have "faith;" and communications like your own strengthen us.

Br. E. K. Smith, Minn., sends a dollar, and remarks: "I feel a deep interest in the welfare of our office, and the promotion of the truth it publishes. I wish I could do more, than I am now able to. But I will enclose my mite, with my prayers for your success."

A letter from Sr. Stewart, of Nevada, O., brought $1.50 in gold and silver—a beautiful gift which will, we trust return large interest in the day of recompenses. An old West Indian Missionary sends us $4 to aid in publishing on paper the truths he once, when younger and more vigorous, proclaimed with the tongue.

Br. F. E. Brownell, of Rochester, N. Y., says with his gift:

"I wish it were more. As you say—I wish I were able to pay off the whole, myself. How cheerfully I would do it. And then the offering would be far too small, as compared with the benfits I have received from our bountiful Father. I am glad I am able to do this much."

Br. S. Pike, of Iowa, says: "I am not rich, but am determined henceforth to lay aside a certain portion monthly of my income for the Lord's service." Amen. This is a correct principle. Those with small incomes can lay aside a little; and those who receive greater returns, can do in proportion.

That ever faithful friend of the cause, Br. D. Cogswell, of Dansville, N. Y., sends the following good letter:

"Br. Himes: When I read your appeal, I said to myself—Now if every subscriber to THE TIMES would stop and think the matter over (say for five minutes), and then ask themselves the question—'Cannot I spare one dollar, at least, for the cause of him who has done so much for me?' I think the work would be done. Just think of it. One dollar from each subscriber would make a fund of over four thousand dollars!

"Now, brethren and sisters, shall we not take hold heartily and do this good work? I say we will. So I shall send two dollars—one for myself, and one for some poor widow who reads the paper, but cannot send anything. Now do not neglect this, any one of you. Send in your gifts—more or less than the dollar, according to your ability."

—Last week we paid $35 upon our interest bearing debt. Not a very large sum; but it is a beginning. Shall the balance be paid, and the interest stopped before January next? All will watch the responses to this question with interest.

THE "OWN HOOK" POLICY.

Br Sheldon has said many good things; but never anything better than this:

This distracting and ruinous policy is to be deplored, and should be everywhere discountenanced among us: "I am on my own hook." That is the meanest religious "hook" that one can hang on. Is not the church hook as good for you as for anybody else? Or are you better than others? If concert of action is to be discarded by one, why not by all? Then farewell to church order, and ordinances, and [illegible]; and look out for anarchy, distraction, and confusion—each man being his own leader, and responsible to nobody. If this principle on a large scale would blot out church order, how can it be right on a small scale? Think of Peter or James as starting up and saying—"I am going on my own hook; I will be responsible to none of you." Would not the voice of Paul have been distinctly heard—"Mark them that cause divisions?"

This "own hook" policy is ruinous to the cause of Christ wherever it breathes its blighting breath. Christ's cause flourishes in the element of union, but it withers under the touch of distraction, which is but another name for this "own hook" policy. Let the feeble ones all pull on the same rope, and pull the same way, and the result will be different from the effort of a dozen men pulling on a dozen different ways. In the former case there is union; in the latter, the "own hook" policy is exhibited, resulting in failure, and loss of time. In short, this "own hook" policy exalts itself above divine wisdom, repudiating heaven's prescribed plan. Be somewhere, and be true.

SAMPLE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

A Sample Page of the Proposed Lesson Papers for Sunday-Schools.

LESSON I.—JANUARY 7, 1872.—THAT BLESSED HOPE.

Scripture Lesson—Titus 2: 11-15.

11 For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

13 Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ;

14 Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

15 These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

GOLDEN TEXT—I will come again. JOHN 14: 3.

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—Waiting, watching and working for Jesus.

ADMONITION.—Let us not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober. 1 THES. 5: 6.

QUESTIONS:

What is meant by 'the grace of God hath appeared?' (Acts 20: 24; Col. 1: 6.) Do we understand that every individual of the race has heard the gospel? or that salvation is offered to all? (Mk. 16: 15, 16; Heb. 12: 15.) Do you know what is the marginal reading of this passage? What do you understand by 'salvation?' By what means does the grace of God reach us? (Jno. 5: 39; Rom. 10: 14, 15; Jno. 16: 13.) What is meant here by 'denying;' is it contradicting, or abstaining? Can you give some parallel texts upon the Christian's manner of life? What is it to be 'looking?' What is 'hope?' What hope is referred to here? (Acts 24: 15; Ps. 16: 9; Acts 26: 6.) What appearing is here mentioned? (Col. 3: 4.) How many 'appearings' of Christ are there to be? (Heb. 9: 28.) How did Jesus give himself 'for us?' For what purpose did he make the sacrifice? What is the final result of sin? (Rom. 6: 21.) What kind of a people does he desire? In what respects should they be 'peculiar?' What do you understand by zeal? Should Christians be zealous in all kinds of work? If not, in what kinds? Should they engage in works of a doubtful character, because they are popular? (2 Cor. 4: 2.) What things does Paul command to be taught? Are we commanded to look for the second advent? What is the best way to convince others that we love this "blessed hope?" (1 Jno. 3: 3.)

WE present our readers with this sample of the lessons we propose to publish, if we meet with sufficient encouragement. Each "lesson paper" will contain four or five lessons, according to the number of Sundays in the months. We have added Bible references to the questions by which scholars will be led to "search the Scriptures" for intelligent answers to the [illegible]tions—a great improvement, we [illegible]k, upon the style of papers now in [illegible]e. The pages will be of the same size as this, four to each paper. Let us hear from the friends of the Sunday-School, whether they approve and will help this good work for the children and youth?

THE STATE OF THE DEAD.

REPUBLICATION OF AN ABLE DEBATE.

Many of our readers will remember "the Field and Connolly debate" upon the state of the dead, held in Indiana, we think in or near Indianapolis, some twenty years ago. No finer debate has been reported, and it embodies quite all the arguments of any value upon both sides of the question.

As published in book form, it makes a volume of over three hundred pages; and the work has been the means of opening the eyes of a great many persons to the true Scriptural doctrine of the dead. But it has been for some years out of print, and only now and then can a copy be secured. By the liberality of Dr. Field—who by the way is a man of large views in all relations of life—we shall be able to publish an edition of this work at a price which will place it within reach of all. The book has sterling merit, and should as it will, take its place in our standard literature. Further notice hereafter.

From South Carolina.

The books and tracts came duly to hand. Thanks for them. Since I organized an Advent Church in this County, the excitement against us is intense. The churches are all closed against us, and a great effort is making to involve the whole subject in politics, thus diverting the public mind from the real matter at issue which is life alone, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

We are Yankees, Radicals, New Englanders; we get our religion from the North, etc., etc., thus stirring up all the lower passions of the human heart. Is not this a lamentable state of things? If the Son of God were to come to this earth to-morrow would he not find it just as it was in the days of Noah: full of violence and corruption? And yet does not this state of things argue very strongly that we are in the last days?

Well glory be to Jesus, I can say, I have not an unkind feeling in my heart against a human being on the earth. God knows my heart. If I could, I would take the human race in my arms and bind them together forever, in the love of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. I try to preach all the time the speedy coming of the Lord, the literal resurrection of the dead, the everlasting destruction of the wicked, the eternal home of the good in the fair fields of Eden, in the restitution of all things, and entire consecration of heart and life and all we have and are to our blessed Savior. My congregations are large and attentive to the word preached.

Last Lord's day we appointed a committee of three substantial brethren to draw up a paper to be published in our papers setting forth our condition as a church, and making an appeal to all who may take an interest in us as an infant church, and assist us with a few hundred dollers to aid us to put up a house of worship. Winter is coming on and private houses will not hold our congregation. May a blessed God open the hearts of all who feel and pray for us. Yours in hope of eternal life

PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

The "Sick Man" of the East.

The growing power of Russia is evidently creating not a little uneasiness in Europe, and it is said by those who see cause for apprehension that more was really said and done at the Gastein Conference about the Eastern question than the public has yet been given to understand. It is plain enough that, if the conjointed interest of Germany and Austria can be subserved by acting in concert with the Western powers, Russia may be arrested, and that fated march of hers to the Bosphorus indefinitely postponed. But there are no indications of any such concert in a sense favorable to England and France, and, on the contrary, there are strong indications of a private understanding between Germany and the Czar that may pave the way to serious consequences. The order to substitute the study of German for that of French in all the Russian schools, the warmth of the Russian diplomatic relations with Berlin, the incessant military activity of which we get only occasional hints, all imply propitiation of the dominant central power and readiness to avail of any opportunity for putting in practice a long-cherished scheme. The humiliation of one of the Allies of the Crimean war, and the imputed unwillingness to quarrel and certain unfavorable condition for quarreling of the other, render the time favorable for what Germany alone could now apparently prevent. It is not to be supposed that Russia has abandoned her designs on Constantinople; and, if she has not, the sole question that will influence her course relates to time and opportunity.

The abrogation of those clauses in the treaty of 1856 which provided for the neutralization of the Black Sea, may be set down as the sure forerunner of collision. Hostilities may be long deferred, but cannot permanently be averted; the geographical and political elements unite with ethnographical ones to make the Russian movement toward the Golden Horn all but inevitable. It is all very well to say that the signatory powers are bound to defend the integrity of the Ottoman Empire; but if Germany, Russia and Austria determine to abrogate more clauses in the treaty, or to set it aside altogether, such things have been done before. It is a significant fact that the European press has begun closely to examine the Russian and Turkish Navies, and to compare their respective force. Many will be surprised to hear that Turkey has actually more guns afloat than Russia has, and when this is remembered, in connection with the circumstance that Russia has a far more extended coast line to defend than Turkey, as well as a much more extensive mercantile marine to look out for, the point becomes important. Russia, we should observe, has more ships and more seamen; but many of her ships are old, while most of the Turkish Fleet is new, as one consequence of the heavy losses at Sinope in 1853. The precise figures are given as follows:

	Russia	Turkey.
Iron-clads	34	13
Other steam-vessels	166	97
Sailing-vessels	29	53
Guns	2,370	2,283
Seamen and marines, including officers	64,021	34,000

As a further set-off against apparent disparity some of the Turkish ships are of immense force, the Osman Ghazy, one of the number, being both larger and more powerful than any ship of the Russian navy. The engineers of the Turkish ships, and some of the other officers, are from Western Europe, and are carefully-picked men. As regards the sailors, the Turks always fight bravely, and their conduct on the sea has seldom failed to do them honor. Finally we may say that since the discussion of probabilities has become so open and spirited, Hobart Pasha, a well-known admiral of the Turki[illegible] service, has written a letter to a Lo[illegible]don journal, in which there occur the following passages: "It has been said that if the Turkish navy is able to repel any attack from Russia on the Black Sea, the peace of Europe may remain for years undisturbed on the Eastern question. I venture to assure you that the Turkish navy is perfectly able at the present moment to repel any attack from Russia in the Black Sea, and I firmly believe will always be able to do so."

No doubt Turkey is relatively stronger, in the maritime sense, than has been commonly supposed; but whether she is better able to cope single-handed with her gigantic neighbor than she was in 1856 is less certain. It is, at all events, obvious that the abrogation of the clauses of neutralization must oblige Turkey to maintain her navy at a very high point of strength and efficiency, since nothing less than national existence itself depends upon it.—N. Y. Times.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

Br. Hook has baptised five lately in Philadelphia. His name is an apt one. He is indeed a "fisher of men."——Br. R. Burtenshaw has removed to Hesperia, Mich. Br. E. B. Scott writes that the cause is flourishing there. Some thirty were present at their last communion, including Br. Grundy—late a Methodist, but now an Adventist preacher. Br. Scott is to baptise him, with his wife, also.——Brn. R. H. Scott and G. W. Green have closed a meeting at Turkey Run, S. H. Ind. Four additions.——Two souls were immersed by Br. Green at the close of his late debate.——Sr. L. M. Stoddard will remove to Lockport, N. Y. about the middle of October.——Wm. Mock, writes from California to an exchange, his desire that the Lord will send an Advent preacher there who will not mix materialism with the gospel of the kingdom. No minister can deliver the gospel message fully, without preaching the so-called materialism. If they leave it out, they preach not the gospel that Paul preached.——Brn. Libby and Gay baptised thirteen at the Mechanic's Falls, Me. campmeeting. It was a meeting with much to admire, and well appreciated by those in attendance.——The church at Lapeer, Mich. expect to have their chapel ready for the Q. M. for that District, Nov. 22, and desire a general attendance at the dedication.

The Times.

AT HOME.

- - - Illinois had 2,539,191 inhabitants, in June 1870.

- - - It is probable that the Hoosack Tunnel will be finished within thirteen months.

- - - The National Debt was lessened by over $13,000,000 last month—nearly half a million a day.

- - - Canada has a grievous record of corruptionists, also. Is the whole world getting rotten? It would seem so.

- - - A man in Peoria whose house was haunted by a ghost investigated the spirit with a gun and some bird shot. The specter proved to be material—by the name of McGraw.

- - - A competent committee have decided that certain work upon the new Court House for which New York paid over one million and four hundred thousand dollars, would have been a profitable job at $225,000.

- - - The drouth is becoming of almost unprecedented severity in the North-West. In some places only heavy rains can put out the fires. Elsewhere farmers complain that they cannot plough.

- - - If one wishes to feel what 'heart-sick' means, they should read the record of crime and suffering told in the daily papers. It is positively shocking, and we cannot conceive why it should be inflicted upon the public. It cannot be otherwise than demoralizing.

- - - Mr. Edsall, a prominent Chicago merchant was found dead in his house last Saturday morning, shot through the head. It is not known whether it is a case of suicide, or another mysterious murder. There was nothing to make suicide probable, and no clue to any murderer.

- - - Minnesota and Wisconsin have suffered from terrible fires in the woods and fields. The long drouth has turned the very soil to tinder, in which the fires work two and three feet deep. Fifty townships in Wisconsin have been burned over, with all the woods, crops and many of the dwellings; and some men, even, have perished in the flames.

- - - Seasonable advice: Keep up the fires. Half the diseases that afflict humanity at this season of the year are due to the half chilled condition in which people live. More coughs, colds, consumptions, and fevers are produced by sitting in half chilly rooms, on those days when it seems hardly necessary to build fires, than from all other causes.

- - - Mormon affairs still attract attention. Brigham Young and several other prominent Mormons have been indicted for bigamy. A General Conference is in session, and we judge the Mormons are studying whether it is best to submit to United States law, or resist by violence its interference with their so-called 'religious' convictions. The crisis cannot be far away.

- - - The thieving officers of the New York [illegible]y and county government, are to be pushed to the wall, so far as we may judge from present appearances. Civil suits are to be commenced for the recovery of a portion, at least, of their enormous stealings. Every day brings fresh developments of fraud and corruption. Scores of men are receiving large salaries who perform no service, and whose severest labor is drawing their pay. Some of the thieves are putting their property out of their hands, to secure their ill-gotten gains, if possible.

amount to spare that I wished to give, and I have consequently deferred it, hoping to be able soon. But I have resolved to give now, what I can, and give as often as I can. God help us all to do our whole duty. Please accept this fifty cents and my prayers."

—Very many have failed just here. Let us all do better. Will we not?

Another says: "I am trying to arrange my affairs, and improve my education so that I can go out and labor in the Lord's vineyard. My heart is in the work, and you have my prayers—all I can give now."—And that is all that is asked, if it is all you have to give.

Another says: "Patient continuance in well doing is that which has a right to the hope of final success. What a blessing there is in letting patience have its perfect work....If you will walk by faith, buckle on that shield a little tighter, and do all things in Christ, and so there will be no failure."

—We do not anticipate a failure, brother. We have "faith;" and communications like your own strengthen us.

Br. E. K. Smith, Minn., sends a dollar, and remarks: "I feel a deep interest in the welfare of our office, and the promotion of the truth it publishes. I wish I could do more, than I am now able to. But I will enclose my mite, with my prayers for your success."

A letter from Sr. Stewart, of Nevada, O., brought $1.50 in gold and silver—a beautiful gift which will, we trust return large interest in the day of recompenses. An old West Indian Missionary sends us $4 to aid in publishing on paper the truths he once, when younger and more vigorous, proclaimed with the tongue.

Br. F. E. Brownell, of Rochester, N. Y., says with his gift:

"I wish it were more. As you say—I wish I were able to pay off the whole, myself. How cheerfully I would do it. And then the offering would be far too small, as compared with the benfits I have received from our bountiful Father. I am glad I am able to do this much."

Br. S. Pike, of Iowa, says: "I am not rich, but am determined henceforth to lay aside a certain portion monthly of my income for the Lord's service." Amen. This is a correct principle. Those with small incomes can lay aside a little; and those who receive greater returns, can do in proportion.

That ever faithful friend of the cause, Br. D. Cogswell, of Dansville, N. Y., sends the following good letter:

"Br. Himes: When I read your appeal, I said to myself—Now if every subscriber to THE TIMES would stop and think the matter over (say for five minutes), and then ask themselves the question—'Cannot I spare one dollar, at least, for the cause of him who has done so much for me?' I think the work would be done. Just think of it. One dollar from each subscriber would make a fund of over four thousand dollars!

"Now, brethren and sisters, shall we not take hold heartily and do this good work? I say we will. So I shall send two dollars—one for myself, and one for some poor widow who reads the paper, but cannot send any.' Now do not neglect this, any of you. Send in your gifts—more or less than the dollar, according to your ability."

—Last week we paid $35 upon our interest bearing debt. Not a very large sum; but it is a beginning. Shall the balance be paid, and the interest stopped before January next? All will watch the responses to this question with interest.

THE "OWN HOOK" POLICY.

Br Sheldon has said many good things; but never anything better than this:

This distracting and ruinous policy is to be deplored, and should be everywhere discountenanced among us: "I am on my own hook." That is the meanest religious "hook" that one can hang on. Is not the church hook as good for you as for anybody else? Or are you better than others? If concert of action is to be discarded by one, why not by all? Then farewell to church order, and ordinances, and [illegible]; and look out for anarchy, distraction, and confusion—each man being his own leader, and responsible to nobody. If this principle on a large scale would blot out church order, how can it be right on a small scale? Think of Peter or James as starting up and saying—"I am going on my own hook; I will be responsible to none of you." Would not the voice of Paul have been distinctly heard—"Mark them that cause divisions?"

This "own hook" policy is ruinous to the cause of Christ wherever it breathes its blighting breath. Christ's cause flourishes in the element of union, but it withers under the touch of distraction, which is but another name for this "own hook" policy. Let the feeble ones all pull on the same rope, and pull the same way, and the result will be different from the effort of a dozen men pulling on a dozen different ways. In the former case there is union; in the latter, the "own hook" policy is exhibited, resulting in failure, and loss of time. In short, this "own hook" policy exalts itself above divine wisdom, repudiating heaven's prescribed plan. Be somewhere, and be true.

SAMPLE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

A Sample Page of the Proposed Lesson Papers for Sunday-Schools.

LESSON I.—JANUARY 7, 1872.—THAT BLESSED HOPE.

Scripture Lesson—Titus 2: 11-15.

11 For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

13 Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ;

14 Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

15 These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

GOLDEN TEXT—I will come again. John 14:3.

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—Waiting, watching and working for Jesus.

ADMONITION.—Let us not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober. 1 Thes. 5:6.

QUESTIONS:

What is meant by 'the grace of God hath appeared?' (Acts 20:24; Col. 1:6.) Do we understand that every individual of the race has heard the gospel? or that salvation is offered to all? (Mk. 16:15, 16; Heb. 12:15.) Do you know what is the marginal reading of this passage? What do you understand by 'salvation?' By what means does the grace of God reach us? (Jno. 5:39; Rom. 10:14, 15; Jno. 16:13.) What is meant here by 'denying:' is it contradicting, or abstaining? Can you give some parallel texts upon the Christian's manner of life? What is it to be 'looking?' What is 'hope?' What hope is referred to here? (Acts 24:15; Ps. 16:9; Acts 26:6.) What appearing is here mentioned? (Col. 3:4.) How many 'appearings' of Christ are there to be? (Heb. 9:28.) How did Jesus give himself 'for us?' For what purpose did he make the sacrifice? What is the final result of sin? (Rom. 6:21.) What kind of a people does he desire? In what respects should they be 'peculiar?' What do you understand by zeal? Should Christians be zealous in all kinds of work? If not, in what kinds? Should they engage in works of a doubtful character, because they are popular? (2 Cor. 4:2.) What things does Paul command to be taught? Are we commanded to look for the second advent? What is the best way to convince others that we love this "blessed hope?" (1 Jno. 3:3.)

WE present our readers with this sample of the lessons we propose to publish, if we meet with sufficient encouragement. Each "lesson paper" will contain four or five lessons, according to the number of Sundays in the months. We have added Bible references to the questions by which scholars will be led to "search the Scriptures" for intelligent answers to the questions—a great improvement, we think, upon the style of papers now in use. The pages will be of the same size as this, four to each paper. Let us hear from the friends of the Sunday-School, whether they approve and will help this good work for the children and youth?

THE STATE OF THE DEAD.

REPUBLICATION OF AN ABLE DEBATE.

Many of our readers will remember "the Field and Connolly debate" upon the state of the dead, held in Indiana, we think in or near Indianapolis, some twenty years ago. No finer debate has been reported, and it embodies quite all the arguments of any value upon both sides of the question.

As published in book form, it makes a volume of over three hundred pages; and the work has been the means of opening the eyes of a great many persons to the true Scriptural doctrine of the dead. But it has been for some years out of print, and only now and then can a copy be secured. By the liberality of Dr. Field—who by the way is a man of large views in all relations of life—we shall be able to publish an edition of this work at a price which will place it within reach of all. The book has sterling merit, and should as it will, take its place in our standard literature. Further notice hereafter.

From South Carolina.

The books and tracts came duly to hand. Thanks for them. Since I organized an Advent Church in this County, the excitement against us is intense. The churches are all closed against us, and a great effort is making to involve the whole subject in politics, thus diverting the public mind from the real matter at issue which is life alone, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

We are Yankees, Radicals, New Englanders; we get our religion from the North, etc., etc., thus stirring up all the lower passions of the human heart. Is notthis a lamentable state of things? If the Son of God were to come to this earth to-morrow would he not find it just as it was in the days of Noah: full of violence and corruption? And yet does not this state of things argue very strongly that we are in the last days?

Well glory be to Jesus, I can say, I have not an unkind feeling in my heart against a human being on the earth. God knows my heart. If I could, I would take the human race in my arms and bind them together forever, in the love of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. I try to preach all the time the speedy coming of the Lord, the literal resurrection of the dead, the everlasting destruction of the wicked, the eternal home of the good in the fair fields of Eden, in the restitution of all things, and entire consecration of heart and life and all we have and are to our blessed Savior. My congregations are large and attentive to the word preached.

Last Lord's day we appointed a committee of three substantial brethren to draw up a paper to be published in our papers setting forth our condition as a church, and making an appeal to all who may take an interest in us as an infant church, and assist us with a few hundred dollers to aid us to put up a house of worship. Winter is coming on and private houses will not hold our congregation. May a blessed God open the hearts of all who feel and pray for us. Yours in hope of eternal life

PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

The "Sick Man" of the East.

The growing power of Russia is evidently creating not a little uneasiness in Europe, and it is said by those who see cause for apprehension that more was really said and done at the Gastein Conference about the Eastern question than the public has yet been given to understand. It is plain enough that, if the conjointed interest of Germany and Austria can be subserved by acting in concert with the Western powers, Russia may be arrested, and that fated march of hers to the Bosphorus indefinitely postponed. But there are no indications of any such concert in a sense favorable to England and France, and, on the contrary, there are strong indications of a private understanding between Germany and the Czar that may pave the way to serious consequences. The order to substitute the study of German for that of French in all the Russian schools, the warmth of the Russian diplomatic relations with Berlin, the incessant military activity of which we get only occasional hints, all imply propitiation of the dominant central power and readiness to avail of any opportunity for putting in practice a long-cherished scheme. The humiliation of one of the Allies of the Crimean war, and the imputed unwillingness to quarrel and certain unfavorable condition for quarreling of the other, render the time favorable for what Germany alone could now apparently prevent. It is not to be supposed that Russia has abandoned her designs on Constantinople; and, if she has not, the sole question that will influence her course relates to time and opportunity.

The abrogation of those clauses in the treaty of 1856 which provided for the neutralization of the Black Sea, may be set down as the sure forerunner of collision. Hostilities may be long deferred, but cannot permanently be averted; the geographical and political elements unite with ethnographical ones to make the Russian movement toward the Golden Horn all but inevitable. It is all very well to say that the signatory powers are bound to defend the integrity of the Ottoman Empire; but if Germany, Russia and Austria determine to abrogate more clauses in the treaty, or to set it aside altogether, such things have been done before. It is a significant fact that the European press has begun closely to examine the Russian and Turkish Navies, and to compare their respective force. Many will be surprised to hear that Turkey has actually more guns afloat than Russia has, and when this is remembered, in connection with the circumstance that Russia has a far more extended coast line to defend than Turkey, as well as a much more extensive mercantile marine to look out for, the point becomes important. Russia, we should observe, has more ships and more seamen; but many of her ships are old, while most of the Turkish Fleet is new, as one consequence of the heavy losses at Sinope in 1853. The precise figures are given as follows:

	Russia	Turkey.
Iron-clads	24	13
Other steam-vessels	166	97
Sailing-vessels	29	53
Seamen and marines, including officers	64,021	34,000

As a further set-off against apparent disparity some of the Turkish ships are of immense force, the Osman Ghazy, one of the number, being both larger and more powerful than any ship of the Russian navy. The engineers of the Turkish ships, and some of the other officers, are from Western Europe, and are carefully-picked men. As regards the sailors, the Turks always fight bravely, and their conduct on the sea has seldom failed to do them honor. Finally we may say that since the discussion of probabilities has become so open and spirited, Hobart Pasha, a well-known admiral of the Turkish service, has written a letter to a London journal, in which there occur the following passages: "It has been said that if the Turkish navy is able to repel any attack from Russia on the Black Sea, the peace of Europe may remain for years undisturbed on the Eastern question. I venture to assure you that the Turkish navy is perfectly able at the present moment to repel any attack from Russia in the Black Sea, and I firmly believe will always be able to do so."

No doubt Turkey is relatively stronger, in the maritime sense, than has been commonly supposed; but whether she is better able to cope single-handed with her gigantic neighbor than she was in 1856 is less certain. It is, at all events, obvious that the abrogation of the clauses of neutralization must oblige Turkey to maintain her navy at a very high point of strength and efficiency, since nothing less than national existence itself depends upon it.—*N. Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

ARKANSAS.

Jacksonport is a town of about 1,000 inhabitants. They have the usual number of saloons, and their share of intemperance. The place is the headquarters of the whiskey trade for a large region of country, both for the white and colored population. They have a secret temperance organization, peculiar to this State. The Grand Council has been in session here. I saw one of their leading men, who desired me to speak to them in case their meeting continued at night; but as it broke up in the afternoon, I went to the Methodist, South, prayer-meeting. It would have been of interest fifty years ago, when they sang many long hymns, and had other services to correspond. The leader told us that we must all be good, and that there was a good time coming when all should know the Lord from the least to the greatest; when the lion should lie down with the lamb, and nothing would hurt in all God's holy mountain. But people were wicked now, and some were very intemperate. "I am," said he, "a temperance man, and rejoice in the temperance reform. But if I should speak on temperance, I should speak on a heap of things besides whiskey." He wanted to say tobacco, etc. All understood it. Many people with whom I have become acquainted to-day (and temperance people, too), eat it, they use it to such excess. I have less and less hope of re forming men, except by genuine conversion to the principles of the gospel.

Before I went to the prayer-meeting I had an interesting interview with Mr. Boggs, and took supper with him. He is the Presbyterian minister here. We had a plain talk on the Advent, and the time of the event. I furnished him with books on the subject, and after a pleasant talk bade him adieu. He said "Come again!" I hope to speak here on my return.

I put up at the boarding-house of Mrs. Ann Wood. She is celebrated for keeping a fine house. It is every way preferable to the hotels. Mrs W. is a noble woman, and makes strangers feel at home. She is a member of the Presbyterian church. She wanted to know what the Adventists believed, which I was not backward to tell her; and shall send her publications, also.

I asked for my bill but she said, "I never charge ministers. Go and do all the good you can."

Col. Baker and myself having hired a private carriage, we took our journey to Batesville, twenty-five miles. We traveled through a variety of country. Sometimes on the banks and bottoms of Black River, and again on the White River; then over hills and through valleys, until at length we arrived at Batesville, on the highest land about here. We found a town fifty years old, first settled by the French, and taking its name from one of its oldest citizens. They have a fine Court House, and several churches, and a good public house. It is a fine looking town. Of course saloons and whiskey have their usual place, and draw a large class of people. These establishments are the curse and blight of Arkansas.

My first inquiry was for Eld. Rosebraugh. "Do you know such a man?" "Oh, yes! He lives nine miles out, on the canyon. You can get out on horseback." But I must first go to the post-office. On entering, I found an elderly lady, who by age or disease was "bowed together," and was deaf. But I found her polite, and every way acquainted with the business. Said I, Have you received letters lately for Eld. Rosebraugh? "Yes; and he has got them. He was here to-day; and he is to call soon for his paper. This is it [showing me THE TIMES.] He will call before he leaves town. You will find him in the street now. He wears a black, low-crowned hat, and a brown flannel sack. You will know him."

So I went out, and the second man I saw was Br. R. He was not looking for me until to-morrow, so I took him by surprise. I knew him from the Post Mistress' description, and called him by name. It was a joyful meeting. We proceeded at once to business. The first meeting was arranged for Batesville. And no chapel being open to us, we got the Court House, which was better. And having some notices left of the Memphis meeting, I altered the place of meeting to Batesville Court Room, and put them up in the most prominent places. The people gathered about them, and entered into conversation and discussion, so that our meetings will be well advertised. This done, the next thing was how to get out to Br. Rosebraugh's home. It was about four p. m., and above nine miles to go over a rough country and a difficult road. Failing to get an extra horse, the only way left us was for Br. R. to walk, and for me to take my satchel, and mount his mule. We had a safe trip, and got to his mountain home at dark, and were welcomed by Sr. Rosebraugh and the children. Supper was ready and waiting, and after being refreshed, we talked over the faith and the state of the cause. I sang a number of the Advent Hymns, with which they were not acquainted, but were greatly delighted. Giving thanks, we got rest.

Br. R. was from North Carolina. He received his first impressions of the Advent from the Midnight Cry, which I published in New York in 1842 and onward. But he lost sight of the truth for a time. Within a few years he got hold of a copy of THE ADVENT TIMES. His old impressions were all revived, and he has taken his stand for the truth again, out and out. Being a Baptist preacher, he has for his adherence to the Advent faith been opposed, and of late excommunicated from the Baptist church. I am here to help him, and shall spend a month in this wild and new country, where I may accomplish much more than could be done in the cities of the South.

MONDAY, Sept. 23. Yesterday the sun crossed the line; but the supposed usual storm has not reached us. The weather is beautiful. We have a great variety of climate and weather in our country. The Storm Signal Bureau, established by the Navy Department, receives and sends out by telegraph daily reports of the state of the weather, all over the country. Most of the daily papers give this report. It is found that by observing the indications of the thermometer and barometer, all over the country, that the weather for a day or more in advance can be safely predicted. By this means mariners and others avoid danger.

Our Savior said to the Jews, "Ye can discern the signs of the weather, by noting the conditions of the atmosphere; but why do ye not discern the signs of this time?" Had they observed the signs of Jesus' first advent, they would not have rejected him. But they were blind to all God had revealed, and crucified his Son, saying, "His blood be upon us, and our children!" And now that Jesus is soon coming the second time, the signs are manifested for this generation. Will they see them and get ready? Will they? It is to be feared, that most will reject him among the Gentiles, as the Jews did at his first advent! Individuals may be wise and learn from the past; but generations never!

Some years ago, in the mountains of this, Independence, county, iron, copper, zinc, silver, and manganese were found. But the war put an end to mining for a time. Work is now being resumed, and with capital and enterprise, rich developments might be made in all this region. In a walk to-day over the hills I picked up some specimens of iron and copper. The nature of the stones and lava indicate volcanic action.

Arkansas with her rich farming lands, has also mineral wealth. But the State is yet undeveloped. The people are just beginning to wake up to railroad and other enterprises. But with its temperate climate and rich lands, it will yet command an enterprising class of immigrants.

At night we had a singing meeting, to learn the people the Advent tunes and hymns, of which they are entirely ignorant. We had a room full at Br. Rosebraugh's, and a very interesting time. They were greatly delighted with our hymns, and the music, also.

SABBATH, Sept. 24. At an early hour we got up the mules and started for Batesville. We made ten miles in three hours. The jaunt was not bad. I felt well on arrival, and entered at once on my days' work in the Court House. It is as pleasant as a church. We had a large attendance, and perfect attention, on the subject of the soul; what is it? In the p. m. on hell and heaven; what and where?

At the close some of the educated men and women came forward to ask questions and converse candidly and freely; they accepting the most I had said as truth.

At night the audience was intensely interested. Many questions came up relating to the nature of man and his destiny, and the people seemed to feel that there was another side to the question than that they had always heard. Our meeting was indeed a glorious success. Br. Rosebraugh feels encouraged. Till now he has had no one to sympathize with him. Now he will have plenty of friends. All desire to hear more, but I must go on.

From D S Clark.

The tent-meeting at St. Charles commenced Sept. 6, and closed the 24th. As Br. Marston has given an account of the first two weeks, I need only add the interest continued until the close, in the midst of a united combination of opposition. The cool nights, county fair, etc., militated much against us. One was baptised, Sunday, Sept. 24. Br. Kendall remained during the meeting, and addressed the congregation Sunday eve. He came to this meeting to hear for himself, and has become fully satisfied that we have the truth, and is resolved to devote himself to its proclamation. May the Lord bless him and open to him rich fields of gospel labor.

We left Br. Pike's Tuesday noon, and pitched the tent Wednesday at Rochelle. Commenced the meeting in the eve. Thursday Br. and Sr. Marston came to our aid.

From H H Skinner Wexford Mich.

Having just finished reading the last TIMES, it is so full of good matter and encouragement that I feel constrained to take up my pen and say a word in its favor. I love the paper dearly for the glorious truths that it sustains and so boldly advocates. I love it for its Editor's Journal, telling to the brethren how the work and labor of love goes on, that "the poor are having the gospel preached to them," and a few here and there being prepared to enter into that rest which will know no weariness. I love it for its Pulpit; for in those sermons is the Balm of Gilead. I love the letters written by the dear ones scattered abroad, giving assurance of their faith and hope in the soon coming of the blessed Master. And may the time soon come when the faithful shall be gathered into the kingdom, to go no more out, or again be scattered abroad forever. I love it for its editorials, and its articles by contributors—good, instructive. And to sum it all up I love it for its labors for the cause of truth. It comes every week laden with its messages of love to gladden the hearts of one family—for I can speak for my own.

Br. E. N. Bliss, of Chicago, came to this place some three weeks ago, since which time he has been breaking the bread of life to the people. He is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Some say that every word is Bible. And I find by talking with them that they are just as good Adventists as any of us, only they don't know it. And those of us who were in the faith when he came, have been awakened to greater earnestness. We had prayed long and earnestly for help, and our Father heard our cries and granted our petition, and Br. Bliss came. And Br Brown has written that he will be here this week. My heart is lifted up in gratitude to the Giver of all good gifts. A strong effort will be made to raise up a people in this place that will say at last, "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us."

From Lemuel Record, Lancaster, Ind.

I wish to say to our brethren and sisters that we have had a refreshing and comforting time in this part of the vineyard of our Lord. The Lord has poured us out a blessing by directing, as we trust, Br. N. Field to come to labor with us at Volga. He, on the 14th of September commenced preaching Christ and him crucified, and proclaimed the good news of salvation, salvation through Jesus to all that believe, repent and obey his commands. The result was, a church organized embracing seventeen members.

The Lord has poured out a blessing in this place. And we have reason to praise his name. Yes we feel like saying with the Psalmist—"Oh! that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" There is now a little company of us here that will, as we hope and trust, be found keeping house for the Lord, and "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

To be sure there are those who are disposed to speak disrespectfully of us, and of our belief, because forsooth, we believe that Jesus knew just what to say, and said just what he meant, when he said, "I will come again;" and, also, when he said, "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." (Mat. 16: 27.) Now many of our neighbors say that we shall all be rewarded according to our works at death. The righteous go immediately to heaven, and the wicked are sent down to hell, to endure endless torment. But we verily believe that, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:.... Then shall he say unto them on his left hand depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:... And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." And we also believe the words of Peter, when he says—"And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Now this is the time—when the Son of man shall come"—that we expect to be received unto him, if we are righteous, and "ever be with the Lord." For that coming we are looking, and striving to be ready. Brethren and sisters pray for us that we may so live as to be ready.

From Fanny Reynolds Chicago Sept 2.

The hope of future glory grows brighter, and my spirit is much refreshed through attending the camp-meeting at Amboy. The voices of the dear brethren and sisters still ring in my ears. The language of Canaan which was spoken there, and the beautiful songs of Zion which were sung, still sounds to me more melodious than the sweetest music. It enraptures my soul with delight, and makes me feel as though I was already present with Christ, and that innumerable company whose robes have been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

Oh! what glories await God's dear children. When Br. Thurber gets home, and gives that immortal shout, that he talks about, I expect to be there, and not as a silent spectator, either. Praise the Lord.

From James Sober Salem, Mich.

We find it very hard rowing without THE TIMES to help. True we have the blessed Bible, and this is all the preaching we have. We love the blessed hope; are grieved to see the mass walk in darkness, refusing to open their eyes, even lest they should see the light, and their sins be reproved. But God's word is true, whether man fear or forbear; and the world must be warned. This gospel of the kingdom must be preached for a witness, to all nations, and then the end will come! It is fearful to contemplate how many professed watchmen can see no signs of approaching day; while many more cry, "There is no danger! The Lord hath delayed his coming." But my brethren, 'mid all this darkness and confusion of tongues, let us hold forth the word of life to this generation, that like Noah we may prove ourselves preachers of righteousness. It may be some poor souls will be led to Jesus by seeing your good works, and thus we be found workers together with God in the salvation of perishing souls, for whom Jesus died, and whom he is coming to save with an eternal salvation. Come Lord Jesus, quickly come!

From O O Marston, New Rutland, Ill., Sep. 24

I have been with the brethren of this vicinity since last Wednesday and have had a most precious season of labor in the cause of Christ. It is my first visit among those of "like precious faith" in LaSalle Co. Br. Wm. McCullock, the pastor, gave me a cordial reception and most heartily co-operated with me in making my brief labors as beneficial to the cause as possible. He is a true man, and is highly appreciated as a pastor in this place. God bless him and his labors in maintaining the "present truth." The Advent cause everywhere, "needs," as Br. Himes says, "the help that unites and builds up." The agents of distraction are all abroad. God help the standard bearers to stand in union in these perilous times. During my short stay I have tried to preach seven times. Much interest was taken in the truth. Although I preached on some of the most objectionable (to some) phases of Bible doctrine, such, for instance, as man's nature, etc., yet I have reason to think that there was no prejudice aroused against the truth. Paul's rule is a good one—"speak the truth, in love." Men may be bold, emphatic and cutting if they only have a good spirit. Many thanks to these dear brethren and sisters for their kindness during my stay with them.

From A A Phelps LeRoy N Y.

Our tent campaign in this place closed this evening, with a large congregation and a good degree of interest. Many have had their theological systems reconstructed, several have been converted, and a society has been organized on a simple basis, with encouraging prospects for the future. Considering the thick-crusted bigotry and almost impenetrable sectarianism of this would-be aristocratic village, I feel that quite a victory has been won. A. P. Moore was with me during the first few days of the meeting, but W. A. Fenn has been my chief helper. W. E. Brown has also rendered efficient service. I have enjoyed "tenting" this summer pretty well. I trust some redeemed souls will shine in the everlasting kingdom as the result of the meetings held.

An Experience in Spiritism.

A lady writes to the Oneida Circular an account of her experience as a "medium." It will be seen that, though she rejects spiritualism as a guide to truth, she still believes in the genuineness of her "possession," only she thinks that she was often the sport of evil spirits. This is a conclusion in accordance with what we believe to be a growing conviction among close observers of these singular phenomena. We give the extract to which we allude:

"Of my experience as a medium, I can only say, in passing, that gifted as my spiritualistic friends thought me to be, in the line of free utterance, I cannot recall a single new truth or idea that was given to me. Indeed, as I now look back upon that experience, it seems more like a period of hallucination, bordering on insanity, than anything else. But a crisis came at last. I had been taught to believe in the false dogmas, that God is the author of all beings, and that, as he is himself perfectly good, evil can have an existence only in appearance; and hence I was ready to receive all spirits without calling their character or trustworthiness in question, and to accept in good faith all communications to me. But the utter failure of many predictions, both in respect to events and the time of their fulfillment, was too much for my credulity, and the conviction flashed through my mind that I was the dupe of wicked spirits. I heeded that conviction, and soon began to realize the deplorable condition I was in. The reaction brought such utter desolation to my soul that life seemed worthless. In attempting to look within, my better nature stood aghast at the rebellious state of my spirit. Finally, physical prostration brought with it a disposition to review my past life."—Christian Union.

Tour East.

BOSTON, MASS.

I had the pleasure of calling upon old and tried friends in this city, as I passed on my way to my appointment in Portland, Me. I put up with J. Emerson and family, with whom I have always found a hospitable home. I called on all the families and friends which my limited time would allow.

The tent meeting at Natick, mentioned in my last, intruded upon the time I had set apart for my visit in Boston. The friends must excuse apparent neglect. My visit East was altogether too hurried to be satisfactory to myself or my friends, but this could not be avoided. If another visit East is planned, I hope more time will be granted me.

I called at the Advent Herald office, and found Eld. Orrock at his post as editor of that paper. Had a pleasant call. As I passed through the office-rooms, former days and associations came freshly to my mind, when our lamented Br. Bliss occupied this post; and Br. John G. L. Himes was foreman of the printing-department, while I officiated as the pastor of the "Hudson St. Church." Alas! how many changes are apparent. I also called on Br. Apollos Hale at Charlestown, Mass.

I spent some little time at the Crisis office; and though I found not the editor there, yet the work at the office was being done by most efficient hands in the various departments. The office, and arrangements, and locality, are all that can be desired for convenience, and to do the work faithfully as it should be.

PORTLAND, ME.

Br. Adams furnished me a ministerial pass for the Alton Bay Camp-meeting, and I went on via Portland, Me., where I put up at the residence of Br. S. K. Dyer. I found here a pleasant home. My room overlooked the harbor, filled with anchored vessels, or those under sail, a most beautiful port. This sight of the ocean and harbor I greatly enjoyed, and shall not soon forget. I called on Br. York's family, located in this "Forest City" of the Northeast, and was sorry to learn that he was absent. Nor did I see the face of my brother whom I so much desired to greet during my stay. I visited other old friends in the city; and on the Lord's day addressed the congregation under the charge of Br. York, three times. A large attendance of friends was present, and greetings with former acquaintances and associates in labor and hope of the gospel was truly gratifying. The cause is good and encouraging in Portland, notwithstanding the trials and adversities through which it has been, and is still passing. The Lord bless this people.

ALTON BAY CAMP.

Monday, Sept. 11, I departed for this meeting, and arrived the same day. I found the locality a charming one. The scenery beautiful and romantic. The camp itself looking like an ancient Puritan city, with its frame houses in zig zag lines, and lining narrow and crooked streets. This meeting exceeds in numbers and interest every way the one at Springfield, which is called the "National Camp-meeting." The locality of our meeting at the latter place I regard anything but inviting. The committee will have to make another choice of grounds, should time last, or the old Wilbraham Camp-meeting will become a thing only in remembrance. If I was sadly disappointed at this my first visit at the camp-ground of Springfield, I was happily so at this of Alton Bay. The preacher's stand and tents in front, were arranged for the convenience of both the speaker and audience; and I was privileged with preaching the word to a large audience, whom I had no difficulty in making hear. Perhaps if Br. Grant had been present he would have made note of the fact, as I see he did not mention my name among the preachers at the stand at Springfield.

I should like to give the history of the origin of this camp-meeting at Alton Bay—how the Railroad managers offered in the beginning, and continue to grant inducements for the holding of this annual gathering. And I would speak of the blessed influence this meeting is exerting in New England; but I must forbear. Let me say it was a holy and blessed atmosphere there, and religion enough to keep in abeyance the world, and the tide of pride and fashion which visited the consecrated spot. I could find a place far up the hills where I could kneel and pray to my Savior in complete isolation from any human sight or ear. And such should be the locality of every meeting of this kind.

One poor soul I heard on going to my selected bower of prayer, still farther up, praying and agonizing with Jesus for pardon and salvation; and I secretly joined in the earnest petition of that burdened heart for saving mercy, without disturbing the troubled soul. (Concluded next week.)

O. R. FASSETT.

Harrisonville Ind., Debate.

This discussion between Eld. W. B. F. Treat, of Bloomington, Ind., on the the part of the Disciples, and Eld. G. W. Green, of Memphis, Ind., on the part of the Adventists, was held Sept. 5, 6, 7, 1871, before large, intelligent, and intensely interestied audiences.

Mr. Treat is regarded by his denomination a champion debater, at least in Southern Indiana. He is indorsed by the Christian Record as "a representative man," and during the discussion he was backed by some twelve or fifteen of his brethren in the ministry. He is a ready speaker, and displayed shrewdness and tact in the support of his cause. It must be said however, that he is not altogether fair as a disputant, as he persistently interrupted his opponent in his speeches, and that too, after his opponent had time and again kindly asked him to desist. Indeed this conduct was persisted in until some of Mr. Treat's own brethren became so disgusted as to rebuke him.

Mr. Green is also a ready speaker, though he does not talk quite so rapidly as does Mr. Treat. He has the confidence of his brethren, and he is not without some note as a debater, as this is by no means his first encounter, even with the Disciples. In this contest, it would seem that his brethren had so much confidence in him as to allow him to pass through the contest without backing on their part, as not one of the ministry was present during the entire discussion. As the result of this, there was no board of moderators. Eld. J. M. Matthes of the Christian Record, was called to act as chairman, but he refused to decide any question of order, thus allowing Treat to take his own course. Had there been a board of moderators, his bearing towards Mr. Green would have been considered inadmissible. Although every effort was made to irritate him, Mr. Green kept himself perfectly calm and tranqual throughout the entire discussion; and his kind and Christian deportment towards his opponent, together with the straight-forward and dignified manner in which he dealt with the subject, won for him the confidence of I might say all who heard the debate, except some of the more dogmatical Campbellites, who, notwithstanding the truth was made to stand stubbornly before them, were obstinately determined to remain "joined to their idols."

As I have said, Mr. Green was alone; but as a teacher of "the things concerning the kingdom," he planted himself upon the Bible, and amidst all the influence brought bear against him, without resort to sophistry, sneers, or abuse, triumphantly sustained his positions. It is a common remark that "Mr. Green is the fairest debater I ever heard." Again, "Green's conduct was decidedly more Christian than Treat's."

I give it as my candid opinion that outside the Disciple church here the majority give the decision to Mr. Green. And my own knowledge of the matter is, that Mr. Treat's theory received at the hands of Mr. Green an unmerciful, but well-merited castigation.

Eld. Green presented the Bible in an entirely new light to the majority of those that heard the debate, and as they have time to read, and examine his arguments in the light of the Bible, the certainty of his success is daily becoming "more and more" confirmed.

R. B. WILLIAMS.

PROSPECTUS.

An Interlinear Translation of the Sacred Scriptures.

It is not because there is any lack of translations or commentaries on the Bible, that the undersigned undertake this great work, but to meet the desire of those who wish to acquire a more independent and a nearer view of the holy truths revealed in the Word of God. To enable men to see the Divine truth for themselves, and this without devoting to it more time than they can spare, has been the great aim in our work. We believe that it will be found of great value as a book of reference on all disputed texts, and that any one with comparatively little study, will be able to make proper use of it. At the same time we believe that it will prove an invaluable aid to those who are striving to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the Bible in its original tongue. On this account we recommend the work to the patronage of all lovers of the sacred Scriptures, and more especially to ministers of the gospel. The following is the plan of the work:

I. Above each word of the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Greek texts will be placed an English equivalent, which shall render its fundamental meaning and grammatical function in such a manner as to enable any one familiar with the English grammar, to analyze every sentence of the foreign language.

II. Words not found in the original, but necessary to complete the sense, will be inclosed in brackets, while the translation of such words of the original, as would be omitted in translating into good English is given in parenthesis.

III. There will be appended to each number notes, explanatory of the grammatical and other difficulties in the text. These notes will be paged independently, so that they may be bound by themselves.

IV. In order to enable beginners to pronounce the foreign idioms correctly, we shall give in the first part of the Hebrew, the Chaldee and the Greek, its pronunciation and accent; Webster's key of pronunciation being adopted for this purpose as far as it is applicable. In the subsequent parts the pronunciation will be omitted, in order to prevent too great a bulk.

V. In order that the student may soon acquire also a knowledge of the later Hebrew and of the Chaldaic, the books of Ezra and Daniel will appear immediately after the third part of the Old Testament. Thus the student will early become acquainted with the new element that enters into the later Hebrew.

VI. A succinct Chaldaic and Hebrew Grammar will also be given, together with a synopsis of the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verbs and nouns. This (of which in our Essay on Semitic Comparative Philology, published in the Bibliotheca Sacra, July, 1862, we have already presented some outlines) will be published as an Appendix, and separately paged; so that it may be bound by itself.

VII. The text and translation of the Old Testament will be issued in nineteen or twenty parts, the New Testament in seven or eight. Each part will contain about 160 octavo pages, and fifteen or twenty pages of the "notes."

From what has been said above it will be seen that this translation differs essentially from most of the other interlinear translations; the difference consisting chiefly in this, that the same word in the original receives always the same translation; derived significations being given, when necessary in the notes. By these means the radical signification of any word in the original being continually repeated, soon becomes fixed in the mind.

Thinking that beginners might be troubled by the great number of accents and punctuation marks in Hebrew, we omit those in the first part, as the accents are there given under each word in the pronunciation.

In the New Testament we shall as a general thing follow the text of Griesbach, but shall cite the varying readings of Tischendorf and others, whenever they prove of importance to the interpretation of the text. As the Biblical Greek was written by men living on Semitic ground, the interpretation will be kept in continual accord with the Hebrew way of thinking, and the Hebrew idiom.

DR. RUDOLPH L. TAFEL, London.

NOTICE.

Dr. Leonard Tafel, of New York, has associated with himself, to insure the early completion of the work, his two sons, Rev. R. L. Tafel, Ph. D., of London, and Rev. L. H. Tafel, of Philadelphia, and will begin the publication of the work on his own account: the former publishers having transferred their subscribers to him. The first (Hebrew) part of the work is now in the hand of the printer and will be published in January, 1872. Twelve parts are already translated, so that there need be no unnecessary delay in the work.

The Hebrew and Greek parts will be published alternately, beginning with the Hebrew. No labor or expense will be spared to bring out the work in substantial and elegant style.

Price for each of the single parts of the Old Testament, One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Subscriptions are also received for the Old and New Testaments separately.

Price of Single Parts of the Old Testament to non-subscribers, Three Dollars; of single parts of the New Testament to non-subscribers, Two Dollars.

It is expected that every two months one Part will be issued: due notice will be given on the completion of each successive part to every subscriber, when, on remitting the stipulate price, the respective Parts will be sent by return mail.

Business communications should be addressed in the United States to Rev. L. H. Tafel, 635 Arch Street, Philadelphia; in England to Rev. R. L. Tafel, 14 Rothbury Villas, Stroud Green Lane, N. London.

—Subscriptions may be sent to the office of THE TIMES. For six bona-fide subscribers, a seventh copy will be sent free. It will be seen that this invaluable work will cost subscribers only about $10.50 a year.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 10, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ THE TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed, the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil, the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

"Good Tidings."

The long looked for "Conference Book" has now appeared with the above title. See notice in another place, and send for a copy. $1. in cloth. 80c. in paper, postpaid.

Send a Stamp.

When you write a letter which requires an answer, make it an invariable rule to enclose a stamp, to pay the postage on the reply. Editors—and ministers, too—find their postage bills a heavy tax on their pockets.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

Advertise "The Times."

We furnish envelopes and paper bearing an advertisement of THE TIMES, at the following prices:

Twenty-five (25) envelopes, post-paid, 10c.—25 sheets flat note (2 pages) 15c.—25 sheets flat letter, 20c.—40 sheets of flat note and 25 envelopes, 25c.—40 sheets flat letter and 25 envelopes, 33c.—100 sheets of flat letter, 75c.—100 sheets flat note, 50c.

New Music.

"Jerusalem Forever Bright," by Amanda Bailey. Price 5c.

"Rest Over There," by Geo. E. Lee. 5c.

Praise Songs, 32 pp. of choice tunes. 15c.

Camp-Meeting Music, 16 large pages. 10c.

The four last named, to one address, 30c. For sale at this office.

Whitmore—Cheap Edition.

We are pushing this along as fast as possible. It is much better printed than the last, for our new press is doing good work. We are anticipating fresh and liberal orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies, by express, $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We once heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." We think this is cheap enough. Every one can afford to have Whitmore, and Collins, and Sheldon preaching, and that, too, in places the authors themselves cannot possibly visit. Buy and distribute, or lend their works.

The Proposed Chart.

We confess to but little faith, at first, that our ideal of a complete prophetic chart could be realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, and so made the proposition to publish if a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. The response is encouraging. Shall we have the other ninety names?

John S. Lawver, M. B. Geer, Eld J. Raymond, C. C. Marston, F. Burr, The Chicago Church, D. O. Hink, I. C. Wellcome, J. F. Huber Grand St. (New York) Church.

Who will help fill up this list?

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post paid, to any address (in the United States or Canadas) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists: and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

To Correspondents.

F. M. DUDLEY. Have not a copy of either number left.... S. M. LUM. You are right. He only asks us to do what we can.... J. G. SMITH. We appreciate the favor.... D. BURKHOLDER. Keep sowing. STEBBINS—DUNHAM.—At the house of Mr. Sullane, Burns Valley, Wis., Sept. 14, 1871, by Eld. P. W. Hough, Mr. Arad Stebbins of Black River Falls, and Mrs. Hattie L Dunham of Burns.

* * * The way things go in New York may be judged from the following item in the recent exposures by the N. Y. Times: The king of sinecure-holders is undoubtedly Cornelius Corson, who draws $10,000 a year as Clerk to the commissioners for the building of the Ninth District Court-house, $5,000 a year as Chief of the Bureau of Elections, $2,500 a year as Clerk to the Board of County Canvassers, $2,000 for preparing the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors, $2,500 as official reporter to the Board of Aldermen, (he lately resigned this place to a friend,) and $2,500 as stenographer of one of the Courts, besides receiving various amounts from the Supervisors for copying services. All of his positions are sinecures.

ABROAD.

* * * Constantinople has the Cholera.

The Russian Grand Duke Alexis has sailed from England for New York.

* * * Germany proposes to spend five millions thalers extra the coming year, on the navy, and coast defences.

* * * Germany seems all alive with opposition to "Infallibleist Romanism." And the government sympathises quite fully with the opponents of the last Papal blasphemy.

* * * The Italian government insists that the Professors in the Papal Colleges at Rome shall take the oath of allegiance to the government. Twenty of them utterly refuse to do so. They will not be allowed to teach, unless they submit. It begins to look a little as if the arch-persecuting power of the past, was itself suffering persecution.

* * * Ireland has furnished an heroic companion of those famous women, Grace Darling and Ida Lewis, in the person of an unnamed lady, who, seeing a brig wrecked and helpless in plain sight of the life boats at Drogheda, mouth of Boyne, put off in a small boat, and, at the risk of her life, rescued a man left on the wave-washed hulk. The world must have the name of this last heroine to embalm in song and story. And while we chant her praise, let our contempt fall on the male poltroons who refused to go to the rescue which this woman dared to accomplish. —Tribune.

* * * The friends of Peace (who by-the-way, were anything but peaceful in their late Congress) must be somewhat discouraged at the warlike preparation constantly going forward in Europe. Though we are steadily assured that tranquility broods over the nations, every one of them is quietly keeping up all the appearances of active readiness for war. The latest Power to fortify itself in military preparation is Russia, whose army is to be put in active training in order to test its efficiency in executing movements in large bodies. What with the unusual rehearsal of the battle of Dorking in England, the reorganization of the Swedish army, the projected Russian maneuvers, and general wakefulness in the European States, there is much to indicate anything but an expectation of a long peace. —Tribune.

* * * Either Persia is in a horrible condition from famine, or else the accounts are highly sensational. A writer Sept. 7, from Teheran, giving an account of the state of affairs in the famine-stricken province of Scherassan, says that during the month of July 8,000 persons perished in the city of Meschid, and that 40,000 inhabitants of the province have been carried off into slavery by the Afghans, who had taken advantage of the general disorganizations to make incursions for plunder. The bakers demand such exorbitant prices for their bread that the authorities had intervened, and a number of extortioners been executed. Mr. Dickenson says that the country is disturbed by frequent ins[illegible]. The pestilence still rages, and [illegible] are increased by destructive inun[illegible], not withstanding the fearf[illegible] of the country and people, the [illegible] Government has refused to avail itself [illegible] offered by the governments of Great [illegible] Russia.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

* * * The General Convention of the Episcopal church is in session at Baltimore. Several famous English Episcopalians are present.

* * * Spurgeon calls himself "Rev." no longer, but "pastor." Some of our American preachers might profitably follow the example, and drop a title which has no sort of appropriateness to the irreverent style of teaching they have adopted.—Republican.

* * * Spurgeon tells the following:—"I like the story of the servant-maid, who, when she was asked, on joining the church, 'Are you converted?' 'I hope so sir.' 'What makes you think you are really a child of God?' 'Well, sir, there is a great change in me from what I used to be.' 'What is that change?' I don't know, sir; but there's a change in all things; but there is one thing, I always sweep under the mats now!"

* * * The Bishop of Stuhlweissenburg, in Hungary, is an ultramontane. He believes in the Pope, and in the right of the Pope to be proclaimed infallible without having to ask anybody's consent thereto. Accordingly he made proclamation of the Pope's infallibility without imperial permission, for which he has been summoned to Pesth, and in the presence of all the Ministers in full Court dress, has been told by Count Andrassey that he had incurred the "Royal disapprobation and displeasure," and that he (the Count) was commissioned to convey to the Bishop "the Royal rebuke," and to express hope "that he will pay due respect to the laws and to the orders of his Majesty in future." This ceremony is not likely to hurt the Bishop's prospects ecclesiastically, but it is a solemn way of snubbing the Pope, which his holiness will doubtless appreciate.

Notices, Etc.

W. A. C. P. Association.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Western Advent-Christian Publishing Association, will convene in the Advent Chapel, Green St., Chicago, Ill., Wednesday forenoon, December 5, 1871. A full attendance of the members is desired.

The following amendments to the Constitution of the Association will be presented for action:

ART. XII. Sec. 1. The stock of this association is hereby made transferable, by the transfer of the certificate issued therefor, endorsed in blank by the original holder, his heirs, executors or administrators; and the entering of such transfer upon the books of the Association. The date of said entry of the transfer shall be the date of the transfer.

Sec. 2. This article shall take effect and be in full force from and after its adoption.

Amendment to Art. XI. To amend Art. XI. so that it shall read: "This constitution may be altered or amended at any regularly called meeting of the Association by a vote of *——— of the members present at said meeting: this amendment to be in force from and after its adoption.

Churches throughout the West are invited to elect delegates, selecting persons not already members of the Association. These delegates will not take part in the first meetings of the Association; but arrangements will doubtless be made to receive them to full membership at the earliest possible moment.

WM. L. HIMES, Secy.

* This space is left for the insertion of such a proportion as the members may choose.

P. O. Address.

All letters and papers for Eld O. R. Fassett should be directed to San Francisco, Cal., after Oct. 9 till further notice.

Notice—Minnesota.

The following Resolution passed, unanimously, at the last covenant meeting of the Winona Advent Christian Church:

Resolved, That we cordially invite the State Annual Conference to hold their next Session in our chapel, corner Broadway and Winona Streets in this city.

A. J. MARSH, Sec'y.

Notice.

I shall print a paper soon, on the season of the judgment. Will send it free to all who will send for it, either for themselves or to scatter.

Newark, N. J. ABRAHAM FLAVELL.

Notice.

I wish to locate in some neighborhood where my family will have the privilege of Advent meetings. Would like to find a farm of from 20 to 40 acres; with a comfortable house and water. Can pay about $600, but only a part of it down. Would like to settle where I could supply preaching, more or less, to the brethren in the vicinity. Parties interested can address me at Iron Hill, Iowa. R. S. DUTTON.

NOTE. We recommend Br. Dutton very freely, as "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Brethren anywhere need not hesitate to send for him. He will build you up and do you good. ED. TIMES.

HASTE, TRAVELER, HASTE!

Time's sun is fast setting,
Its twilight is nigh,
Its evening is falling
In clouds o'er the sky;
Its shadows are stretching
In ominous gloom,
Its midnight approaches—
The midnight of doom.
Then haste, sinner, haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing,—flee, lingerer, flee.

Rides forth the fierce tempest
On the wing of the cloud;
The moan of the night-blast
Is fitful and loud;
The mountains are heaving,
The forests are bowed,
The ocean is surging,
Earth gathers its shroud.
Then haste, sinner, haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing,—flee, lingerer, flee!

The vision is nearing—
The Judge and the throne!
The voice of the angel
Proclaims, "It is done!"
On the whirl of the tempest
Its Ruler shall come,
And the blaze of his glory
Flash out from its gloom,
Then haste, sinner, haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing,—flee, lingerer, flee!

With clouds he is coming!
His people shall sing;
With gladness they hail him
Redeemer and king!
The iron rod wielding,
The rod of his ire,
He cometh to kindle
Earth's last fatal fire!
Then haste, sinner, haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing,—flee lingerer flee!

SOUR WORDS.

1. They indicate a sour origin. They show that the heart is in an acid state. The hearer of such words cannot but have his own, and not very complimentary opinion of the speaker.

2. They make the speaker himself more sour. Words react upon those who utter them. They add fuel to the fire and augment the heat.

3. Sour words dangerously tend to make the hearer sour. They create an atmosphere which he breathes, and the virus is likely to penetrate his soul and make him sour too. Vinegar gives its own character to anything it can reach. So it is not the fault of the sour in heart and speech that they do not spoil all the sweetness there is about them.

4. Sour words are all but certain to give sourness to the countenance. The face is a telltale of the heart, and the heart's sourness, rising to the lips in bitter words, has wonderful power over all the features. Look on the countenance as the owner is using sharp and bitter words. Do you see a smiling June, or a scowling November?

5. Sour words are not soon forgotten. Sharp and piercing, they enter, like iron, into the soul. As with hooks of steel, they hang on to memory. All that you can recollect of some people is the sour wourds you have heard them use.

Now, my young friends, if sour words indicate a sour heart, and make the speaker more sour, and make hearers sour, and give a sour contenance, and make one's sourness long and painfully remembered—there are five reasons why such words should never be tourd upon your lips. Let the last ones you have used be the last!—SIMON, in N. Y. Observer.

"PECULIARLY DANGEROUS TIMES."

In a recent number of the Sunday School Times, H. S. Osborn, LL. D., remarks: "We are living in peculiarly dangerous times from the reading which is now brought out. At no former time in the history of our country has light reading been so much in demand as at the present day. All classes of persons,—learned and ignorant,—professional men, business men, —educated ladies as well as the nurse and help, the cook and the chambermaid, demand light reading—tales, stories, novels, or something 'exciting.' I have heard it asserted more works of this character have been sold in the past two years than had been sold during the preceding sixty years!" He then refers to Dr. Ray, of the Butler Insane Asylum, of Providence, R. I., as attributing the increase of insanity to "excessive indulgence in the reading of the novels, and works of similar character, which have, of late years, swarmed from the presses of New York, Philadelphia and Boston," and makes this quotation from the official report:

"The coarse exaggeration of every sentiment, by every possible form of unnatural excitement, giving no addition to one's stock of knowledge, no element of mental strength being envolved, prepares no one better for the stern realities of life. This indulgence is a characteristic of our times, and it is asserted, with distressing evidence, that many of the irregularities which prevail among us, to a degree unknown at any former period, are chargable to this very alarmingly prevalent habit."

We do not believe this alarm of danger is uncalled for. Our land is being flooded with this pernicious "light literature." It is the principal kind offered for sale at the news-stands, in the railway cars, and places of public resort. It behooves every Christian parent to look well to the character of his own reading and of that which he allows his children to have. "A paper will fill a void that nothing else will; and remember, both for yourself and for your children, that no paper ever came into a family for one year which did not exert an influence of a moral character, either good or bad, on some one in that family."—Sel.

THE HARVEST IS PAST.

"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." (Jer. 8:20.)

Such are the words which the weeping prophet Jeremiah put in the mouth of a "disobedient and gainsaying people." To us it seems strange that summer should be mentioned after the harvest, but this may be easily explained. In Palestine, the autumnal rains begin to fall the last of October. This is the seed-time. Grain usually matures in May, which is therefore the time of harvest. Later, and during the summer occurs the fig harvest.

This, then, is the passage expressed: "The grain harvest is past, the fig harvest is also ended, and we are not saved." The picture in all its sad beauty is this: the grain has been sown, the early rain has fallen, winter is over, the latter rain has also fallen, and the grain has matured. The reapers have entered the field and gathered much into the garner—but not all! The fig harvest has come and is ended, but many remain ungathered. Here and there stalks of grain in the open field, and figs upon the leafless trees remain, unsheltered and alone, when the harvesters have completed their work! These, when they find themselves left behind unsaved, lift up their voices with the mournful cry, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved!" May we have grace given us to ponder the lesson of the harvest-field!

Alford, whose Critical Commentary on the New Testament is the most masterly production of the age, and places him in the front rank of expositors, says, "The Lord will come in person to this earth; his risen elect will reign here with him. This is my firm persuasion, and not mine alone, but that of Christ's waiting people, as it was that of his primitive apostolical church, before controversy blinded the eyes of the fathers to the light of prophecy."

THAT DAY.

Jesus in his teachings often speaks of that day. We instinctively ask what day is thus set apart from the rest. It is a significant word. We stand in awe of it—a day somewhere—standing out like a mountain. It is not a day, but that day. The Savior thus designates the day of judgment,—a king of days.

"Of that day and hour knoweth no man." (Mat. 24: 36.) When it comes we know not. We know simply this—it a fact in God's government. Slowly and steadily it is approaching. It encamps every night nearer to the race,—to us,—to me. We have no human almanacs that can foretell its coming. That it will come seems one of the fundamental thoughts of our mind, admitted everywhere and always. The Egyptians bore decided witness, in their books of the dead, to the coming of that day. Let not that day come upon you sleeping said Jesus. Duty is ours—that day is God's.

"Many will say unto me in that day Lord, Lord," etc. (Mat. 8: 22.) It will manifest the life. The husk of life, the covering, will be stripped off, and the man, what he is, will appear. It will not create anything, it will simply unfold and reveal. Without it, the world and God's dealings would be an insolvable riddle. We sometimes say "Murder will out,"—but it is not true. The court records show that it is but the fragment of the truth. All life, all history, all that we see of God, cry out for such a day.

"It shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom," etc. (Lk. 10: 12.) It will be a day of judging and condemning. Men will sink downward, not only by moral gravitation, but also by judicial sentence. It is the doomsday of the soul out of Christ. Then God who seems sleeping when his laws are broken, will rise up. God is not dead, but long suffering. It seems no wonder that the Latin hymn, "Dies iræ,"—the day of wrath,—got such a hold upon the middle ages. It is an overwhelming thought,—the day of condemnation.

"There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, will give me at that day." (2 Tim. 4: 8.) It is a day of Christian crowning. Midnight darkness comes upon the lost soul, but glorious daylight upon the saved soul. The uncrowned Paul in the Roman dungeon, will be the crowned Paul at God's right hand. That day comes uplifting the oppressed soul, bidding wronged ones stand by the right. It comes like music in the midst of the discordant notes of the world, saying, all will be made right here.

Is not the thought of that day sufficient to crush our hearts? It would affright us were we forced to meet it alone. Standing before that day, the redeemed heart can say, "Jesus died for me." The cross, the blood, make the only hiding place. We are accepted in the beloved one.—Nat. Bap.

Do not expect impossibilities from your minister. He has no power to work miracles. He is a man "of like passions" and infirmities with you. Exercise toward him a little of that charity which you need yourself. Among the things impossible to a minister we name four: He cannot preach two great sermons every Sunday. In addition to his duties and devotions, his private, domestic, and public duties—since in his calender there are only twenty-four hours in the day and seven days in the week—he cannot call at your houses every month in the year. He cannot know you are sick without being told. He cannot always divine the mischievous crotchets of unreasonable people without being told. Be kindly, therefore, in your talk about his preaching; let him know you are more anxious for him to make religious calls on the sick, the poor, and the erring, than social calls on those who do not need them. Send him word when you are sick, and understand that if for lack of such information he fails to call, it is he who is slighted, not you; and smooth the way for an explanation of all misunderstandings that affect his usefulness.—Christian Advocate.

INTERESTING FACTS.

Facts are more valuable than arguments. The following, I think, will be interesting to all who are seeking the truth:

The Hebrew word ruach translated spirit in the Old Testament, occurs three hundred and seventy-seven times. Pneuma, the Greek word rendered spirit in the New Testament three hundred and eighty-five times. Thus it will be seen that we have spirit in the original Scriptures (762) seven hundred and sixty-two times. But not once is it called deathless or immortal. We hear much from modern divines about man's "deathless and immortal spirit," but marvelous as it may appear, no such phrase can be found in the whole Bible. One would think that in using the term over seven hundred times, the Bible ought, at least once, to qualify it by deathless if such were its nature. If man's spirit were deathless, the Bible would so represent it.

Nephesh is the word soul in the Old Testament, and is found in the Hebrew Scriptures (733) seven hundred and thirty-three times. Psuche, the corresponding word in the Greek rendered soul, in the New Testament occurs (105) one hundred and five times. Here we have (838) eight hundred and thirty-eight instances where soul occurs in the original Scriptures, and here is the place to inquire concerning the immortality of the soul. In all this great number of times the word occurs, is it once called immortal? NOT ONCE! How often does the phrase "immortal soul" occur in the Bible? Not once! These, dear reader, are sober facts that interest all who would treat this subject candidly. The world has been duped on this subject by an erroneous theology long enough. It is fully time that independent minds should arise and demand proof for the immortality of the soul. If God has written a book giving all needful information with regard to man's origin, history, condition and destiny, and if man's soul is immortal, and is destined to exist as long as God exists, have we not a right to expect not merely a hint, but a plain and positive statement of the fact? (Hastings.) No such statement can be found in any part of the Book. In the language of Prof. Wilson, it is worthy of notice that in all the 800 times the original words occur in the Bible, not once is the word immortal or immortality, or deathless, or never-dying, found in connection as qualifying the terms. The word soul is never used in the Bible to represent a conscious part of man existing when he is dead. (Grant.) Richard Watson, the great Methodist theologian, says: Some suppose consciousness is an essential attribute of spirit; and the soul is naturally immortal; the former of which cannot be proved, while the latter is contradicted by the Bible, which makes our immortality a GIFT, dependent on the will of the giver. Institutes, vol. 2, p. 82.

The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Ezk. 18: 4. If the soul were immortal, could it die? Anything that is immortal is deathless. An immortal being cannot die; but the soul that sinneth it shall die: hence the soul is not immortal. Dr. Dwight says: Whatever has been created can certainly be annihilated. The continuance of the soul, therefore, must depend absolutely on the will of God. C. C. MARSTON.

In A. D. 178, Irenæus, when opposing the Gnostics, who, following the creeds of Zoroaster and Socrates, asserted the absolute immortality of the soul, said: Life is not ourselves, nor of our nature, but of God; and that he who rejects the truths of God, deprives himself of the gift of duration to all eternity." And Arnobius, A. D. 303, said, "that there was a class of men who, elated with an extravagant opinion of themselves, tell us that their souls are immortal, and free from the stain of gross matter;" which doctrine he combatted as contrary to the Scriptures of Christ and his apostles.

Jesus' Coming.

Jesus' coming is to be with the suddenness of the lightning's flash. The husbandman gathering his golden sheaves o'er his beauteous harvest field, will see that the "sheaves" are being gathered into the 'garner' of the Lord. The priest in his pompous robes, before the man-made altar, shall see; a "Priest" is come, to dwell forever over his own people. The "judge upon the bench," with a half finished charge to the jurors, or sentence upon the poor criminal, shall behold in that instant the "Judge at the door." The monarch on his throne, descends to the rank of a subject and submits to the one true King—"Christ the Lord!"

The world shall be as it was in the days just before the flood, defying God, and violating all principles of right, calling for "the promises of his coming," telling you "since the fathers fell asleep" there has been no change! Many have said Lord! Lord! and told us of the end of all things, the coming of Christ, and the burning of the world: but we see no change!

Now the brightness of his coming is the terror of men. One gleam of lurid light will shine over sea and continent and island, and dart down into every corner, and rise up to every "mountain-home," illumining the rugged rocks and chasms, and blaze across the fertile plains.

No people or tribe shall be overlooked. No character, or sin but shall come to light. Is it not true that the light of that day, "the day of the Lord," will shine with more than noon-day splendor, on every condition and character of men? The prospect of the coming of Christ, and of a burning world is a greater power to move men, than death itself. We find the apostles warning sinners in this style: I beseech you by the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." "Be ye also ready;" "Occupy till I come." This is the order, the "marching order." By this we live, by this we could die!

In carelessness, and carnal serenity, the ungodly have staked their all—all for time, all for eternity; all for the day of a dissolving world. So suddenly shall that day break upon the world, there shall be terror in the mind of every impenitent, when they behold in the clouds the Son of man, come at last, to judge all mankind, If men are not moved by the timely warning given in the Scriptures; if they are not awakened by the consistent reasoning of the best talent among men; by the appeals of God and his servants, who shall be responsible for their terrible neglect? No remedy for this error: once lost, lost forever.

But look once more, and see the great day, the final end. You may feel for a time secure, but you know this security is transient, and how quick it might pass; and then your hopes, your long-cherished hopes, where, oh! where have they fled? Gone, and gone forever. Only one hope will be of value then. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." J. A. NEWTON.

From San Francisco.

Br. Himes: The great Advent truths are gaining ground on this coast. I spent last Lord's day with the church in this city. There are a few old, tried saints, that came here years ago, who embraced the truth in the East; and they are fighting the good fight of faith and God is blessing their efforts. We had one of the happiest communion seasons last evening, that I ever enjoyed. The presence of our Lord was at the table.

We leave to-day for Vallejo to strengthen the little church there. Ever since that church was organized they have been growing in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth, and they stand up boldly for all the great truths, and that stirs the devil, and sets the preachers to work to put down the great Advent truths, and to make all hands believe that they have eternal life, independent of Christ, or his coming, to bring it to us, as is taught in the word. You see that it makes lively times among us. What we want is sound, gospel truth, and men that are not afraid to stan up boldly and preach the word, like the ADVENT TIMES. That paper is gaining favor on this coast, because it comes out so straight on the present truth.

There has been a present truth in all ages. Noah had a truth to preach in his day: The world was to be drowned. In the days of Christ, there was a present truth: that Jesus was the Savior of the world, and the devil hated it. And, thank God, we have a present truth to-day: and that is, no immortality, no life, no inheritance for the saints of God unless Christ comes again. But the false preacher stands up, and says we get all this when we die.

Br. Himes, make the truth as plain as possible, and expose sin and the errors of the day, and do not be afraid of coming out very plain. May God bless and give you divine wisdom, and health, and strength until Jesus comes.

D. D. REED.

Still "More Gravy" Wanted.

I like the idea presented by "Gaius" about Conference reports being dished up with fewer bones, and more gravy. Allow me to add that if some of the ministering brethren would leave out dry pieces, and fill up with "gravy," it would certainly please THE TIMES' readers better. We don't care what train you took; or to know that you preached to a school or meeting-house full at a certain date. Possibly four hundred other Advent ministers did the same thing the same evening; and if every one should report the fact, every time, THE TIMES would be filled with nothing else. We don't care so much about you, as about what the Lord is doing through you. Give us the juicy parts—experience, incidents, new conversions, baptisms, trials and persecutions for the truth's sake, joys and gleams of sunshine, and the like. These are always interesting. In short, write for the whole body, and rigidly prune out all you would not care to read from some other laborer, whom you never saw, nor expect to see, this side of kingdom.

I have made maple sugar some, and I had rather have one spoonful of syrup than a pailfull of sap. The pailfull may have all the sweet in it, but I cannot drink so much to get it. We want to hear from you all, often; but spare us the details.

In behalf of many, PRISCILLA.

Our Danger.

Christians are now surrounded by as many dangers as were those of the times of great persecution. It is a time when Christians need to take heed to the language of Jesus. He speaks (Lk. 21,) of his second coming and addressing those who would be alive at that time, says: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of life, and so that day come upon you unawares."

Now is the [illegible] the persecution is past, [illegible] arrived when Satan by his different agencies is working all abroad in the land, alluring the people from Christ; in fact is deceiving the nations, and preparing them for the battle of the great day of God Almighty. (Rev. 16: 14.)

It seems to be almost an impossibility for people to labor without being "overcharged with the cares of this life." It was always so. People had plenty of time for worship, family prayer and to attend the meetings of the Sabbath: but now many do not find time to pray even in secret. Ask them about it, and the reply is, "So much work to do, I don't seem to have time."

And so it is hurry, purry, from morning till night. This is a characteristic of this age. The people are many of them seemingly as they were in th days of Noah—Their imaginations perverted. But "let those who are of the day watch, and be sober," and live for eternity. Overcome the spirit of slumber that is creeping over the mind, and be ready for the coming of the Lord, for he is near, even at the door.

In conclusion, let me say in the language of the apostle: My brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness, [or as the margin reads] wicked spirits, in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day.... Stand having your loins girt about with truth, praying with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance, and supplication, for all saints. S. B. MABRY

Boasting.

The Chicago Sunday Times of Oct. 8, contained a two column article on the prosperity of Chicago. The wealth of the city, the enterprise of its capitalists, the magnificence of its buildings of marble and stone, the enlargment of its borders, and the immense and rapidly increasing business of the city were puffed in the usual manner which characterises all such articles, when people wish to expand that old speech of former days,—"is this not great Babylon which I have built?"

There is no doubt but that the article in question expressed the truth on most if not all its points, as any one who in a brief visit here could very readily discover, but the spirit of boasting so prevalent in these last days is being continually exemplified in such articles as the one to which I allude.

But what a sudden change! Ere the people had retired to rest that very night the peal of the alarm bells sounded for fire. Fires are so frequent in this city that a single peal causes but little thought to the listeners. But soon the general alarm rang on the night air startling and arousing the whole city. Multitudes rushed to the scene of terror. Firemen labored strenuously, and the engines poured in a vast torrent of water upon the flames, but all in vain. The flames leaped on, and on and spread, and roared, and devoured all before it. Wood, and brick and stone, seemed all alike in its presence. The firefiend seemed to laugh and mock at the efforts of man to limit its power. The flames sprang and leaped from block to block, and behind it was but blackened ruins. And in a few short hours its work was done. Where the evening sun had thrown its departing rays on tower and dome, on palaces and massive works of art, the morning sunlight only pierced the cloud of smoke that arose from a mass of smouldering ruins. Where at evening light man boasted of the pomp and power of his achievements, the morning light fell on a sad and melancholy waste.

In one short night the change had had come. In a few brief hours the works of years were swept away. Would that with it had also passed away that proud spirit of boasting that leads men to say, "I have done great things." But no: that still remains. "We can rebuild. In five years time men shall only know of this by the story of those who saw it." There is sympathy; there is kindness; there is pity and aid for the destitute, but there is no God. Men may gnaw their tongues for pain but they will not "repent of their deeds to give God the glory." How vain is this boasting! The professed humility of the present day is most of it but mockery before God. Men do little things and boast of them as being great. The Lord permits the destroyer to bring to nought their works, and yet their pride and boasting is not stayed.

The world is drunken in its pride. Puffed up with vanity the cities of earth a[illegible] ripening for the judgement-day

[illegible] the work of art, or the progr[illegible] the age to which I object; but to that great swelling vanity that puts God so far away and makes man supreme. The world is filling up with this spirit, and, in spite of warnings and sad experience, man still boasts against his God. It cannot last long. Bable's tower reached not to heaven, Sodom and Gomorrah sunk in their maddened career. And so it will be soon with this generation. "Pride goeth before destruction."

Let the true church of the living God be awakened to the moral indications of these last days. O, Christians who love the Master's appearing, keep the true humility. Be watchful, be prayerful, be vigilant and active. The awful pulse of nature is throbbing with fever heat, and soon the final struggle must come. Amen! Let it come! Let the wheels of the fiery chariot roll, if they but bring the Lord of Glory. And let the waiting church on bended knees, but with up lifted hearts and eyes, watch for the first gleam of light that shall precede the golden halo of Messiah's throne. F. BURR.

Impartial Testimony.

How is it that while many of our intelligent men of the world in the fields of science are ever and anon announcing that the world gives indications of its speedy dissolution? Many of them if approached by Adventism at any other time, would denounce it. But yet, like Balaam blessing Israel, unwillingly bear testimony to its truth. The church with its learned corps of teachers, "men distinguished in the fields of learning," men that ought to be the first to know these things, repudiate them, and are crying "peace and safety!" to the world. The watchmen are drunken, but not with wine.—It is the intoxication of popularity and the pleasures of the world; living at ease, enjoying the good things of this world; their spirits kept in lively exercise by the "sociable," "bazaar," "festival," etc.; as at the bottom of a hand bill announcing a festival for the benefit of a certain church, the following was seen: "Come, let us have a joyous season!"

Must Look Into It.

I gave a copy of THE TIMES to a brother the other day, who promised to read it. I asked him if he believed the word of God. "Oh yes!" Do you believe the Lord told the truth when he said—"The soul that sinneth it shall die?" "To be sure I do." Then, do you believe your preacher when he says of the wicked—"the soul that sinneth"—shall never die, but live in hell to all eternity? He paused for a moment, held down his head and said, "I must look into that matter," and left me.

Tour East.

Returning to Boston in order to purchase tickets here to the far West, I bought via the Vermont Central, New York Central, and Michigan Central, going by way of Vermont Central, in order to meet appointments at Castleton, Vt., and Sandy Hill, N. Y. My appointment for was on Thursday eve. Sept. 14. I arrived in the morning train in order to spend the day with Br. and Sr. Mathewson who reside in this beautiful, sequested village, and where our brother has long had the charge of the Advent church. The day spent in this Christian society was truly a feast to me, and one of spiritual profit. Br. M. visited with me some of the families of his parishoners, after first having gone with me by request to the grave of our departed Sr. Sherman. We stood over her slumbering dust and talked of her virtues, her usefulness while living, felt that "the memory of the just is blessed." Oh! how comforting if we must go to the cemetery, to visit the graves of those who leave behind them so many deeds of kindness, and such active seed in the cause of the Redeemer. These make the fragrance of their names and memory sweet and lasting, and stimulates us to imitate their Christian example, and gain with them a reunion in the unending life to come, where we shall know no more rude and sorrowful partings. We visited Br. Sherman and family, and found him at home lonely and sad, in the midst of his afflicted children. But they sorrow in hope, blessed be God. The attendance at the chapel, for several reasons, was not as large as we could have desired, but I trust the meeting was not in vain.

SANDY HILL, N. Y.

This was a field of my labors previous to moving to Minneapolis, Minn. The continued illness of my companion, and the danger of loosing her by death, from the character of the disease under which she had suffered for twenty years, with the advice of medical counsel, and also a providential call to this far distant region, led me to sever my connection with this church; a society church which did more for my temporal comfort, and that of my family, than any since my entering upon the ministry. I thank them for this, and for their kindness to my sick and helpless wife. The Lord reward them at the resurrection of the just. It seems like being at home to be with these dear Christian friends. Tears fill my eyes while I think I must live apart from them. I will not mention names or families; all are endeared to my heart. They are tried friends, cemented to us in closest union while we were in the furnace.

I spent my time in visiting Christian friends in this village, West Fort Ann, Kingsbury, and Fort Edward; and on Lord's day preached in the chapel at Sandy Hill, and in a Hall at Fort Edward, in the evening. The church helped me on my way liberally. Eld. Sibley is now the pastor of this people, who was absent at the time of my visit. I hope he may be successful in his ministry in this inviting field.

Recalling appointments made, and refusing all other pressing solicitations to stop on my return, after visiting my daughter and her family at Saratoga, N. Y., and my son's widow and child, also, I hastened home in the fiery chariots of the last days, precursors of the Lord's chariot of glory whose "wheels roll in fire." I had to do this in orde to make arrangements for immediate departure for a tour West, even to the Pacific coast! This was not contemplated when I first arranged to go East; but the repeated urgency of the calls from California and the advice o the brethren and Missionary Board at Springfield determined my duty; and as Providence unmistakably indicates this, I say, the will of the Lord be done; though I must confess that it is at the cost of much fear and trembling, and a sacrifice of home comforts.

But as heretofore in my missionary life, relying upon the promises of the Master and Lord, I go forward. (Mk. 10: 28–30.)

In my absence, which extended over the short period of seven weeks, I journeyed three thousand miles, through twelve States, or parts of States, and a portion of Canada West. I preached thirty-two times, visited 115 families, both the sick and well, attended two large camp-meetings, one tent-meeting; and visited three Advent Publication offices. I have seen many of my dear brethren and sisters with whom I formerly in years past held sweet and precious seasons of Christian fellowship and formed many new acquaintances with others looking for the Coming One. I have witnessed some of the most beautiful portions of our beloved land—together with its flourishing cities, villages, and towns.

Nothing has occurred to mar the pleasure of my journey. The angels of the Lord has been around about me, delivering me from many an unseen danger of which I shall know nothing 'till the day of the Lord reveals their number and character; and of one thing I am still cognizant that the Lord has called me, the least of all saints, to preach "the gospel of the kingdom" to this generation, and counted me worthy to carry the glad message of his coming and kingdom to the ends of our own favored country.

O. R. FASSETT.

The Army of Cavalry.

Under the first four trumpets of the book of Revelation we understand judgments are executed on Western Rome; under the fifth and sixth Eastern Rome suffers; while under the seventh the whole world is brought into judgment, God's enemies are destroyed, the saints rewarded, and the everlasting kingdom of Christ established. The prophecy of the seven trumpets is thus regarded as extending from the middle of the fourth century to the end of the present dispensation. The number of intelligent expositors agreeing in this general outline is not small.

A correspondent of the London Rock, in a series of articles on "prophecy in its bearing on the present crisis," presents some thoughts respecting the horsemen of the sixth trumpet which have interested us; and without adopting every item in the exposition we feel disposed to lay it before our readers, assured that it will repay perusal. Here it is:—

"And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand; and I heard the number of them."

Two prominent and unmistakable features are here given us, by which we may surely discern a fulfillment of this prophecy, if any fulfillment there has been.

First, there is a note of time; and, secondly, there is a description which can hardly mislead us. If we find these two things uniting in any page of history, we may be confident that we see the accomplishment of the prophecy.

First a note of time. "The angels were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, to slay the third part of men."

"Slaying the third part of men" is a symbolical expression for terminating and extinguishing the Eastern Empire. "An hour, and a day, and a month, and a year," computed, according to prophetic custom, "a day for a year," is equal to about 396 years.

The Eastern Empire, "the third part of men," was "slain" or put an end to, as we know, by the fall of Constantinople in A. D. 1453. This slaying, or extinction, was accomplished by the Turks. But if the Turks were called to this work by the sounding of the sixth trumpet, 396 years before, is there any trace of that call, that mission, in history? If we find this, the fact, surely, will be a striking one.

Counting back, from A. D. 1453, the date of the "slaying," three hundred and ninety-six years, we are brought to the year A. D. 1057. Do we find, in the page of history, any fact of note, occuring then, or about that time, and having a reference to this question?

We do. In the middle of that century, the Caliph of Bagdad, the remaining representative of the Saracen power, had become weak and feeble, and was unable to maintain himself in his seat of authority. In his distress, he looked round for help, and saw, in the rising power of the Turks, or Turkoman tribes of Central Asia, just the ally that he needed. In A. D. 1055 he addressed an application to Togrul Beg, the chief of the Turks or Turkomans, to come to his aid. Togrul and his Turks, hitherto "bound," or kept in by the Euphrates, now were loosed. Togrul went to Bagdad, was inaugurated as the Caliph's lieutenant, and then issued forth, says Abulfeda, to war with the Caliph's enemies, on the 18th of January, 1057. So commenced what has been known for eight hundred years as the Turkish or Ottoman Empire. And from the going forth of Togrul Beg, as the Caliph's lieutenant, to the fall of Constantinople and the Greek Empire, was just the predicted 396 years, "the hour, and day, and month, and year," of which St. John had spoken.

Surely this is no ordinary feature in the case; it is an agreement which no chance could have brought about.

But it does not stand alone. A very singular circumstance is next stated, which, if fulfilled, must turn probability into absolute certainty. The description of the army or military "force "loosed from the Euphrates," is one of no ordinary kind. "The number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand, and I heard the number of them."

"I heard the number of them," seems to mean, "my attention was called to this fact,—the statement was emphatic."

"Two hundred thousand thousand," would be more actually translated, "two myriads of myriads." A myriad is sometimes used in a definite sense, as meaning "ten thousand;" but quite as frequently in an indefinite, meaning a vast multitude.

Thus in Gen. 24: 60, "Be thou the mother of thousands of myriads." And in Num. 10: 36, "Return to thy thousands of myriads" (when all Israel had but 603,550 male adults. Num. 1: 46).

The prophecy speaks, therefore, merely of an immense army of horsemen, but of horsemen only.

Now where, in all history, do we find this fact? Cavalry has always been regarded, among military nations, as a necessary branch of an army. Thus in the army of Xerxes, the largest upon record, the infantry were millions, but the cavalry were 80,000. And so in the armies of Alexander, of Antiochus, of Hannibal, of Cæsar, we seldom hear of more than 20,000 or 30,000 horsemen. The same may be said of modern armaments; of Napoleon's, and of those of our own day. If half a million of men are brought together, four-fifths of them are usually foot-soldiers.

But in this one instance, and in no other, we hear of an army consisting of vast multitudes described as "The army of the horsemen." Again, we ask, in what page of history can anything like this be pointed out?

In one and only one. It pleased God that just at the predicted time, a great nation of horsemen should appear. And we find it in central Asia, in the eleventh, twelfth, and following centuries. Gibbon tells us that the cavalry of the earlier Turks of Mount Altar, were "both men and horses, proudly computed by millions."[1] On one occasion, he tells us, the sultan of Ghizni inquired of a Seljuk chief, "How many men he could furnish for military service?" "Send one of these arrows into our camp, and 50,000 men will mount on horseback." "And if these should not be sufficient?" "send this second arrow to the horde of Balik, and you will have 50,000 more." "But should I need the whole force of your tribe?" "Send my bow, and the summons will be obeyed by 200,000 horse." A little later we read, "The myriads of Turkish horse overspread a frontier of 600 miles from Tauris to Erzeroum, and the blood of 130,000 Christians was a grateful sacrifice to the Arabian prophet."[2] Again, he says, "the the forces of Seljukian Sultan Soliman, encountered by the Crusaders at Nice, are stated at 200,000 or even 360,000 horsemen." And Knolles speaks of the horsemen of the Turks in his day as above 700,000. Maleck Shah, the second in succession to Togrul Beg, is said to have kept for his household and for the chase, 47,000 horses. That is to say, for his mere court and pleasure, he kept a larger establishment of horsemen than was possessed by the great French empire of our own time, when it entered upon the greatest war of the present century.

Let these two proofs be added together, and their force will be seen to be irresistible. From the neighborhood of the Euphrates, an army, or rather a nation of horsemen, is announced as coming forth. No other such army of cavalry was ever seen or heard of in the world. But in Central Asia, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, we know that such a people did exist. The prediction, too, bears a date. It is fulfilled in A. D. 1453. The action commences 396 years before that date, or in 1057. And it is in that year, as we learn from Arabic historians, that Togrul Beg, the chief of the Turkomans, is seen accepting the office of Lieutenant of the Caliph, and issuing forth from Bagdad, to be a "wo" to the Eastern Empire. Against that Empire he launches his "myriads of myriads" of horsemen; and begins a warfare which ends in the predicted time of 396 years in the "slaying of the third part of men."

Two or three minor incidents ought not to be wholly forgotten.

1. The prophecy speaks of "myriads of myriads," a myriad, strictly interpreted, being 10,000. And we find that the Turkish method of numbering their armies was by tomauns, a tomaun being 10,000. Thus Samarcand is described as equal to seven tomauns, because it could send forth 70,000 horse.

"Loose the four angels." Why are these destroying angels described as four? This is explained by the event. "On the death of Maleck Shah, the son of Alp Arslan, the successor of Togrul Beg, his Empire fell to pieces, and was divided between the four Seljukian dynasties of Kerman, Persia, Syria, and Roum."[1] So we see that the Seljuk Turks, though appearing to us at this distance of time as one power, were, in fact, four tribes or clans following one leader.

3. "Out of their mouths issued fire, and smoke, and brimstone, and by these was the third part of men killed."

Gibbon here, as in many other places, thinking nothing of St. John, involuntarily describes the fulfillment of his words, telling us how "the long array of the Turkish artillery was pointed against the walls, fourteen batteries thundering on the most accessible places; how the Greeks and the Turks were involved in a cloud of smoke, till the Turks at length rushing through the breaches, Constantinople was subdued," and "the third part of men was slain."[2]

There remains, of this second wo, but one sad feature:—"The rest of the men, which were not killed by these plagues, repented not of the works of their hands; that they should not worship devils; nor of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts."

"These verses belong," remarks Mr. Birks, "to the interval after the fall of Constantinople until the dawn of their reformation." "The rest of the men" must describe the Church of the West. It had just seen the Eastern Church trodden under the hoof of the Moslem, yet it took not warning—it repented not.

This period from A. D. 1453 to 1517 was one of the darkest in the whole history of the visible church. The Popes, like the clergy generally, were notoriously wicked. Nicholas V. gave a safe conduct, and immediately put the holder of it to death. Sixtus IV. sold the offices of the Papal Conrt, and conspired to murder the Medici in the Cathedral of Florence. Innocent VIII. publicly owned seven illegitimate children. Alexander VI. died by poison he intended for some of his cardinals. At the Council of Lateran, A. D. 1512, one of the speakers said, "We have seen violence, rapine, adulteries, incest, so confound all things sacred and profane, so strike upon the sacred vessel, that admidst the waves of iniquity; she was almost foundered."

"Restoring" Paris.

"Evil be thou my good", seems to be literally the ruling principle with many of the leading spirits of Paris. When the doors of the theaters were flung open after the peace, and original work to be talked of, it might have been supposed, and was certainly hoped, that misfortune would have had a chastening and purifying effect, which would be reflected even from the stage. As a matter of fact, the very first new play brought out—Marcelline, at the Gymnase—has one of the grossest plots ever conceived in Paris, and a forthcoming drama of which we have heard is said in this respect to be no better. In spite of these and other similar indications, the Parisian journalists have made a notable discovery, which is that their city is not vicious enough to be prosperous. The place has got to be a bore, they say, and there is not half as much foreign gold spent there as in the good old wicked times of the empire. This is a terrible argument in behalf of Napoleon, and the nice question arises with the republican journals whether it may not be possible to be prosperously naughty under democratic institutions; or, in other words, if vice and liberty cannot be made compatible.

Under these delicate circumstances, the excellent and patriotic Figaro has hit upon an idea. The problem is how to get back the rich strangers who once adored Paris, but who now shun it like a pestilence; who loved the gilding and purple of the Empire, but do not fancy the austere simplicity of the Republic; who luxuriate in the odors of Lubin, but shudder at that of petroleum; who liked to roll over the velvet asphaltum of the boulevards, but do not care to jolt over the plebian cobble-stones that replace it. How are these Sybarites to be restored to their allegiance, those Ephraims to be joined again to their idols? Clearly, reasons the scrupulous and sagacious Figaro, by making things attractive for them. Let pleasure be sufficiently seductive, and the wearyest and most judged must succumb. The project, then, is to turn Paris into a kind of sublimated Baden-Baden. The Palais d'Industrie will make, it is pointed out, a superb kursaal, and bear about the same relation to it that the Crystal Palace does to a glass coach. In this charming situation, in an edifice "decorated with the names of the most illustrious of earth's worthies, and once the center of the choicest works of man," the spectacle of what in this country would be styled a "champion gambling hell" would be, it is thought, appropriate and inspiring. To clutch the scepter of chance as it falls from the hands of Homburg and Baden-Baben, to unite the glories of both under the sumptuous roof, is a conception altogether worthy of its source. Those temples of feverish joy are soon, we are informed, to be shut, and so will no longer be a source of revenue to the German Treasury. Why not, then, grasp the golden prize, and forget Sedan and Gravellotte, in the enjoyment of those streams of wealth that may thus be diverted from the hated victors?

That the idea is seriously discussed may be deduced from the fact that an American has made the characteristic proposition to lease the Palais d'Industrie for the purpose described, and to pay three million of francs per annum for it. He is likely, no doubt, to have competitors in MM. Duprossior and Blanc, the prospectively ousted Lord's of the green cloth of Baden and Homburg, but, whoever triumphs, Paris will be, it is antiscipated, the gainer. The journalists declare that unless this, or something like it, is done, their beautiful city has become bankrupt. Let this scheme be carried out, and all the pleasure-seekers of the world will surge toward the Champs Elysee in a great tidal wave. Nobody with money and leisure can possibly resist, it is argued, this delicious habit of limitless hazard on a magnificent scale and at all hours. The rush from everywhere will "fill the hotels, cram the theaters, foster the jewelers and traiteurs, and restore to Paris that gayety and charming public naughtiness, the loss of which her reactionary journalists so tearfully deplore." If this beautiful conception be carried out—and it really is seriously threatened—it will be a fine practical illustration of the old truth that beneath what seems to be the lowest depths of degradation there may be a lower still. That so shameful a project should be deliberately canvassed is a sad proof of the moral degeneracy of the French character. Paris has suffered bitter misfortunes, undergone grevious mortifications, and for these she challenges and receives the sympathy of civilized mankind. But should this infamous design be consummated, we apprehend that few decent people anywhere would regret it if the last and crowning calamity were to come upon her, and Paris be blotted from the earth even as were the "Cities of the Plain."—*N. What the Catholic Church Expects.

A brother in Leon Valley, who is well acquainted with the most of Catholic ministers in that section, when talking to one of their prominent men, remarked that they should study the Bible to know God's will, and not allow the priests to deceive them; their church was described in the Bible, and had passed through all its characteristics, except the burning of the city; and then Christ would be seen coming in the clouds of heaven to judge the world.

He replied that his was the first church, and was the only one that had authority to expound the Bible. That he would "bet $50" that the Pope would gain his kingly power in this generation. Yes, he "would bet his life."

The brother remarked he was not in the habit of betting. This was all said in perfect good feeling on both sides. Straws show which way the wind blows.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 17, 1871.

WILL some of those who persistently deride the idea of conditional promises and prophecies, please take up Jer. 18: 1–10, and if it does not mean that God has sometimes uttered conditional prophecies, tell us what it does mean. We confess we cannot make anything else out of it.

WE need live earnest short articles for THE TIMES. And we always need them. They never come amiss to editor or readers: and the latter, especially, are pleased with them, and generally read them first. A long article, to read, must be good; the short ones always find readers.

SOME would have us suppress everything upon the time; others wish us to give everything. We cannot consistently please either of these parties. We are of opinion that the prophetic periods are a legitimate subject of inquiry, and our minds should be open to conviction as to their application. We propose to receive any light that may be shed upon this subject; but have no idea of calling darkness light for the sake of having a time argument of some kind.

CONSIDERABLE interesting matter is crowded out this week, by the details of the fire; also, some business items are laid over, on account of the editor's absence.

THE Chicago fire affects us financially, as it does thousands of others outside the city. We trust those owing the office will pay up as soon as possible, that we may meet our liabilities promptly.

J. W. BUTLER & Co., are doing business at 15 North Jefferson St., Chicago. They will soon have a full line of papers.

Marder, Luse & Co., type-founders, etc., are at 72 West Washington, and will be ready for customers as soon as machinery and material can be procured.

TIME TO AWAKE.

It is high time for us in the West—Adventists we speak to now—to wake up. God is speaking to the world in judgment. Fire, earthquake, storms, revolutions, disaster, and the letting loose of the basest passions of mankind, declare that earth's vintage is fast ripening, and the harvest is at hand.

Our duty in this crisis is plain. Now is our time to point men away from the temporal and perishing, and to the eternal and enduring. Now is the time to ring out our message as with a a trumpet all over the land.

Let not the cause be crippled because of the demands upon our charity. We must take care of the sufferers; but we must also give them the "good news" or gospel of the coming kingdom, now "nigh at hand." where no "flames devour or waves o'erflow."

Let us not slack our hands; but rather renew our consecration, and make new efforts and sacrifices for the truth's sake.

Now is our time for work! Now is our time to speak! Now is the time to proclaim by press, pulpit and every means, that men every where ought to repent, and give glory to God, and prepare to meet him in the impending judgment.

Will we do our duty? Will we improve the golden moments? Or will we be criminally neglectful? The times call for entire sanctification. Not a camp-meeting sanctification, or a mere state of feeling; but a working consecration; a self-denying consecration; a consecration full of life, power, and a will to do, to sacrifice and to suffer, if need be, in the best of causes. Let us "awake out of sleep; our salvation is nearer than when we believed."

REMOVAL.

There is considerable pressure for the removal of our office to some point enjoying better mail and railway facilities. We have very fair proposals from Jackson, Mich., and also from Chicago, Ill. Either would be good points. We shall do nothing rashly, but watch the leadings of Providence in the matter. We are ready to remain or remove wherever as may please the Master we serve. Meanwhile, we shall be glad to hear from any interested.

AUBURN, ILL.

To fulfill a promise made months ago, I last week attended the dedication at Auburn, Ill. The church in this section have built a fine chapel which will be a rallying point for time to come for all that region. All have done nobly; but the labors of Brn. Calkins, Parks and Williams deserve special mention. Owing to the bad weather which detained many friends from the feast, who intended to have helped liberally in paying for the house, a small debt remains upon it. But this will be removed by New Years. The meeting was attended by Brn. O. D. Gibson, Larkin Scott, Sr. Prescott, and Br. Mansfield, whose preaching proved refreshing and most acceptable. Sr. Mansfield did not arrive, and to the hour of going to press has not been heard from for one week. When she last wrote home she was sick at Castleton, Vt.

The rainy weather interfered with the attendance at our meeting; but we all felt to bless God for the much needed opening of the windows of heaven: for we were only a few, while the whole land was suffering from the drought. "All things work together for good to them that love God."

We congratulate Br. Calkins and his society upon the completion of their house of worship. We believe God will honor the sacrifice they have made.

When we left, we understood that Sr. Prescott, aided by Br. Calkins, would continue the meetings, perhaps through this week. W. L. H.

LATE!

The reason why our Western subscribers did not receive their papers at the usual time last week, was because the fire in Chicago destroyed all the magnificent mail arrangements of the Post Office in that city. The mail agents would not receive the bags upon the mail cars. Finally, yesterday, (the 16th) we succeeded in sending them to Detroit, from which office they will doubtless find their way to our readers in good time.

This week's paper may also be delayed by the lack of proper means for distribution of the Western mails.

ENTERPRISE!

Before the Chicago Tribune Building ceased burning, Mr. Joseph Medill had procured a new office, and it is the first of our exchanges in the city to reach our table. And we must say we like its tone since the fire, better than any voice we have heard from the Chicago press for months in the past. The Tribune crippled as it is for material to work with, is now the newspaper of the Northwest. We wish it success.

THE CHICAGO CHURCH.

This society were wonderfully spared in the late conflagration. But some families lost all but life; while a few met with partial losses. Among the sufferers are Brn. Foyen, Moses Smith, Pell, Andrews, Williams, A. T. Rice, besides others. The chapel was not injured, nor did the fire come near Br. Burr. The church is in good heart, and is doing its share to help not only the brethren, but all who need their aid.

Br. Burr will remain with them. The bond between this church and its pastor is a very strong one, though composed of many "tender ties," and will not be easily sundered.

We have many interesting responses to our call for help. Owing to absence from home, at the dedication, and many pressing duties, we have not been able to prepare them for the press. Other matter is delayed by the same cause. W. L. H.

GOOD TIDINGS.

A new work of 425 pp., in large, clear type. Sent, post-paid, to any address, for $1, in cloth binding, or 50c. in paper covers. A discount of one-third to ministers and theological students; also to those who purchase one dozen or more copies.

The design of the book is to give an exposition of Bible truth, relating especially to the nature of man, the future dwelling-place of the righteous, the condition of the dead, the time of the Christian's reward, the destiny of the wicked, the personal coming of Christ, the signs of the times, and our proximity to the judgment. This is a book to read, a book to study, a book to lend, a book to sell. Send on your orders at once. We wish to scatter it by thousands. Let the friends of truth lend a vigorous hand to introduce it everywhere!

QUERIES.

Sr. McC. We shall by and by give every instance where the word spirit occurs in the original Scriptures: then we can answer their question better than now.

S. E. L. In 1 John 5: 1, read 'begotten, for born, and all will be plain. In John 13: 36 Christ undoubtedly referred to his death by the cross. Peter declared his willingness to follow the Savior, even at the expense of his life; but Jesus replied that his moral courage would fail, and he would deny the Lord he loved so well. Yet, in after years, when his work was done, he would "follow him," in that sense; as he afterwards more clearly predicted in ch. 21: 18. In ch. 13: 33, he refers to his departure out of the world unto the Father.

C. B. C. The Bible Union renders Job 19: 25, 26—

> "I know that my Redeemer lives And in after time will stand upon the earth; and after this my skin is destroyed, and without my flesh shall I see God."

In the margin they put—And from my flesh, shall I see," etc. In a note they say—without my flesh—i. e. separate from my mortal body. And from my flesh, as some translate; i. e. from my body recalled to life at the resurrection of the dead." They then add—"But the other version is more consistent with the preceeding member of the verse." We regard this as one of the far fetched efforts made by the Bible Union to get the doctrine of separate spirits unto the Scriptures, by translations and by notes, some of which are referred to in an article in the Advent Quarterly for April 1871. If consistency with the context has any demands at all, the passage should evidently be translated with reference to the resurrection, and not the separate state; for Job has just referred to "the Redeemer standing upon the earth," which if it refers to Christ at all, must refer to his second advent and if to his second advent, then equally as evidently to the resurrection with which that event synchronizes.

Prof. C. E. Stowe maintains in the Christian Union, in an article upon which we cannot now lay our hands, that the passage teaches the resurrection. Dr. John Mason Good says the same.

Prof. G. R. Noyes, renders it:

"And though my skin be wasted away,
Yet in my flesh shall I see God," and applies it to this present life.

Dr. Adam Clarke refers it to the Savior and resurrection; and from him we quote Miles Coverdale's translation:

For I am sure that my Redeemer liveth;
And that I shall rise out of the ground in the last day;
That I shall be clothed againe with this skynne;
And se God in my flesh: Yea, I myself shall beholde him,
Not with other, but with these same eyes.

—Coverdale's version may be called a paraphrase, perhaps, rather than a translation; but we doubt not that he gives us the true sense, rather than the later translators, who seem determined to force Universalism into the Bible, if possible.

From Br. F. Burr.

Br. Himes: Of course you have heard of the terrible devastation of this city by fire. All the great business part of the city east of the south branch of the river is burned up as well as all of the north side. The fire commenced on the West Side from a lamp being kicked over by a cow while a woman was milking (so reported). Probably you will learn the main particulars from the papers. I have been this morning to see the ruins. As I stood on a high bridge and looked off upon the smouldering waste stretching nearly two miles to the right and left, I was more sensibly impressed than ever before of the vanity of earthly possessions. A strip about three miles long by one half mile wide lies in utter ruins. From Harrison street on the south to the extreme north of Lincoln Park is one complete waste, bounded on the east by the Lake and on the west by the River.

I suppose you will want to know how the Advent church stands affected by the fire. Most of us live on the west side out of the way of the fire; but those on the north side were burned out. Business is at a stand still at present, and financially our church is in a much weaker condition than before the fire.

The Lawlessness of the Land.

Our secular and religious press has much to say about the growing lawlessness of our people, and the reckless disregard of human life, evidently increasing at a most fearful rate in every part of the land, especially in our large cities.

Why should we be surprised at it? Strong governments, in a great measure, keep this lawless spirit in check, but when there is no restraint upon individual freedom, where men grow up without parental restraint, or the more wholesome restraint of God's law, and every man, because he is a man, without regard to his fitness, is permitted to have a voice in the government, and, from his very infancy, is reminded by the demagogue, who governs the land, of his "God-like privileges," this lawless and reckless spirit must of necessity be generated. Nothing but Christian culture can keep it in check. And, where is this wholesome Christian culture to be had? A very large proportion of the working people of our land have no Christian training at all, and in most instances, where they have any, it is most defective. Even the very literature of our Sunday-schools is poisoned with this idea of every man's "glorious right as a free citizen of 'the greatest of nations.'" Instead of teaching the boy "to do his duty in the sphere of life in which it pleases God to call him," his Sunday school book tells him to do right, and he may become President or Senator.

The French revolution which to-day tears down and destroys everything that is hallowed and sacred, and would rob every prosperous individual of his rights, clearly shows what may always be expected, where unrestrained freedom exists, without Christian culture.

Is there not much reason to fear that we are rapidly drifting into the same current, and that fearful revolutions may be in store for us? Like causes may be expected to produce like results. Even now we are beginning to hear in our midst the vandal cry of the communist and the agrarian, "Down with the rich, down with corporations, down with churches." None can deny the fact that the vulgar crowd now governs the land. Men of the highest character are now rarely selected to office. It is well known that the man who controls the most money and distributes it the most freely, is the man who gets the office, without regard to his fitness for for it. Bribery and corruption are fearfully on the increase. Though it is not yet true, it is a common saying that 'every man in office has his price.' Questions of the deepest interest, connected with the constitutional law, and vitally affecting the welfare of States and individuals, are now constantly settled according to the numerical strength of the party, whose prosperity is to be promoted or insured by its settlement. Solemn compacts, justice, truth, and every thing else that is sacred and holy, are now trodden under foot, where the interests of party demand it. Men in high places violate their oaths of office, and shamelessly say, "We cannot afford to go against our party." Thus we see every thing like Christian principle disappearing from among our rulers, and a very large proportion of the worst elements of our population turned aside from honorable pursuits, and absorbed in an everlasting "hunt for the spoils of office."

The Crash in Securities.

While a cheerful and resolute spirit well becomes the situation, and the brave words of the Chicago Tribune are heartily indorsed by the nation, it is folly to try to hide from ourselves the fact that the consequences of the great fire are very serious. Those consequences, disastrous to Chicago herself, are more or less prejudicial to the whole country. Three hundred millions of property have been suddenly and irretrievably destroyed. This sum, we must remember, is a positive and real loss. If the whole list of the Stock Market goes down ten per cent. to-day, a great apparent loss would be entailed; and if that list went up again ten per cent. next week, an apparent gain would balance the loss. Yet, whoever made or sunk money in either fluctuation, the real amount of property at stake would remain precisely the same. Not so in the Chicago case. The loss here is as absolute as if so much gold coin had been sown up in sacks and pitched into the sea. Chicago will rise again magnificently from her ruins. The swiftness and the splendor with which she will be rebuilt, will hereafter, we may safely prophesy, be quoted as one of the wonders of the world. But the cash which is to pay for the work must be found afresh, and not a dollar of it can be plucked from her smouldering ashes.

The millions represented by those nine square miles of desolation are blotted out now, and must be replaced from without. A sum equal to or greater than the whole annual expenses of the Federal Government, equal to or greater than even the average loans of the New York city banks for September—an extravagant and hazardous exhibit—has been swept away, and

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 17, 1871.

WILL some of those who persistently deride the idea of conditional promises and prophecies, please take up Jer. 18: 1-10, and if it does not mean that God has sometimes uttered conditional prophecies, tell us what it does mean. We confess we cannot make anything else out of it.

WE need live earnest short articles for THE TIMES. And we always need them. They never come amiss to editor or readers: and the latter, especially, are pleased with them, and generally read them first. A long article, to read, must be good; the short ones always find readers.

SOME would have us suppress everything upon the time; others wish us to give everything. We cannot consistently please either of these parties. We are of opinion that the prophetic periods are a legitimate subject of inquiry, and our minds should be open to conviction as to their application. We propose to receive any light that may be shed upon this subject; but have no idea of calling darkness light for the sake of having a time argument of some kind.

CONSIDERABLE interesting matter is crowded out this week, by the details of the fire; also, some business items are laid over, on account of the editor's absence.

THE Chicago fire affects us financially, as it does thousands of others outside the city. We trust those owing the office will pay up as soon as possible, that we may meet our liabilities promptly.

J. W. BUTLER & Co., are doing business at 15 North Jefferson St., Chicago. They will soon have a full line of papers.

Marder, Luse & Co., type-founders, etc., are at 72 West Washington, and will be ready for customers as soon as machinery and material can be procured.

TIME TO AWAKE.

It is high time for us in the West—Adventists we speak to now—to wake up. God is speaking to the world in judgment. Fire, earthquake, storms, revolutions, disaster, and the letting loose of the basest passions of mankind, declare that earth's vintage is fast ripening, and the harvest is at hand.

Our duty in this crisis is plain. Now is our time to point men away from the temporal and perishing, and to the eternal and enduring. Now is the time to ring out our message as with a trumpet all over the land.

Let not the cause be crippled because of the demands upon our charity. We must take care of the sufferers; but we must also give them the "good news" or gospel of the coming kingdom, now "nigh at hand," where no "flames devour or waves o'erflow."

Let us not slack our hands; but rather renew our consecration, and make new efforts and sacrifices for the truth's sake.

Now is our time for work! Now is our time to speak! Now is the time to proclaim by press, pulpit and every means, that men every where ought to repent, and give glory to God, and prepare to meet him in the impending judgment.

Will we do our duty? Will we improve the golden moments? Or will we be criminally neglectful? The times call for entire sanctification. Not a camp-meeting sanctification, or a mere state of feeling; but a working consecration; a self-denying consecration; a consecration full of life, power, and a will to do, to sacrifice and to suffer, if need be, in the best of causes. Let us "awake out of sleep; our salvation is nearer than when we believed."

REMOVAL.

There is considerable pressure for the removal of our office to some point enjoying better mail and railway facilities. We have very fair proposals from Jackson, Mich., and also from Chicago, Ill. Either would be good points. We shall do nothing rashly, but watch the leadings of Providence in the matter. We are ready to remain or remove wherever as may please the Master we serve. Meanwhile, we shall be glad to hear from any interested.

AUBURN, ILL.

To fulfil a promise made months ago, I last week attended the dedication at Auburn, Ill. The church in this section have built a fine chapel which will be a rallying point for time to come for all that region. All have done nobly; but the labors of Brn. Calkins, Parks and Williams deserve special mention. Owing to the bad weather which detained many friends from the feast, who intended to have helped liberally in paying for the house, a small debt remains upon it. But this will be removed by New Years. The meeting was attended by Brn. O. D. Gibson, Larkin Scott, Sr. Prescott, and Br. Mansfield, whose preaching proved refreshing and most acceptable. Sr. Mansfield did not arrive, and to the hour of going to press has not been heard from for one week. When she last wrote home she was sick at Castleton, Vt.

The rainy weather interfered with the attendance at our meeting; but we all felt to bless God for the much needed opening of the windows of heaven: for we were only a few, while the whole land was suffering from the drought. "All things work together for good to them that love God."

We congratulate Br. Calkins and his society upon the completion of their house of worship. We believe God will honor the sacrifice they have made.

When we left, we understood that Sr. Prescott, aided by Br. Calkins, would continue the meetings, perhaps through this week. W. L. H.

LATE!

The reason why our Western subscribers did not receive their papers at the usual time last week, was because the fire in Chicago destroyed all the magnificent mail arrangements of the Post Office in that city. The mail agents would not receive the bags upon the mail cars. Finally, yesterday, (the 16th) we succeeded in sending them to Detroit, from which office they will doubtless find their way to our readers in good time.

This week's paper may also be delayed by the lack of proper means for distribution of the Western mails.

ENTERPRISE!

Before the Chicago Tribune Building ceased burning, Mr. Joseph Medill had procured a new office, and it is the first of our exchanges in the city to reach our table. And we must say we like its tone since the fire, better than any voice we have heard from the Chicago press for months in the past. The Tribune crippled as it is for material to work with, is now the newspaper of the Northwest. We wish it success.

THE CHICAGO CHURCH.

This society were wonderfully spared in the late conflagration. But some families lost all but life; while a few met with partial losses. Among the sufferers are Brn. Foyen, Moses Smith, Pell, Andrews, Williams, A. T. Rice, besides others. The chapel was not injured, nor did the fire come near Br. Burr. The church is in good heart, and is doing its share to help not only the brethren, but all who need their aid.

Br. Burr will remain with them. The bond between this church and its pastor is a very strong one, though composed of many "tender ties," and will not be easily sundered

PLEDGES.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000), whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

H Hubbard, $5.00; S Pike, 10.00; B P Betts, 5.00; Thos Davidson, 5.00.

We have many interesting responses to our call for help. Owing to absence from home, at the dedication, and many pressing duties, we have not been able to prepare them for the press. Other matter is delayed by the same cause. W. L. H.

GOOD TIDINGS.

A new work of 425 pp., in large, clear type. Sent, post-paid, to any address, for $1, in cloth binding, or 50c. in paper covers. A discount of one-third to ministers and theological students; also to those who purchase one dozen or more copies.

The design of the book is to give an exposition of Bible truth, relating especially to the nature of man, the future dwelling-place of the righteous, the condition of the dead, the time of the Christian's reward, the destiny of the wicked, the personal coming of Christ, the signs of the times, and our proximity to the judgment. This is a book to read, a book to study, a book to lend, a book to sell. Send on your orders at once. We wish to scatter it by thousands. Let the friends of truth lend a vigorous hand to introduce it everywhere!

QUERIES.

Sr. McC. We shall by and by give every instance where the word spirit occurs in the original Scriptures: then we can answer their question better than now.

S. E. L. In 1 John 5: 1, read 'begotten, for born, and all will be plain. In John 13: 36 Christ undoubtedly referred to his death by the cross. Peter declared his willingness to follow the Savior, even at the expense of his life; but Jesus replied that his moral courage would fail, and he would deny the Lord he loved so well. Yet, in after years, when his work was done, he would "follow him," in that sense; as he afterwards more clearly predicted in ch. 21: 18. In ch. 13: 33, he refers to his departure out of the world unto the Father.

C. B. C. The Bible Union renders Job 19: 25, 26—

> "I know that my Redeemer lives And in after time will stand upon the earth; and after this my skin is destroyed, and without my flesh shall I see God."

In the margin they put—And from my flesh, shall I see," etc. In a note they say—without my flesh—i. e. separate from my mortal body. And from my flesh, as some translate; i. e. from my body recalled to life at the resurrection of the dead." They then add—"But the other version is more consistent with the preceeding member of the verse." We regard this as one of the far fetched efforts made by the Bible Union to get the doctrine of separate spirits into the Scriptures, by translations and by notes, some of which are referred to in an article in the Advent Quarterly for April 1871. If consistency with the context has any demands at all, the passage should evidently be translated with reference to the resurrection, and not the separate state; for Job has just referred to "the Redeemer standing upon the earth," which if it refers to Christ at all, must refer to his second advent and if to his second advent, then equally as evidently to the resurrection with which that event synchronises.

Wall-street has felt this keenly during the past two days, and, from appearances, will feel it more. The heavy fall in stocks may not be greater, as some claim, than the occasion calls for. There are, in either event, good grounds for beliving that the Chicago fire may prove the cause of a healthier state of things, however unpleasant the transition. It may, in other words, prick the bubble of inflated speculation, and so be followed by a decline greater than its intrinsic magnitude could ordinarily warrant. The puffed-up and "watered" condition of too many of our railroads is perfectly understood by well-informed and sagacious business men. Such a condition is necessarily unwholesome, and operates only for the profit of an interested minority. The public are mulcted by it in a way which, under a despotism, they might rebel against, and the cost of living has been artificially enhanced, by a system which infallibly tends to make the few very rich and the many very poor. Perhaps, we repeat, the Chicago fire is destined to give a heavy blow to inflation, and to restore prices to a natural condition. The indications in business circles, somewhat alarming as they undeniably for the moment are, favor such a hypothesis. Out of the nettle of financial danger, then, there is reason to hope, may be plucked the flower of financial safety. —N. Y. Times.

SCENES IN THE TRAGEDY.

Great Conflagrations of Ancient and Modern Times.

On Sunday, October 8, occurred the most destructive conflagration of modern times. A catastrophe which, from its extent, rapid progress and complete execution has seldom been equalled and never exceeded.

At 9 35 o'clock on Sunday evening the alarm peal fell upon the ears of the people. The number of the box from which the signal was turned showed the fire to be in a row of two story wooden tenements on DeKoven between Twelfth and Jefferson streets. As soon as the alarm was given, the people, being excited by the fire of the previous night, and attracted by the illumination, rushed at once to the scene, and within ten minutes there was a perfect throng of people about the fire. The fire department was promptly on hand, but did no good. The buildings being of wood, and dry as tinder, the flames swept with the rapidity of the wind, which was blowing a perfect gale. Indeed, so swift did they march that a person could scarcely keep up with them while walking. The fire crossed the river diagonally, fifteen blocks distant, at Adams street, about midnight, burning the bridges at Adams, Lake, Taylor, and Van Buren streets. The bridges at Randolph and Madison sts. were saved, the fire at the latter place having sheered off and left a whole block untouched.

At the time the fire crossed the river, another broke out north of Ohio street and east of North State street, probably from incendiarism, some distance from where the fire was raging, and both fires were sped by the wind in a northwesterly direction, burning the whole business portion of the South Side and going over to the North Side destroying everything before it, and ending nearly seven miles from where it originated.

At intervals during the progress of the fire flames would break out in portions of the city hitherto untouched, and these it is now quite certain were the results of incendiarism. At eight o'clock on Monday morning a fire of this description broke out in the Jones school nearly half a mile from the nearest limit of the fire, on the corner of Clark and Harrison streets. This fire burned with much greater ferocity if possible, than the other destroying that portion of the South Side, near the lake, to the south of the city, taking the residences on Michigan avenue, Wabash avenue and buildings on several streets parallel to these that had been left untouched by the fire which passed over the city during the night, and completing the devastation on the South side, from Harrison street to the Chicago river, with the exception of one block of buildings on Market street from Randolph to Lake streets which is occupied by Fuller, Finch & Fuller, druggists, a flour commission house, a hide and leather store and a wholesale grocery.

The only other building standing in the burned districts, than those already mentioned, are the Illinois Central Elevator, at the junction of the Chicago river and the lake, a storestore house, and one large residence on the North side, occupying a full square, the latter of which with all its surrounding shrubbery bears no evidence of the devastating element, and it is said that but few of the trees were even scorched by the flames.

At one time it was thought the Tribune building would remain untouched. Gangs of men worked on the roof and at the basement throwing off cinders, and keeping the exposed parts deluged with water, until the danger was thought to be past. The men went into the building to obtain some sleep, and while there a change of the wind brought back the fire, and it was with great difficulty the men escaped before the building was wrapped in flames.

Many incendiaries have been caught, and in each case instant death has been their punishment. Every block is guarded at night by three men on each street and three men in the alley. One of the guards of the alley discovered an incendiary in the act of applying fire to a barn, and in the morning a dead body was carried out of the alley. On Tuesday at 6 p. m. a fire was started by an incendiary at the corner of Thirty-first and State streets. The mode of procedure was as follows: A piece of rope a foot long, unraveled and saturated with kerosene, the clapboard of the house pulled off, the rope thrust in and the match applied. This fire was timely discovered and extinguished, the incendiary was caught, and the last heard of him was that he was in the hands of an excited crowd, and was probably summarily dealt with. There have been about seventy five persons shot and hung for incendiarism.

The expressmen simply plundered the people who wished their household goods removed, and charged from $20 to $50 or even more for removing a load of goods to a place of safety. Many people gave away all the money they had to expressmen to have a few articles of their household goods removed but a short distance, and even then many of the goods were destroyed after being taken to a place of supposed safety. Thousands of persons have lost everything they had in the world with the exception of what clothing they had on their backs, and were left without a cent in their pockets. The thousands of families driven from their homes in the North Division, sought safety mostly on the vacant grounds along the North Branch, south of the rolling mills. One or two hundred acres were covered with furniture and bedding, clinging to which were thousands of homeless, shivering and hungry women and children, who laid out in the rain all night. Their condition is so pitiable as to draw tears.

About six square miles were burned over, and the loss is variously reported from $250,000,000 to $350,000,000. About 14,000 houses were destroyed. Chicago is under martial law, and the war department is doing all in its power to alleviate the sufferings of its destitute inhabitants. Sufficient rations have been issued, together with supplies contributed from various sources, to insure the people from want, at least in the way of food. Many tents are being distributed, but intense suffering prevails from the want of shelter and sufficient clothing.

It is thought the Insurance companies collectively will pay about 50 per cent. of their losses. The Chicago and Cleveland companies are reported insolvent, together with many companies in the State of New York. But all of the larger companies will pay their losses to the last dollar, which will make the aggregate about 50 per cent. The following is a list of elevators burned: Munger and Armour's, Galena, Illinois Central, A. Hiram Wheeler's, National, Vincent, Nelson & Co's. The following are standing and unharmed: Illinois Central, B, Flint, Thompson's and the two belonging to Munn and Scott, the two owned by Armour, Dole & Co., the Burlington, the old Iowa and Illinois River. The total amount of grain destroyed in the five elevators burned is over 1,600,000 bushels. Amount in store in the remaining elevators is about 5,000,000 bushels

There were eighty-nine newspapers destroyed, including dailies, weeklies and monthlies. At first view it was supposed that the two eight cylinder presses of the Tribune Company were unharmed to any serious extent, but a closer examination shows that one is nearly ruined, while the other can be repaired and made as good as new. Men have been put at work on the Tribune building, and it will be rebuilt as soon as possible, as nearly, a fac simile of the building destroyed as possible, only made more fire proof, if possible.

Chicago Oct. 13. The dawn of each succeeding day brings brighter prospects for this smitten city, and the feeling of hope and faith which springs up in the hearts of the energetic men who have made Chicago what it was, is strengthened every hour. Twenty-two of the twenty-four columns of this morning's Tribune are filled with advertisements of business men who have already secured new locations, and are either now ready or will be in a few days to commence business. Builders are overwhelmed with applications to put up new houses for business purposes. One contractor had last night sixteen contracts for substantial structures to be erected at once.

The Tribune's commercial article says there is still but little doing in produce circles, but our commission merchants and grain dealers are hard at work preparing to open out again on a full scale. Just as soon as the pecuniary arrangements will permit, which will be in a day or two, probably by the first of next week, many of them are helping to distribute food and clothing to the destitute. The remainder are filling up offices in the vicinity of the temporary trade rooms of fifty-one and fifty-three Canal street, where the Board will do business till the Chamber of Commerce can be built.

Some grain is moving out. Four charters were reported to-day. It is expected that grain will be moved out much more rapidly toward Monday, as the banks will be able to make advances by that time.

So far none but the bank vaults have been found at all injured. The Union National Bank vaults, which were at first reported blown up, are in a perfect condition, so far as the contents are concerned. The safes of the Fidelity Safe Deposit Company, L. B. Bryan & Co, were found open, and found to have no heat in them, and every dollar of the millions on deposit there is safe. The Company have established an office in the ruins, and invite the citizens to bring their money and other valuables there and deposit them free of charge until they can get better accommodations.

The savings banks of the city announce that they will at once pay in full all depositors whose deposits do not exceed $20, and not less than $20 to every depositor whose balance is more than that sum. The limit in the case of the later class of depositors is for the purpose of preventing a run by those who do not stop to consider the demoralizing effect of such an amount.

The Supervisors of Cook county met Oct. 12, and unanimously passed a resolution to rebuild the court house at once.

The agents of the Etna Insurance Company are now adjusting and paying their losses, which they say will not exceed two and a half or three million of dollars

A noticeable fact, and one of immense importance in the rebuilding of the city, is the almost perfect condition in which the fire has left the Nicolson pavement. The damage is so trifling as not to be worthy of mention. Miles of pavement on the North side are almost untouched and perfectly free of debris, and even in the South division, where both sides of the streets were lined with lofty brick and stone buildings, there is scarcely a point where a carriage may not be driven through the streets.

Evidence is accumulating hourly that the loss of life is greater than has been estimated in the dispatches, and the great number of persons still searching for the missing members of their families confirm these statements. There are many of the missing ones quartered at the relief headquarters, at the Congregational church on Washington street.

The amount of Insurance in companies which are likely to pay at par, is $26,411,500 There are a few other companies which, it is probable, will pay from 25 to 50 per cent, of their losses.

Fires Elsewhere.

MICHIGAN.

The past week will long be remembered by the people of the Northwestern States. Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan have suffered from the ravages of fire to an extent unprecedented in a time of peace. Large tracts of land have been burned over in Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, destroying cities, towns, villages, farm houses, forests, and crops. Hundreds of human beings have perished in the flames, and the property destroyed may be reckoned by millions, reducing to poverty thousands of opulent and contented families, and indirectly affecting every interest and every person in the United States.

In fact the daily papers of the week past have recorded nothing but disaster.

Michigan has suffered severely; entire counties have been consumed. No less than six villages have been destroyed in a single county, and many of its inhabitants perished in the flames and from exposure.

On the same Sunday night on which Chicago was burned, a strong wind commenced to blow over Huron county, passing at different hours in somewhat different directions, but always tending out toward the lake at the east. By ten o'clock in the evening it was blowing very hard and by midnight it was a gale, rousing the slumbering fires in the forests into tremendous fury and bringing destruction upon the farms and the lake settlements.

The warning of imminent danger was first brought to the shore by men, women and children fleeing from the interior towards the the lakes and the fires shortly after burst on some of the settlements themselves. On that night the town of Sand Beach was totally burned. The inhabitants were driven out and many sought refuge in the lake, throwing the water over themselves to protect their bodies and faces from the intense heat occasioned by the burning of a great number of buildings near the shore. This town is almost totally ruined, its milling interest destroyed, and its population scattered far and wide. A number of its people are now, however, at Port Huron and other points on the shore

On the same night Forestville was [illegible]tirely burned.

On Monday night the fires attacked other settlements on the shore. Huron City, a place of quite a population and a good business point, was completely destroyed with the exception of four buildings. New River was about one half burned.

Tyre, a little settlement away from the lake has been utterly destroyed. Verona Mills is burned, as is also a hamlet, where a gentleman named Frank Boskowski resided and did business.

The whole business portion of Manistee was burned Sunday night, the 8th instant, including six saw mills, all the stores, shops, offices, warehouses, a vessel lying at the dock, and a large number of dwellings, in all about 290 buildings. From this it would seem that a large number of mills around the Lake for a distance of six miles are safe. The loss is estimated at $1,200,000.

Fifteen hundred persons have been by this calamity turned into the streets homeless, and many of them without a change of clothing.

WISCONSIN.

Green Bay, Oct. 10, 9 p. m.—The report of the burning of Williamson's mills is fully confirmed. Fifty lives are lost, and ten bodies are badly burned, and only three uninjured, one of whom is in the city.

At Pensaukee between twelve and fifteen barns and dwellings on the Little River road were burned. The farmers in that section have suffered generally in the loss of fences and hay, and many of them have been burned out wholly.

Green Bay, Oct. 11.—On Sunday night about nine o'clock, a fire broke out in the south part of the Belgian settlement at Brussels, Door county, destroying 180 houses, and leaving nothing of the large and flourishing settlement but five houses. Nine persons are missing; they are supposed to have perished. This morning two hundred people breakfasted on four loaves of bread.

Houseless, they camp on their land, and seem struck dumb by the great losses. Their houses, barns, implements of farming, household furniture, and cattle, are burned and destroyed. The roads are filled with carcasses of horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, dying from the smoke and heat.

The inhabitants, during the conflagration, only saved their lives by throwing themselves upon the ground and covering their heads. The most pitiable state of things exists all through the district visited by the fire, and hunger and starvation are staring the wretched inhabitants in the face.

The steamer Union has just arrived from Peshtigo with a number of burned and otherwise injured survivors of the fire of Sunday night, and the steamer St. Jo, it is reported, will be in soon with one hundred more. The Dunlap House, at Marienette, is full of the worst cases of burned people, who arrived at that place in wagons yesterday and to-day.

Fond du Lac, Oct. 11.—The Fond du Lac people are contributing money, food and clothing liberally to the sufferers. The reports from the northern districts and Green Bay are hourly worse. The accounts of the suffering is unparalleled. It is thought the least estimate will not be less than five hundred deaths by burning and drowning. Clothes, food and money are needed there.

A correspondent writes from Menominee, Oct. 9: The village of Peshtigo is burnt to the ground, and from 1,000 to 1,500 persons are out of homes and employment. The fire was seen last night first at half-past eight, and at ten p. m. every building was on fire, together with the Great Peshtigo Manufacturing Co.'s pail and tub factory. The wind came from the southwest, and was heard coming an hour before it burst upon the town, and many were awakened from sleep with barely time to hasten to the river and sink themselves in the water to save their lives. No mortal man could live in such a heat. The flames rolled mountains high and swept every building, stable and fence, and left a scene most horrible to behold. Mr. J. J. Tauer nearly perished in saving his family, and lost three in the flames, and Mr. Beebe's family, one child; and some one took this child to the river. The whole town ran for the river, hanging on to logs and brooms, and had frequently to duck their heads to save their lives. As many as seventy five are are supposed to have been burned to death. Children and mothers and husbands and wives are separated by the fire king, never to meet again. The building of the Peshtigo Manufacturing Company was lost with all the stock and machinery and stores and warehouses, and the Peshtigo House, all the stores, and property to the amount of five or six millions. I just hear of the death of seventy-five persons, who could get to no water, and were strangled and burnt to death. A small village twelve miles from here, of 18 persons, perished at Burch Creek, and it is sickening to see the sufferers come with eyes [illegible] and fearfully maimed, some for life. Many children were lost wandering from their homes to the river. The whole west coast is on fire from Green Bay to Menominee. Other towns are threatened—Depere, Wrightstown and Fort Howard. Fires are raging in and around them, and God knows when all this will end.

Later advices show that matters are in a much worse condition than shown in the above. It is thought at least 1,500 have perished from the flames and exposure.

Scenes in the Tragedy.

The future historian of the great fire of Chicago will have as thrilling a theme as the Plague of London. Already through the smoke of the yet smouldering conflagration, we begin to catch glimpses of the many episodes of individual suffering or daring that hightened the picturesque horrors of this heavy calamity. Not the least impressive of these is the weired picture of that old woman, familiar by this time to the entire country, who, crazed with terror, was seen to rush through the burning streets, singing a Mother Goose melody. Another observer saw from the tower of the Court-house, a picture of heart-rending agony. The janitor of a large five story building had barely time to escape to the roof with his wife and three small children. There these unfortunates found themselves cut off from all chance or hope of rescue. On all sides moved toward them the devouring flames, and so one by one the members of this hapless little household lay down and died.

In the burning of the Court-house was repeated one of the most painful incidents of the fate of the Paris Commune. The Hotel de Ville was then consumed, and with it a number of prisoners confined in its cells. So with the Chicago Court-house. The jailor believed it to be fire-proof, and refused to let out his prisoners, although an excited crowd clamored for their release, and even threatened him with death. He fled, and within half an hour the building was in flames, and the seventy convicts confined in it perished by the most hideous of deaths. Their fate seems terrible enough, and yet had they been released they might have agravated the destruction and anarchy. As it was, fiends in human shape were not wanting in the midst of this awful ruin to ply the torch and to add robbery and murder to the woes of this stricken people. The significant dispatch relating that several of these wretches had been shot or hung at once, "as was most convenient," shows the temper in which their marauding was regarded. Still more tragic was the fate of another scoundrel, who attempted to despoil the cashier of a bank as he was emerging with his arms full of bonds and bills. Having prostrated the official with a blow, he was securing the plunder, when an opportune policeman arrested him. The villain shot his captor, and darted into the crowd. But the bystanders fell upon him furiously, and without waiting for even the summary practice of the lamp-post, tore him, it is said, literally limb from limb.

These and kindred scenes must have been the veriest commonplaces all through that appalling Monday night. Doubtless the full horrors of the tragedy will never be accurately known, as it is almost certain that for a long time to come they will not be adequately depicted, even if they are entirely realized. Calamities of this frightful magnitude require the historical perspective to bring out their true proportions. But some day another Defoe will weave from the incidents of that night's work such a story as shall make another generation shudder and weep.—N. Y. Times.

We since learn that the prisoners were not burned.—ED.

The Great Conflagrations of Ancient and Modern Times.

In ancient warfare the usual custom of the conquerors of a city was to put the people to the sword, and destroy the city by fire. The burning of Athens, Persopolis, Carthage, Alexandria and Rome are the most prominent examples. Athens was burned by the Persians on the invasion of Xerxes. The city of Persopolis was destroyed by Alexander the Great, in revenge for the burning of Athens. It was the richest city in the Persian empire, and was so completely destroyed that naught remains of her but the famed forty pillars to to attest her former greatness. A century later occurred the conflagrations that swept Carthage into oblivion. It was destroyed by the order of the Roman Senate. The fire lasted twenty-three days.

In time Rome herself was burned The fire raged for six days and seven nights, and out of fourteen quarters only three escaped. The origin of the calamity is involved in doubt.

Constantinople has suffered most of all places from fire. The houses are so closely packed, and the means of extinguishing fire have been so inadequate, that a conflagration once under way could scarcely fail to destroy the whole city, a catastrophe which has occurred several times in its history.

The great fire of London broke out at one o'clock on Sunday morning, Sept. 2, 1666, at the house of a baker in Pudding Lane, Fish Street Hill. It is not agreed by historians whether the fire originated from accident, or design. It was stopped by blowing up several houses with gunpowder. 13,200 dwelling external capital must make it up. Wall-street has felt this keenly during the past two days, and, from appearances, will feel it more. The heavy fall in stocks may not be greater, as some claim, than the occasion calls for. There are, in either event, good grounds for beliving that the Chicago fire may prove the cause of a healthier state of things, however unpleasant the transition. It may, in other words, prick the bubble of inflated speculation, and so be followed by a decline greater than its intrinsic magnitude could ordinarily warrant. The puffed-up and "watered" condition of too many of our railroads is perfectly understood by well-informed and sagacious business men. Such a condition is necessarily unwholesome, and operates only for the profit of an interested minority. The public are mulcted by it in a way which, under a despotism, they might rebel against, and the cost of living has been artificially enhanced, by a system which infallibly tends to make the few very rich and the many very poor. Perhaps, we repeat, the Chicago fire is destined to give a heavy blow to inflation, and to restore prices to a natural condition. The indications in business circles, somewhat alarming as they undeniably for the moment are, favor such a hypothesis. Out of the nettle of financial danger, then, there is reason to hope, may be plucked the flower of financial safety. —N. Y. Times.

SCENES IN THE TRAGEDY.

Great Conflagrations of Ancient and Modern Times.

On Sunday, October 8, occurred the most destructive conflagration of modern times. A catastrophe which, from its extent, rapid progress and complete execution has seldom been equalled and never exceeded.

At 9:35 o'clock on Sunday evening the alarm peal fell upon the ears of the people. The number of the box from which the signal was turned showed the fire to be in a row of two story wooden tenements on DeKoven between Twelfth and Jefferson streets. As soon as the alarm was given, the people, being excited by the fire of the previous night, and attracted by the illumination, rushed at once to the scene, and within ten minutes there was a perfect throng of people about the fire. The fire department was promptly on hand, but did no good. The buildings being of wood, and dry as tinder, the flames swept with the rapidity of the wind, which was blowing a perfect gale. Indeed, so swift did they march that a person could scarcely keep up with them while walking. The fire crossed the river diagonally, fifteen blocks distant, at Adams street, about midnight, burning the bridges at Adams, Lake, Taylor, and Van Buren streets. The bridges at Randolph and Madison sts. were saved, the fire at the latter place having sheered off and left a whole block untouched.

At the time the fire crossed the river, another broke out north of Ohio street and east of North State street, probably from incendiarism, some distance from where the fire was raging, and both fires were sped by the wind in a northwesterly direction, burning the whole business portion of the South Side and going over to the North Side destroying everything before it, and ending nearly seven miles from where it originated.

At intervals during the progress of the fire flames would break out in portions of the city hitherto untouched, and these it is now quite certain were the results of incendiarism. At eight o'clock on Monday morning a fire of this description broke out in the Jones school nearly half a mile from the nearest limit of the fire, on the corner of Clark and Harrison streets. This fire burned with much greater ferocity if possible, than the other destroying that portion of the South Side, near the lake, to the south of the city, taking the residences on Michigan avenue, Wabash avenue and buildings on several streets parallel to these that had been left untouched by the fire which passed over the city during the night, and completing the devastation on the South side, from Harrison street to the Chicago river, with the exception of one block of buildings on Market street from Randolph to Lake streets which is occupied by Fuller, Finch & Fuller, druggists, a flour commission house, a hide and leather store and a wholesale grocery.

The only other building standing in the burned districts, than those already mentioned, are the Illinois Central Elevator, at the junction of the Chicago river and the lake, a stovestore house, and one large residence on the North side, occupying a full square, the latter of which with all its surrounding shrubbery bears no evidence of the devastating element, and it is said that but few of the trees were even scorched by the flames.

At one time it was thought the Tribune building would remain untouched. Gangs of men worked on the roof and at the basement throwing off cinders, and keeping the exposed parts deluged with water, until the danger was thought to be past. The men went into the building to obtain some sleep, and while there a change of the wind brought back the fire, and it was with great difficulty the men escaped before the building was wrapped in flames.

Many incendiaries have been caught, and in each case instant death has been their punishment. Every block is guarded at night by three men on each street and three men in the alley. One of the guards of the alley discovered an incendiary in the act of applying fire to a barn, and in the morning a dead body was carried out of the alley. On Tuesday at 6 p. m. a fire was started by an incendiary at the corner of Thirty-first and State streets. The mode of procedure was as follows: A piece of rope a foot long, unraveled and saturated with kerosene, the clapboard of the house pulled off, the rope thrust in and the match applied. This fire was timely discovered and extinguished, the incendiary was caught, and the last heard of him was that he was in the hands of an excited crowd, and was probably summarily dealt with. There have been about seventy five persons shot and hung for incendiarism.

The expressmen simply plundered the people who wished their household goods removed, and charged from $20 to $50 or even more for removing a load of goods to a place of safety. Many people gave away all the money they had to expressmen to have a few articles of their household goods removed but a short distance, and even then many of the goods were destroyed after being taken to a place of supposed safety. Thousands of persons have lost everything they had in the world with the exception of what clothing they had on their backs, and were left without a cent in their pockets. The thousands of families driven from their homes in the North Division, sought safety mostly on the vacant grounds along the North Branch, south of the rolling mills. One or two hundred acres were covered with furniture and bedding, clinging to which were thousands of homeless, shivering and hungry women and children, who laid out in the rain all night. Their condition is so pitiable as to draw tears.

About six square miles were burned over, and the loss is variously reported from $250,000,000 to $350,000,000. About 14,000 houses were destroyed. Chicago is under martial law, and the war department is doing all in its power to alleviate the sufferings of its destitute inhabitants. Sufficient rations have been issued, together with supplies contributed from various sources, to insure the people from want, at least in the way of food. Many tents are being distributed, but intense suffering prevails from the want of shelter and sufficient clothing.

It is thought the Insurance companies collectively will pay about 50 per cent. of their losses. The Chicago and Cleveland companies are reported insolvent, together with many companies in the State of New York. But all of the larger companies will pay their losses to the last dollar, which will make the aggregate about 50 per cent. The following is a list of elevators burned: Munger and Armour's, Galena, Illinois Central, A, Hiram Wheeler's, National, Vincent, Nelson & Co's. The following are standing and unharmed: Illinois Central, B, Flint, Thompson's and the two belonging to Munn and Scott, the two owned by Armour, Dole & Co., the Burlington, the old Iowa and Illinois River. The total amount of grain destroyed in the five elevators burned is over 1,600,000 bushels. Amount in-store in the remaining elevators is about 5,000,000 bushels.

There were eighty-nine newspapers destroyed, including dailies, weeklies and monthlies. At first view it was supposed that the two eight cylinder presses of the Tribune Company were unharmed to any serious extent, but a closer examination shows that one is nearly ruined, while the other can be repaired and made as good as new. Men have been put at work on the Tribune building, and it will be rebuilt as soon as possible, as nearly a fac simile of the building destroyed as possible, only made more fire proof, if possible.

Chicago Oct. 13. The dawn of each succeeding day brings brighter prospects for this smitten city, and the feeling of hope and faith which springs up in the hearts of the energetic men who have made Chicago what it was, is strengthened every hour. Twenty-two of the twenty-four columns of this morning's Tribune are filled with advertisements of business men who have already secured new locations, and are either now ready or will be in a few days to commence business. Builders are overwhelmed with applications to put up new houses for business purposes. One contractor had last night sixteen contracts for substantial structures to be started at once.

The Tribune's commercial article says there is still but little doing in produce circles, but our commission merchants and grain dealers are hard at work preparing to open out again on a full scale. Just as soon as the pecuniary arrangements will permit, which will be in a day or two, probably by the first of next week, many of them are helping to distribute food and clothing to the destitute. The remainder are filling up offices in the vicinity of the temporary trade rooms of fifty one and fifty-three Canal street, where the Board will do business till the Chamber of Commerce can be built.

Some grain is moving out. Four charters were reported to-day. It is expected that grain will be moved out much more rapidly toward Monday, as the banks will be able to make advances by that time.

So far none but the bank vaults have been found at all injured. The Union National Bank vaults, which were at first reported blown up, are in a perfect condition, so far as the contents are concerned. The safes of the Fidelity Safe Deposit Company, L. B. Bryan & Co, were found open, and found to have no heat in them, and every dollar of the millions on deposit there is safe. The Company have established an office in the ruins, and invite the citizens to bring their money and other valuables there and deposit them free of charge until they can get better accommodations.

The savings banks of the city announce that they will at once pay in full all depositors whose deposits do not exceed $20, and not less than $20 to every depositor whose balance is more than that sum. The limit in the case of the later class of depositors is for the purpose of preventing a run by those who do not stop to consider the demoralizing effect of such an amount.

The Supervisors of Cook county met Oct. 13, and unanimously passed a resolution to rebuild the court house at once.

The agents of the Etna insurance Company are now adjusting and paying their losses, which they say will not exceed two and a half or three million of dollars.

A noticeable fact, and one of immense importance in the rebuilding of the city, is the almost perfect condition in which the fire has left the Nicolson pavement. The damage is so trifling as not to be worthy of mention. Miles of pavement on the North side are almost untouched and perfectly free of debris, and even in the South division, where both sides of the streets were lined with lofty brick and stone buildings, there is scarcely a point where a carriage may not be driven through the streets.

Evidence is accumulating hourly that the loss of life is greater than has been estimated in the dispatches, and the great number of persons still searching for the missing members of their families confirm these statements. There are many of the missing ones quartered at the relief headquarters, at the Congregational church on Washington street.

The amount of Insurance in companies which are likely to pay at par, is $36,411,500. There are a few other companies which, it is probable, will pay from 25 to 50 per cent, of their losses.

Another observer saw from the tower of the Court-house, a picture of heart-rending agony. The janitor of a large five story building had barely time to escape to the roof with his wife and three small children. There these unfortunates found themselves cut off from all chance or hope of rescue. On all sides moved toward them the devouring flames, and so one by one the members of this hapless little household lay down and died.

In the burning of the Court-house was repeated one of the most painful incidents of the fate of the Paris Commune. The Hotel de Ville was then consumed, and with it a number of prisoners confined in its cells. So with the Chicago Court-house. The jailor believed it to be fire-proof, and refused to let out his prisoners, although an excited crowd clamored for their release, and even threatened him with death. He fled, and within half an hour the building was in flames, and the seventy convicts confined in it perished by the most hideous of deaths. Their fate seems terrible enough, and yet had they been released they might have agravated the destruction and anarchy. As it was, fiends in human shape were not wanting in the midst of this awful ruin to ply the torch and to add robbery and murder to the woes of this stricken people. The significant dispatch relating that several of these wretches had been shot or hung at once, "as was most convenient," shows the temper in which their marauding was regarded. Still more tragic was the fate of another scoundrel, who attempted to despoil the cashier of a bank as he was emerging with his arms full of bonds and bills. Having prostrated the official with a blow, he was securing the plunder, when an opportune policeman arrested him. The villain shot his captor, and darted into the crowd. But the bystanders fell upon him furiously, and without waiting for even the summary practice of the lamp-post, tore him, it is said, literally limb from limb.

These and kindred scenes must have been the verisest commonplaces all through that appalling Monday night. Doubtless the full horrors of the tragedy will never be accurately known, as it is almost certain that for a long time to come they will not be adequately depicted, even if they are entirely realized. Calamities of this frightful magnitude require the historical perspective to bring out their true proportions. But some day another Defoe will weave from the incidents of that night's work such a story as shall make another generation shudder and weep.—N. Y. Times.

We since learn that the prisoners were not burned.—Ed.

The Great Conflagrations of Ancient and Modern Times.

In ancient warfare the usual custom of the conquerors of a city was to put the people to the sword, and destroy the city by fire. The burning of Athens, Persopolis, Carthage, Alexandria and Rome are the most prominent examples. Athens was burned by the Persians on the invasion of Xerxes. The city of Persopolis was destroyed by Alexander the Great, in revenge for the burning of Athens. It was the richest city in the Persian empire, and was so completely destroyed that naught remains of her but the famed forty pillars to to attest her former greatness. A century later occurred the conflagrations that swept Carthage into oblivion. It was destroyed by the order of the Roman Senate. The fire lasted twenty-three days.

In time Rome herself was burned. The fire raged for six days and seven nights, and out of fourteen quarters only three escaped. The origin of the calamity is involved in doubt.

Constantinople has suffered most of all places from fire. The houses are so closely packed, and the means of extinguishing fire have been so inadequate, that a conflagration once under way could scarcely fail to destroy the whole city, a catastrophe which has occurred several times in its history.

The great fire of London broke out at one o'clock on Sunday morning, Sept. 2, 1666, at the house of a baker in Pudding Lane, Fish Street Hill. It is not agreed by historians whether the fire originated from accident, or design. It was stopped by blowing up several houses with gunpowder. 13,200 dwelling

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

IN ARKANSAS.

MONDAY, Sept. 25. We enjoyed the hospitalities, while in town, of Mr. Marcus Wycough. His family were Southern Methodists, and very excellent people. They invited Br. Rosebraugh and myself to make their home our home, and took our beasts, also, to their stable. They have our sincere thanks. Some of the family expressed satisfaction in hearing the preaching.

We returned at noon, and I spoke at the chapel in Ashley, to a crowd. They had not heard before on the Advent doctrine. The interest was intense. Fathers, mothers and children, all crowded to hear. No sacrifice was spared to hear the gospel of the kingdom. One came to me at the close, asking to go with us, and others expressed a desire to unite with those in this faith of the Lord's coming.

TUESDAY, Sept. 26. I visited the "Blowing Cave," in Ashley, Independence Co. There are several of these caves in this county; but I had time to visit only one, a few miles west of Br. Rosebraugh's home. We clambered up the mountain side, Laura Rosebaugh leading the way, and soon came to the mouth of the cave. It was one hundred feet wide, and the arch about seventy-five feet high. It formed a beautiful hall, that would hold an encamped army. Stalactites hung in rich profusion from the roof, and shone like diamonds in the light of our torches. We passed into the interior, which is open, and mostly convenient for walking. A few places were low, and we had to stoop. It is about half a mile in length. It is the most beautiful cave I have ever visited.

At night I spoke on the "Image" of Dan. ch. 2. The crowd had increased, and the interest likewise, if possible. At the close, we received applications for baptism, and membership in the new church.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 25. At an early hour, got up the mules, and rode three miles to Polk's Canon, for baptism. Where a goodly company gathered. The morning was without a cloud. God was with us at the water's side, and gave his blessing upon the ordinance of immersion into Christ. As Laura came out of the water, her parents, Br. and Sr. Rosebraugh, embraced and kissed their dear child, given to them again, as it were, in the Lord, and now on her way to the kingdom. How blessed to see our children walking in the truth. We hastened back, and at noon the people gathered at Br. R's, house, when I spoke on the Lord's supper, and also of church organization, and the duties of the members. I then organized the church, after which Eld. Rosebraugh was chosen pastor, and Br. J. P. Williams was ordained elder. We then partook of the Lord's supper. We gathered about the table and enjoyed a season of deep interest. It was the first time they had ever seen the company sit around the table, but they thought it was the Bible way, and a way much to be preferred. This service concluded, Eld. R. took the yellow mule, and his wife the white pony, and I took the "old white Rock," as he is called, and we drove through the timber, and over the hills, to Ruddell, about nine miles. We were late, and had to make a "forced march" but got to the appointment just in time. We found a half finished log chapel, which was about as much protection as "out of doors." The night wind was cold, and the draft through the building was uncomfortable. I spoke on the prophecies relating to the first advent. The people are for the truth. At the close we were kindly entertained by Wm. M. Nelson. I was quite chilled through; but was soon made comfortable on arriving at Br. N's. He is a Methodist, but has read, and heard of the advent doctrine enough to make him feel an interest in the subject.

This has been a hard day's work, and I feel some fatigued. But I enjoy the best of health, and good cheer. praise God!

THURSDAY, Sept. 28. Rode four miles and preached in the Head Stream log school house, good hearing, and on my return a church is to be organized here. Here we enjoyed the hospitality of Br Albert Shaw—formerly a three months subscriber to THE TIMES, who now wants it as long as he lives. He with his devoted wife, is fully in the faith. At night returned to the log chapel in the woods, and spoke on the nearness of Christ's coming. It was still cold, but had a hearing and hope for fruits. At the close rode back to Br. Shaw's, where we had comfortable quarters in his log cabin. There were eleven of us in all, including children; and we had the best of country accommodations for us. Such hospitality is given with hearty good will, and the people only wish they could do better, while they enjoy the society of their visitors exceedingly. It is a great treat to them.

FRIDAY, Sept. 29. Rode into Batesville for my mail, and got nothing, save a copy of THE TIMES. I am ten days from home, as to mail, and then it is not certain. I got a TIMES two weeks old, and am glad of that. This p. m. I go into the country to continue my work.

From Theria B Weaver, North Dana, Mass.

My heart has been greatly cheered by reading THE TIMES, and more especially the last two papers, and the sermon by Br. Preston upon faith. I do not know when I have read anything that did me more good. I felt that it was written expressly for me. I am glad God has dear ones that can write to cheer and strengthen the weary, tired, tempted, sick and suffering ones, as they lie upon their beds of pain and distress, wearing their lives out in pain and weariness. God bless the dear ones that contribute to its columns.

And this morning, as I lie here in my bed, unable to be taken from it at all, my heart has been greatly cheered by reading the letters and articles. Tears of joy and sorrow were shed by poor me. Tears of joy, to know we are so near home as signs seem now to show; tears of deep sorrow for those who have been called to part with loved ones. But although it may be sad and heart-rending to see the dear ones laid beneath the cold ground; yet they will live again more beautiful than ever before, in the new earth. Although now the hands are folded on the pulseless heart, and the loving eyes are closed, and the sweet voice hushed in the silence and stillness of death; and you miss their sweet words of love and hope, and comfort; yet the trumpet's voice will wake them. "I am the resurrection and the life," says Jesus. And the voice of the archangel and the trump of God will soon be heard," arousing the nations, awaking the dead from their cold, dusty pillows.

My heart rejoices in God my Savior, and I pray God to hasten the glad day when no more death shall be known, no more weary painful days and nights; no more tired aching bodies; O, blessed Savior, we long to see thy face! to praise thee, and bless thee, and adore thee, for that goodness and love thou hast shown us all the days of our weary pilgrimage. Come and heal the sick! We long to feel thy power, thy healing touch, when those lifeless feet and weary limbs shall be made able to walk. Who can but rejoice at Jesus' promise to "come quickly?"

From John Scarce, Mt. Ayer, Iona.

The Advent views are entirely new in this section; were never preached here until last August, when Br. Dugger and McClure held a ten days meeting, which resulted in the organization of an Advent-Christian church, of a good element. From the interest to hear, and the prospect before us, we expect shortly to see a large church built up in this community. I am doing what I can to spread the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom which God has promised to them that love him. Yes, now I believe that the kingdom, instead of being the church, is the promised inher[illegible]ance, and is yet future, to be given t[illegible] God's people when Christ comes the [illegible]ond time. From E Alex[illegible]hiladelphia Pa.

It may be [illegible]uraging to hear of the work going on under the auspices of Br. John G. Hook. The new church was organized by him, and consisted of forty-three members. At the present time a large number are worshiping under a tent, which was pitched on Aug 28. at Seventeenth and Spring Sts. Meetings are held every evening, and also each afternoon. Much interest is manifested, and many have been converted. Five have already been baptized and others are ready for that solemn ordinance. On Saturday evenings a Christian temperance meeting is held, in which Christ is set forth as the only refuge for the poor inebriate; and it has been blessed to the conversion of one, who for many years was a confirmed drunkard, and was also, one of the higher class of mediums amongst the Spiritists.

His case is a remarkable one, and worthy of particular notice. For a long term of years, he practised among the sick as a healing medium; and yet according to his own testimony, could never treat the Bible as only a history, or deny the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. It seemed as if the Spirit of God always followed him, until he was led to the temperance meeting, and the following Sunday morning to hear Br. Hook preach. It seemed to him that he could hear a voice saying to him during the sermon, "Child come home!" and without a moment's hesitation he replied, "I will!" and the work was done. He promises to be a useful member of the church of Christ; and instead of drinking daily, spending his money that way, he has consecrated all that he has to the service of his blessed Master.

There has been also converted, a few months ago, under the labors of Br. Hook in this city, an infidel, who is now preaching the word in the highways and hedges, and compelling men to come in to the gospel feast. The labors of God's faithful servant have indeed been blessed, and the work is still progressing. No doubt many will be added to the church of such as shall be saved.

The work of striving to save the perishing is not all concentrated in one place, but scattered around in all directions, on the open lot, down by the wharf, at West Philadelphia, and wherever a field of labor is found: both men and women are engaged in it. The blessing of the Lord has not been withheld. I trust this will in a measure inspire the people of God with fresh courage and renewed dilligence, in their work and labor of love, knowing that it is not in vain, in the Lord.

From A F Dugger.

I came to Greenland, Mo. Sept. 3, and held meetings over the Sabbath with full houses. The brethren here are alive, and will do what they can to sustain the truth. Passed on to the Morgan S. H., and put up with Dr. W. F. Clark, who is an excellent physician, and now is interested in the Advent views. He is a reader of THE TIMES, and says he wants some tracts to distribute, which I agreed to send him. I also enjoyed a friendly visit with Eld. T. R. Ferguson, a Baptist minister, who received me very kindly. We talked over the differences between us, I hope he may yet see the truth and preach it.

Sept. 7 I was with the Empire church. Spoke from 2 Pet. 3: 10; "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night," etc. I showed that there were two classes referred to in Scripture—the children of night and the children of the day. (1 Thes. 5: 4); that Jesus' coming to the former class, would be as a thief in the night, because they would not be loving and expecting his appearing. Let us be children of the day, to whom he will not come as a thief.

Sept. 10, at Clear Creek, I met Br. Geo. L. McClure, and held meetings over the Sabbath. On the 13th, at 2 p. m., we met at the water side, and four intelligent souls were immersed into Christ. Among them was a child only ten years of age. Though young, yet his faith seems strong. His mother told me that he had been wanting to unite with the church for over a year; and they had kept him from it, thinking that he was too young; but this time he refuted all their arguments, and went forward in obedience. May the Lord bless him. Held meetings Thursday and Friday evenings, and met at the water side again, and baptised two others. We have a live church here. It is an element of power. Its influence is felt throughout the community. Br. McClure will act as their pastor the coming year. He is a faithful and efficient worker.

From E H Bliss, Wexford, Mich:

I left Chicago the last week in Janury for White Water, Grand Traverse Co., by request of Br. and Sr Stephen. Pray to break to them the bread of life. I left Chicago with twelve dollors, the loan of a dear child of God, thinking that would carry me through. I arrived at Big Rapids with fifty-nine cents left, and one hundred miles by stage from my destination, and three nights to spent on the road. But my trust was in the Lord and he soon provided me a way to go, and I arrived safe at the end of my journey. I found a little church of nine members. They came from New York some eight or nine years ago, organized themselves into a church and had a prayer and conference meeting every week; and the Lord blessed them, and sinners were awakened.

But jealousy was stirred up in the class three miles from there, and they sent their Elder to form "a union meeting," which he did. This seemed to be the means of grieving the Spirit of God, and in a little while their meetings died out; and when I arrived they had not had a prayer meeting for over a year. One said he should not try to live a Christian again, as no one could be a Christian in that country—that it was a God-forsaken place.

But in the name of my Master I went to work, and for two months I held five and six meetings a week, until the going was too bad for them to get out; and when I left the church was in good working order. And he who thought no one could be a Christian in that place, was so full of the Spirit of the Lord that it would fairly seem to shine in his eyes when he talked to us of his hope in the new earth. Bless the Lord, to whom be all of the praise. His son, and one other man, with his wife, were brought to see the truth, and I expect ere long to have the privilege of planting them in the likeness of my dear Lord's death.

On the fourth day of July, I left Chicago again for White Water with the vow registered on high that by the help of my Heavenly Father, and in the name of my Master, I would sound the gospel trumpet through the Grand Traverse regions. And by the wisdom given me I have done it, with no uncertain sound, in White Water, and on the east shore of Elk Lake, and Wexford, where I have had the pleasure of seeing the power of God work on the hearts of men, and with the knowledge that the truth has taken effect. Soon I expect to see a harvest. Pray for us, that the words may have free course.

From S G Wellcome, St Charles Minn.

Most of my time the past year has been spent laboring in the field, preaching, attending prayer-meeting and visiting in families. While I look back upon the past, I see that my efforts have been weak, but the Lord wonderfully blessed and strengthened me, and has blessed the people, also, and the cause is prospering all through this region. Many have turned to the Lord, and enjoy the blessed hope of the gospel: not through my labors alone, but a number of preaching brethren have visited us, and their work blessed to the good of souls. Two years ago, darkness was hovering over this section like a cloud. Good seed had been sown, but the cause was in a weak state, until Br. Wm. Bursell and Sr. Rowell preached to the people, when light seemed to beam forth, and the little band became encouraged by a revival in the vicinity of Utica. A church was organized in Utica in July 1870, of over twenty members. I was requested to come and preach to this people, which I have endeavored to do, to the best of my ability, for a year. During that time, Sr. Rowell, Brn. R. Ramer, E. T. Himes, Fassett, and my brothers C. H. and I. C. Wellcome have visited and preached to the edifying of many.

Last spring with my brother C. H. Wellcome I held a protracted meeting, and forty persons professed to have found the Savior. A number lived at a distance, and when they returned to their own neighborhoods, carried a blessing with them. Some belonged to Presbyterian and Methodist families, and will probably unite with those churches. May God make them the means of sowing the seeds of truth wherever they go. Eighteen have been baptised the present summer.

The church has its trials, of course; but I hope and trust that by proper management it will become one of the most flourishing churches in the State. Sr. Rowell is to labor at Utica and vicinity the present year. God bless her labors and give her wisdom to push forward the good begun work. A good union feeling has been kept up with the different denominations in the place, and I trust it will continue. There is no place that I am acquainted with that gives better congregations than Utica, I have visited many families, and have disposed of over $60 worth of Advent books among that people, which shows that there is an earnest seeking after truth.

I now reside at St. Charles and preach at this place, Eyota, Chester, Miola, and Plainview, and wherever the door may open, and God gives me health and strength to labor. Last Sunday I met with L. Rowell at Utica, and had the privilege of burying five happy souls in baptism, all young people and strong in the faith. They represented four nationalities—Norway, Germany, England, and this country. Praise God for his wonderous works.

The friends at Utica and St. Charles have done well by me, giving me a kind welcome, treating me as one of their family, giving freely to help sustain me. And last Thursday they came together to the number of about 200, not only Adventists, but some of all denominations in the place, and many of the unconverted, and children, and made me a visit, giving me besides kindly greetings, about $60 in money and many useful articles. Oh! how it cheered my heart to see such appreciation of my labors, which have been so weak. Many of my little friends were out to see me, and all remembered Br. Wellcome, and their little happy faces bid me God speed, while they brought a free-will offering to their pastor. God bless the lambs of the flock.

The visit was at Br. Cheatham's grove. Sr. Rowell was present and made some excellent remarks, also, Br. Craven, a Presbyterian preacher.

Brief Extracts.

Br. N. Reed, Wayne Co. Pa.: I praise the Lord that the time of deliverance is so near. In reading the reports of the campmeetings I learn the spirit manifested; all striving for holiness, with an entire consecration to God. It does seem to me that it is the last sign spoken of, when the Bride shall make herself ready: then the Bridegroom will come and receive her to himself. Go on, dear brethren and sisters: be faithful; study God's word to know what his will is, and do it, and the Lord will be with you. And remember me in prayer, living here isolated and alone, having to meet opposition on every hand.——————

——Br. Zed Raymond, Hutchinson, Minn. I have been at work all summer, house-building. and have earned some money; so I can preach to three churches, supply them in reading, or most of them. Some help a little, and more none. I furnish hymn books, and help the poor clothe their children, and "pack" my own loads, on foot. I have preached every Sabbath this summer, and have not rested one day. This is frontier life, and missionary work indeed, for one sixty-two years old.——————Br. B. J. G., Chickasaw Co. Io: A few months ago I was somewhat amused on reading a letter from one of our preachers. During one of his preaching tours, he said, he came to a certain town, and went to the P. O. and "inquired who took our papers." The thought occurred to me—Why did he not inquire who took Christian papers, as he is a stickler for that name? He perhaps anticipated this answer: Many take Christian papers, but which denomination of Christians have you reference to: Baptist, Methodist, Adventist, or some other.——————Br. C. R. Stouffer, Chicago: The world is too full of those who are willing to go aboard the train of Salvation if they can only take a sleeping car right through, without being disturbed. Christianity, if it be true to itself, requires that a battle shall be fought and a victory won ere we enter into the rest that remaineth, and to fulfill its requirements, no man has a right to keep silent while there remains a soul to be saved, or a saint to be encouraged and strengthened.——————

——Br. E. J. Martin, East Randolph N. Y.: We are now making an effort to repair an old chapel we have in our place, that has been useless for a number of years, that we may have a place to worship with less annoyance from those professing to be God's children, and yet warring against his truth. We would like to have a place of worship that we could freely call [illegible] and Whitmore and oth[illegible] preach the truth to us [illegible] Much has been said [illegible] in this place for the [illegible] year. Many have professed to beli[illegible] the doctrine. That is good, so far. [illegible]ut a mere profession of belief in [illegible]trine, though it may be Bible truth, [illegible] will save a soul from death. Nothing short of a practical, devoted Christian life, enduring to the end, will ever enable one to enter into the kingdom of God.——

——Br. W. K. Colling (an aged brother, over eighty years old) London, Eng.: I earnestly pray for you that our heavenly Father may abundantly bless you, and all who are associated with you in the good work you are doing. May you be the means of opening the eyes of the blind, and to stop the mouths of gainsayers and revilers, as well as to comfort God's dear children. Looking for that blessed hope, and the manifestation of the glory of the great God and of our Savior Jesus Christ, I am yours sincerely, in Christ Jesus.——

Br. C. H. Sawin, Worcester, Mass.: I love the truth. How can any one love God unless they know him? We must know him. It is a knowledge of inestimable value to know what we worship. It seems to me it is better to trust in God than in anything else—that Christ alone, of himself (without the aid of Greek or heathen mythology), is able to fulfill every promise. The Scriptures are fast fulfilling. Light is spreading and the Lord prospers the work. Every sign and omen seems to look encouraging to the believer in the literal coming and reign of Christ. It seems as though the empire of France had come to a stopping place. She has had no settled government since the Prussian war. Her prophetic history, without doubt, is ended. The others also are fast approaching their destiny; the dying groans of papacy will soon become extinct. Oh! I long to see that day when all the saints will meet in their blissful happy home. Friends of Jesus, be watchful and prayerful that you may be found of him in peace at his glorious appearing.——

——A sister writes: I wish we could have a good meeting here with some one to preach who is not so much interested in the Jews as to forget their mission to the gentiles.——

——Br. P. V. Foulks, Forest Bay, Mich.: I am an Adventist! "What, an Adventist?" Yes, Praise the Lord I am. And I hope I shall always be a good one, and at last receive the reward that Christ shall bring at his advent. I find a great deal of comfort in serving the Lord, in this faith. I was brought up among the Presbyterians, and lived many years in that church, but I saw much not in accordance with the gospel; and I certainly have a right to complain that they did not teach me the plain truth. Yet it was hard for me to be persuaded that I was not baptised right. But I saw it at last—that sprinkling was not burial with Christ in baptism; and now I have been buried with him, according to the commandment. The Lord has blessed me much, and especially in my sickness. I feel that he has heard my prayers, with the petitions of others and is raising me up. Thank God for the privilege of approaching him in prayer.

"Oh! what peace we often forfeit
Oh! what needless pain we bear;
All because we do not carry,
Every thing to God in prayer."

Sr. H. Harrington, Weseca, Minn. We don't have any preaching here except our papers. There are meetings all around us; but oh! such preaching. There is too much romance in the church now-a-days—novels and story papers, and what some folks call religion, all mixed up together. They sit and groan over it; and then when called upon to get up and tell their feelings they say they are "determined to do better than they have done; they feel to mourn over their shortcomings;" but somehow they do not seem to improve at all. Evidently there is need of more godly sorrow unto a repentance that needeth not to be repented of.——

Br. J. McKinley, Moline, Ill.: I would say to the scattered brethren, that we are all glad to hear from them through THE TIMES, and to hear of their strong hopes of immortality through Christ the life-giver. We wade through trials, but continue our meetings every week, in hope that the Lord will soon come: sometimes cast down, but yet not forsaken of the Lord. We still have faith that these light afflictions which are but momentary, will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, when the Life-giver comes.

What I Heard and Saw.

Our Methodist friends held a ministerial Association in this place, Aug. 22, 23, 24. The first evening and first day I was present and its proceedings were such that I deem them worthy of publication. Not because I wish to belittle them (for I bear them record that they have in past days done much good; but the gold has become dim); but because our brethren and sisters are surrounded by the same methods and influences that were employed at that Association, and therefore liable to be led astray from the truth, as it is in Jesus.

On the eve. of Aug. 22, six ministers were present. The preacher took the stand and remarked—"I cannot tell the audience where my text is, for I find (by inquiry) there is not a Bible nor Hymn Book among us: but I will tell the text, which will answer every purpose." He then proceeded with some useful remarks.

On the 23d, at the forenoon session, Eld. Bronson in the chair, and Eld. Springer (of Sparta) Secretary.

1. Essay on Faith and Fanatacism. Very good. Criticisms called for, responses given, too.

2. Essay on the divine nature of Christ. It claimed that all the saved believed in his God-head, and without this faith there was no salvation. Criticisms called for. Response mostly by Eld. Springer, who said he found good Christians who did not endorse the doctrine of the Essay. He mentioned some who were converted at Methodist meetings who are now nonbelievers in the doctrine taught in the Meth[illegible]ist Discipline, yet who believed J[illegible]s was the Son of God, begotte[illegible] the spirit of God, or as Paul has [illegible] 'made of a woman;" or "the wor[illegible]ecame flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory the glory of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth;" and he, therefore, could not cast off such. finally they agreed that such had been converted right, but had strayed.

The next essay of note was on the punishment of the wicked. This was filled with the doctrine or the immortality of the soul and a permanent burning hell, and the unending conscious suffering of the lost. The chairman remarked that they would adjourn for dinner before calling for criticism. During the recess I met Elds. Springer and Wright of Galesville. They inquired if I could be with them through the session. I answered, No, for I had already trespassed on my time, to reach appointments. But, said they, can you not be with us this afternoon? I replied in the affirmative; and I saw in their eyes and manner all that I afterwards witnessed.

When the session opened, the Chairman called on Eld. Wright for criticism. He replied that he had a criticism, but wished Eld. Springer to offer one first, as he understood he had one. Springer said he had a great difficulty in his mind, that must be removed before he could believe the doctrine in the essay. He stated (1) natural affection. (2) First law given to man was couched in these words: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Gen. 2: 17.) He remarked that it would seem that the divine Being in giving a law to Adam, which if violated would certainly be followed by the penalty, would have stated it in plain language: and if he did so this passage could not be offered as teaching eternal conscious suffering in hell. (3) This view is strengthened by the language used by the divine Being in passing sentence on the man: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) He remarked here; God should have spoken plainly. But if we admit the doctrine in the essay, we cannot see, at least it is difficult to see, any relation between the language used by our heavenly Father and the doctrine of eternal suffering in hell. (4) The history given of Adam, strengthens this view. "Adam lived 930 years, and he died." (Gen. 5: 5.) (5) The way old saints and prophets speak of death, is as an unconscious state. Job says: "Man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more." (ch. 14: 12.) David says: "His breath goeth forth; he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 146: 4.) (6) The righteous are represented in the same condition in death; "The righteous perish, and no man layeth it to heart." (Ps. 57: 1.) Paul declares that if there is no resurrection, they that had falen asleep in Christ had perished." (1 Cor. 15: 18.) (7) Inasmuch as the punishment of the wicked is said to be the second death (Rev. 12: 8), from which the righteous escape (Rev. 20: 6), it would seem to be a repetition of the first death on the lost. It does not seem to carry with it conscious suffering, as taught in the essay. (8) Terms used: destroy, consumed into smoke, be as though they had not been. Malachi says they are burned up root and branch; and Paul says, they shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. (9) Peter says God made the people of Sodom and Gomorrah ensample for those who after should live ungodly. Yet he says they were reduced to ashes as Malachi has taught. (10) This same doom is mentioned by Jude as "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."

(11) In conclusion; if those Scriptures referred to are to be taken literally and those in the essay figuratively, then my difficulty remains: but if otherwise, then it is removed.

The Elder in the chair arose and said, Taken literally? Yes, that is a dodge. If those Scriptures be taken literally, why not this? (John 7: 38) "Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water!" All any one has to do to obtain hydraulic power, is to get a good man to stand at the head of a ravine; they can build all the mills wanted. And the flimsy argument about their being punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. We read that Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod, and raised a family. It's a wonder any follow such simple expositors.

At this point one inquired—"Where is that text, about everlasting destruction, referred to by Br. Springer? One said in Matthew; others mentioned some other book. I then ventured to say, 2 Thes. 1: 7. They did not seem to like it; but the text was explained to mean living in hell torments forever.

Eld. Mead, from Leon, said that he understood Hebrew, and sheol did not mean what we, as a people said it did; but it represented a cave, with a bottom and top to it; a proper discription of hell. This doctrine was like the fashions. When they get old in England they came to America as a new fashion. So it was with this doctrine. It had spent its force there by being headed by the truth, and had sailed over to America as something new. We should see it die.

Eld. Wright said it was very plain from Eccl. 3: 19, 20, that the body died, but v. 21, and ch. 12: 7 proved that the never-dying soul went to heaven. He then called on Paul for proof, etc.

Another said he had heard one of these preachers, and he was glad; for he saw our weakness. We (Adventists) were men of small minds, and very poor reasoners. We only went around breaking up churches. Some of their best members had been led astray and made to believe the Methodists are false teachers. This heresy must be met at every corner. He put us down as very low, and while he was doing so, the Lord blessed me so with his love, I could have shouted. But I feared I might offend.

The next one said that he had noticed that Methodism had not been so prosperous of late as formerly; and he thought that it was mainly owing to their leaving out of their ministry (quite too much) a burning hell, which was responded to by "that's true!"

At this Eld. Springer was called up by the Chair. He said, "Straws tell which way the wind blows." When he saw ministers and members eaten up by some erroneous and dry doctrine, he thought there was not much religion there. He could say that although he had been to prayermeeting among this people (Adventists) in Sparta, he had done it to be friendly and see what was going on; but he was a Methodist, through and through. (Amens sounded.) He believed the doctrine in the essay. (Amen, louder.) That so many years ago he was converted (another Amen), and one year ago God sanctified him, soul, body and spirit. (Prolonged amens.)

Here the man stands before your face, reader, with all his duplicity, and yet claims to be sanctified. "By their fruits ye shall know them," says Jesus.

P. W. HOUGH.

The Goddess of Reason.

It may not be generally known that the woman who, in the Reign of Terror, personified the "Goddess of Reason," died in Alsace but a few years ago. In a note of Prof. Farrar, in his late admirable Hulsean lecture, he says: "The unfortunate 'Goddess of Reason,' who had been adored with bacchanalian dances, as she sat in white robes, blue mantle and red cap, with a pink in her hand, on the altar of Notre Dame, died so late as Sept. 30, 1863, 90 years old, idiotic, blind, and a beggar in Alsace."—Ex.

John Wesley said: "I dare no more fret than curse and swear."

Nothing Better

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish to [illegible] that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canadas) for TWENTY FIVE CENTS.

Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists: and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one third for twenty five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

To Correspondents.

D. B. ROGERS. You are right in your view of 2 Cor. ch. 5, and will find the argument clearly stated in Whitmore's Doctrine of Immortality.

Letters Received.

☞ All letters received at this office are acknowledged under this head. This acknowledgment is a receipt for whatever money the letter purports to contain. If the date on your paper is not changed within three weeks after your letter is thus receipted, write at once. houses, 89 churches, and 400 streets were destroyed by this conflagration. The extent of the ravages covered 436 acres, and the value of property destroyed amounted to $50,000,000.

Moscow, though destroyed from political reasons, was probably the most disastrous conflagration of modern times; disastrous not only to the army of Napoleon, and to the fortunes of this remarkable man, but to the inhabitants, of whom no less than 330,000 were rendered homeless in the midst of winter. The pecuniary loss to the city was about $250,000,000.

The fire in Liverpool in 1842, the great fires within the last twenty years in London, and the dreadful scenes of last April in Paris, are among the principal conflagrations that have occurred in Europe during the last century.

The great fire in New York, which broke out on the 16th of December, 1835, and raged fiercely for three days, laying waste the business part of the city, has been regarded as the greatest conflagration in America previous to the Chicago catastrophe. It consumed 648 houses and stores, with $18,000,000 worth of property. Four years later 46 buildings were burned, entailing a loss of $10,000,000. In 1845 another fire occurred, destroying 268 buildings, causing a loss of $6,000,000.

Pittsburg was the scene of a conflagration, April 10, 1845, which destroyed 1000 buildings. Loss, $6,000,000.

St. Louis endured a similar calamity in 1850, leveling 418 buildings, and destroying 23 steamboats. Total loss, $6,000,000.

The fire at Portland, Me., July 5, 1866, destroyed 1000 buildings. Loss, $9,000,000. Insurance, $4,000,000.

At Quebec 1500 houses were burned, and a vast amount of property was consumed on the 28th of May, 1845. One month later 1300 buildings were destroyed, amounting in all to two thirds of the whole city.

In June, 1846, the whole city of St. Johns, New Foundland, was destroyed, and 6,000 people rendered homeless.

Thus it will be seen that no conflagration of modern times begins to equal the calamity of Chicago, where at least 15000 buildings, and property to the value of $350,000,000 destroyed, and 100,000 inhabitants left homeless.

The Times.

AT HOME.

" " " A Wilmington, (Del.,) dispatch says: The terrible shock, which many supposed to be that of an earthquake yesterday morning, was caused by the explosion of nearly 200 kegs of powder, about three miles from that city, while it was being carried from the powder works. The force of the explosion was felt at Coatesville, (Penn.,) creating the impression that it was an earthquake.

" " " The ringleader of a gang of desperadoes, who attempted to throw a passenger train from the track, near Milwaukee, Wis., on Wednesday night, have been arrested. The gang was a part of a Chicago plundering party escaping from that city, with the intention of raiding on Racine or Milwaukee. The railroad authorities prevented their further progress north. They retaliated by attempting a wholesale slaughter of passengers.

" " " A thorough system of disbursing relief to the sufferers has been organized in Chicago under the Mayor, the Relief and Aid Society, and prominent citizens, which has the approbation also of Gen. Sheridan. The Mayor issued a proclamation yesterday, setting forth that order and security of life were restored, and that all the sufferers by the fire were sheltered and provided with food. He, however, says that vast numbers will be wholly dependent on the benevolence of their fellow-creatures for food and shelter during the coming winter. The dispatches indicate that the prospects for the revival of business grows brighter every day. The banks, it is estimated, will be in a condition to realize three-forths of their loans.

" " " The Tribune says of Mormon affairs: It is certain that men who in Utah assume that they can keep harems will be tried for adultery under their own Territorial law, administered by officials of the United States. It is an undoubted fact that many secret murders have been committed by the Danites, or Angels of Destruction, probably under orders from the Mormon dignitaries. The massacre of Mountain Meadows, by which a colony of immigrants was secretly exterminated, was the work of Mormons. Immigrants crossing the plains to California were waylaid, robbed, murdered, and harassed in every possible manner. Were such men as Sidney Rigdon and William Hickman, alluded to in late correspondence of the Tribune, to turn State's evidence, we should doubtless have unfolded a chapter of horrors and crimes that would condemn to death a regiment of the specious hypocrites of the Mormon priesthood, whose conviction otherwise will be difficult. Though polygamy is not the real point of attack in Utah, it is doubtless the instrument which in the hands of the United States Courts shall break the brittle hierarchy in pieces. The day of its doom seems near. Not only must the people of Utah be taught that polygamy cannot be tolerated in the United States any more than widow-burning can be permitted in Montana, in obedience to pretended heavenly visions, but the impudent assumptions of their Church and State Government must be destroyed forever. With the advance of liberal ideas everywhere, some light has dawned in the dark abodes of Mormonism itself, and intelligent schism and recantation of error are not only troubling the hierarchy but aiding the United States' authorities to tear away the refuge of lies which, however it may resist the present attack, is bound to go down before this decade shall pass away.

ABROAD.

" " " The Progressists are about to organize the party throughout Spain.

" " " The engineers' difficulty at Newcastle is still unsettled, and serious disturbances are threatened.

" " " It is asserted that many congregations of Roman Catholic orders are about to leave Rome for England and America, to found convents.

" " " The people of Ogulin, a town in Croatia, a province of Austria, are in revolt, on account of the sale of the forests in the district known as the Military Frontier.

" " " It is a common saying in Paris that "nothing is stable in France except the provisional," and that "nothing can be counted on with certainty expect the unexpected and unforseen."

" " " We have again accounts of several dreadful shipwrecks on the coast of England. The year has been specially disastrous to shipping, and probably more so on the English coasts than for many years.

" " " Napoleon writes that he awaits with confidence the action of the French people, i. e. to restore his dynasty, of course. It will not do to write impossible against anything, in this age: but we have no idea that France will receive back her ignominiously defeated ruler.

" " " A majority of the members elected to the French Conseils-Genereaux are supporters of the present Administration and friendly to the President. About one-ninth of the number returned are Bonapartists. The London Echo reports that M. Pouyer-Quertier is on his way back to Versailles with the Customs Treaty duly ratified and signed. It is also reported that the German Government has consented to the entire evacuation of French territory. On the other hand a dispatch from Berlin says that M. Pouyer-Quertier is offering concessions to Germany in the treaty negotiations, for the purpose of securing the evacuation of six departments.

W. A. C. P. Association.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Western Advent-Christian Publishing Association, will convene in the Advent Chapel, Green St., Chicago, Ill., Wednesday forenoon, December 5, 1871. A full attendance of the members is desired.

The following amendments to the Constitution of the Association will be presented for action:

ART. XII. Sec. 1. The stock of this association is hereby made transferable, by the transfer of the certificate issued therefor, endorsed in blank by the original holder, his heirs, executors or administrators; and the entering of such transfer upon the books of the Association. The date of said entry of the transfer shall be the date of the transfer.

Sec. 2. This article shall take effect and be in full force from and after its adoption.

Amendment to Art. XI. To amend Art. XI. so that it shall read: "This constitution may be altered or amended at any regularly called meeting of the Association by a vote of *—— of the members present at said meeting: this amendment to be in force from and after its adoption.

Churches throughout the West are invited to elect delegates, selecting persons not already members of the Association. These delegates will not take part in the first meetings of the Association; but arrangements will doubtless be made to receive them to full membership at the earliest possible moment.

Wm. L. Himes, Secy.

* This space is left for the insertion of such a proportion as the members may choose.

P. O. Address.

All letters and papers for Eld O. R. Fassett should be directed to San Francisco, Cal., after Oct. 9 till further notice.

Notice—Minnesota.

The following Resolution passed, unanimously, at the last covenant meeting of the Winona Advent Christian Church:

Resolved, That we cordially invite the State Annual Conference to hold their next Session in our chapel, corner Broadway and Winona Streets in this city.

A. J. Marsh, Sec'y.

Notice.

I shall print a paper soon, on the season of the judgment. Will send it free to all who will send for it, either for themselves or to scatter.

Newark, N. J. Abraham Flavell.

Notice.

I wish to locate in some neighborhood where my family will have the privilege of Advent meetings. Would like to find a farm of from 20 to 40 acres; with a comfortable house and water. Can pay about $400, but only a part of it down. Would like to settle where I could supply preaching, more or less, to the brethren in the vicinity. Parties interested can address me at Iron Hill, Iowa. R. B. Dutton.

NOTE. We recommend Br. Dutton very freely, as "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Brethren anywhere need not hesitate to send for him. He will build you up and do you good. Ed. Times.

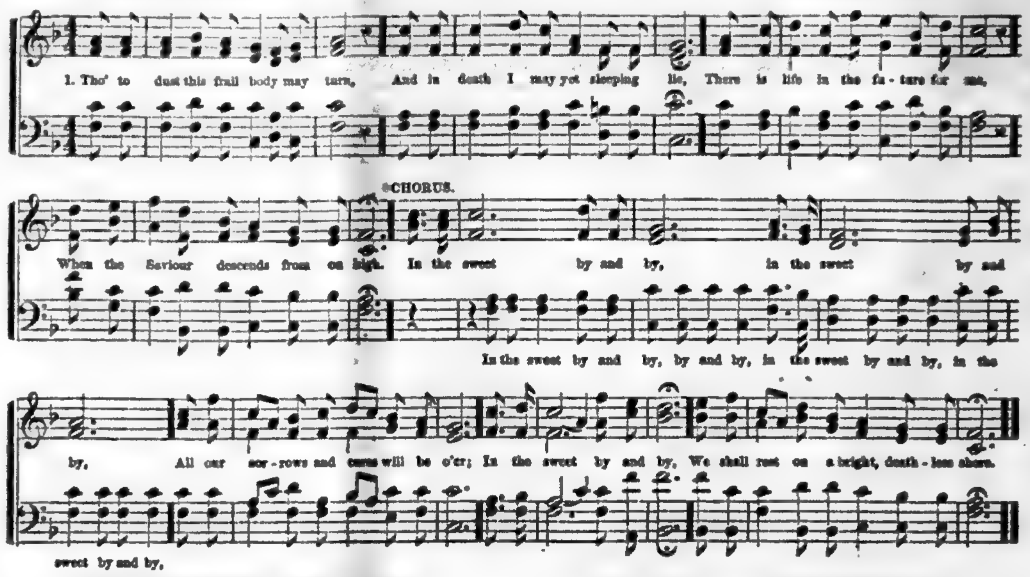
LIFE IN THE FUTURE.

Words by M. M. WEAVER. Music by GEO. E. LEE.



1. Tho' to dust this frail body may turn, And in death I may yet sleeping lie, There is life in the fu - ture for me,
When the Saviour descends from on high.
CHORUS.
In the sweet by and by, in the sweet by and by,
In the sweet by and by, by and by, in the sweet by and by, in the sweet by and by,
All our sor - rows and cares will be o'er; In the sweet by and by, We shall rest on a bright, death - less shore.

2 Though through sickness and want I may pass,
And though lonely my earthly lot be,
There is health and rich treasures untold,
To possess in the future for me.—CHORUS.

3 There are songs that no mortal has heard,
There are sights that no mortal can see;
There are pleasures and friends that are true,
And a home that's eternal for me.—CHORUS.

4 Pilgrim, cheer thee, and trusting go on,
For not long shall thy pilgrimage be;
There is rest, there is life, there is peace,
And a home in the kingdom for thee.—CHORUS.

Price, 5 cts. single sheet, 50 cts. per dozen. Published and for sale by GEO. E. LEE, Brimfield, Mass.

THE END OF TIME.

The word of prophecy assures us (Rev. 5: 6) that there shall come a day on which an angel shall lift up his hand to swear by him that liveth for ever and ever that there shall "be time no longer."

The end of time!—This includes the end of our earthly gains and enjoyments. Now, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, are variously indulged—but then the miser is forced from his gold; the lofty are brought low; the drunkard no longer calls for his glass; the lewd no longer glory in their shame. And is it fit, O men! that you should fill up life with vices that degrade, or with vanities that can at best but amuse you? Take heed, my friends, that your souls do not live too much on any of the satisfactions of this life; that your affections be not set upon them in too high a degree, that you make them not your idols—lest you be left helpless and miserable; for they cannot follow you into the world of souls; they are the things of time, and have no place in eternity. "The end of all things is at hand, therefore be ye sober." Be ye moderate in every enjoyment on earth, and prepare to part with all, when the angel shall pronounce "that time shall be no longer:" his sentence puts an end to every earthly joy, and every mortal hope.

The end of time! Then closes the season of conversion. We come into the world ignorant, and are naturally prone to sin. The image of God is lost, and life is the only space allotted for its recovery. If we die without a change, we must remain for ever unholy. Oh! what awakening inquiries does the thought suggest! Am I renewed by the Holy Spirit? What are my delights and my desires? Is my heart a temple of God, or the seat of sin? How short the term during which these inquiries are to be resolved!

Time shall end!—How valuable then while it lasts, particularly to the unprepared! Every hour to them is a merciful respite. Go forth and meet you offended Sovereign. "Seek him while he may be found; call upon him while he is near." Go in the name of Jesus; plead his righteousness, his death, his intercession; and say, "God be merciful unto me a sinner!"

Time shall end!—Oh! the strange folly and madness of those who are afraid of the end of time whenever they think of it; and yet who know not what to do with their time, as it runs off daily and hourly! They find not their souls ready for the judgment, and yet they live from year to year without any further preparation for it. they waste their hours of leisure in mere trifling; they lose their seasons of grace, their means and opportunities of salvation, in a thoughtless and shameless manner, as though they had no business to employ them in; they live as though they had nothing to do with all their time but to eat and drink, and be easy and merry. From the rising to the setting sun you will find them still in pursuit of vanities; they waste God's sacred time as well as their own, either in a lazy and careless manner, or in following after sin ond madness, while the end of time is hastening upon them.

Time shall end!—Do I observe the declining day, and the setting sun sinking into darkness? So decline the days of life, the hours of labor, and the seasons of grace! Oh! may I finish my appointed work with honor, ere the light be fled! May I improve the shining hours of grace, ere the shadows of the evening overtake me, and my time of labor is no more.

How useful a practice would it be to suppose ourselves often at the end of time; to imagine ourselves just under the sound of the angel's voice; or at the tribunal of Christ, and to call our souls to solemn account in what manner we have passed our time hitherto.

Have you learned that important and eternal rule of prudence, "Never delay till to-morrow what may be done to-day; never put off till the next hour what may be done in this." Have you not often proved your own folly by neglecting present duty? Solomon tells us (Eccl. 3: 17), there is a time for every purpose and every work under the sun; a proper time for every lawful work of nature and life; and it is the business and care of a wise man to do proper work in proper time; but when we have let slip the proper season, how often have we been utterly disappointed! Felix put off his discourse with Paul about the faith of Christ, and righteousness, and judgment to come, to a more convenient time, which probably never came. (Acts 24: 25.) And the word of God teaches us, that if we neglect our salvation in this present day of grace, the angel is ready to swear "that time shall be no longer."

What time may yet lie before you for improvement, God only knows; the remnant of earth's days is with him, and every evening the number is diminished. Let not the rising sun upbraid you with continued negligence. Remember your former abuses of hours, and months, and years, in folly and in sin; or, at best in vanity and trifling. Let these thoughts of your past conduct impress your hearts, so as to keep you ever vigorous in present duty. Since you have been so loitering in your Christian race in time past, take larger steps daily, and stretch all the powers of your soul to hasten toward the crown and the prize. Hearken to the voice of God, in his word, with more attention and desire to profit; pray to a long suffering God, with double fervency; cry aloud and give him no rest till your sinful soul be changed into penitence, and renewed to holiness; till you have some good evidence of your sincere love to God and unfeigned faith in his son Jesus. Never be satisfied till you have come to a well grounded hope, through grace, that God is your friend, your reconciled Father, that when time shall end you may enter into the regions of light and peace.

THE WICKED SHALL BE BURNED UP.

Is there any difference between burning a thing forever without consuming it, and burning it up? I think there is a vast difference. When a thing is "burned up" it certainly cannot have an existence and be still burning. Modern theology teaches that sinners are to be tortured eternally in a "lake of fire." If it can be proven by the Bible that they are to be "burned up," we must conclude that modern theology and the Bible are not in harmony on the destiny of the impenitent. We must also conclude if the Bible explicitly declares that the wicked are finally to be burned up, that after this infliction of retributive justice takes place, there will be nothing left to "hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain." (Is. 65: 25.) Then will come the time of universal worship to the Lord, described by the Revelator in the following eloquent words: "And EVERY CREATURE which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and ALL that are in them (wonder where the "lake of fire" is in which are countless millions of condemned, immortal souls uttering their shrieks of anguish while the ceaseless ages roll on!), heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." (Rev. 5: 13.)

Let the following passages decide whether sinners are to be eternally burning, or whether they are to be burned up:

Mat. 3: 13: "Whose fan is in his hand and he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat [the righteous] into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff [the wicked] with unquenchable fire. It is "unquenchable fire" because it cannot be hindered in its work, i. e., in burning up the chaff, not because it will burn eternally. Ps. 97: 3; "A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies around him. Heb. 6: 8: "But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned." Is. 1: 28, 31: "And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed. And the strong shall be as tow and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them." Mal. 4: 1: "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh SHALL BURN THEM UP, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

Reader, that day will be a dreadful day to the ungodly; but to the righteous it will be an epoch of joy that no human being can describe. May we be among the latter class.

The labels on THE TIMES should all read '72 Does yours?

Spiritism vs. Truth.

They say the spheres are beautiful,
Fairer than thoughts at even;
And nightly come angelic forms,
To tell us of their heaven.
They tell us spirit forms are waiting
To welcome us above;
And through the air are moving
Those messengers of love.

They tell us they are watching
Our actions here below
And that the thoughts and feelings
Of our inmost soul they know,
That, hovering 'round us nightly,
They guard us from all sorrow;
And that THEY God's children are
Who will THEIR precepts follow.

So they stigmatize all others
As lunatics or fools,
Who will not be subverted,
And made their willing tools,
They say they are the spirits
Of those who dwell in clay;
And day and night to teach us,
From Heaven they wing their way.

They tell us man shall "never die,"
But that he is immortal—
And give the lie to Jesus Christ,
Who burst the gloomy portal
And rose triumphant from the grave,
A conqueror of its power;
Yet told us not of what transpired
In that dark, gloomy hour.

But he hath told us that we should
Our silent slumbers keep
Until the last, loud trumpet'ssound
Should wake all them that sleep:
Then in immortal life arise
And see a new earth's bloom—
A long-lost paradise restored,
Beyond the cold dark tomb.

That man should never, never die
Was told by one of yore;
And they did listen to his words,
That they should not die—"sure."
But God hath told us in the Word
Of pure prophetic truth,
That in the grave no "thought" can come
To either age or youth.

That "sons and daughters may grow up,
Meet 'round the "honored" board—
Yet to the sleepers in the grave
Comes not a single word.
And yet again, we hear the word
Of prophets long since gone:
No thoughts of God, Heaven, Earth or Home
To dull their ears are borne.

They "praise not" God in death's embrace,
And give no thoughts to him;
But there they "rest in hope" of life
When Jesus Christ shall come.
Then let us press the battle hard,
And never say "give" way;"
But put God's holy armor on—
Through him we'll gain the day.

Atonement.

The grand center of every theological blunder in the Christian world has a marked line of thought running out from Christ as the Savior, Mediator, Redeemer, or Reconciler of mankind. The idea conceived relative to the atonement and the relationship of Christ to man, and man to God, forms the key of many very erroneous conclusions, or is, else, the binding stone of the mighty arch of truth.

The idea that God sent Jesus Christ forth as a sacrifice for the sin of the world is as plainly taught in the gospel as the fact that he came into the world at all. The fact that Christ came as a substitute for Adam, as a second representative head, is too plainly taught in the following scriptures to make it necessary for the most ignorant to be in darkness, unless blinded by tradition; which, by the way, is the sad state of very many who do not realize the cause of their darkened minds.

Is. ch. 53, is a prophetic history of the sufferings of Christ, and that, too, as a substitute for sinful man. Let every reader of this article turn to the above chapter and read it carefully and prayerfully, and let every mouth cease to cry against "substitution" in the doctrine of the atonement, hereafter.

But let me place before you a few passages from the gospels, and see if they teach the same idea. "The next day John saw Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." (John 1: 29.) Not the sins of the world, but the sin of the world—the great Adamic sin; committed by the representative head of the race, and expiated in Christ the second Adam, or next great representative head.

Again. "For he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin; that we might be made made the righteousness of God in him." (2 Cor. 5: 21.) "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." (Gal. 3: 13.) "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of the many," (Heb. 9: 28.) "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." (1 Pet. 2: 24.)

If here is not substitution set forth in unmistakable terms, how can such a thing be taught in any form of speech?

If there is no such thing as unreconciliation on the part of God because of man's sins, why does a penalty fall upon man? And if God does not demand a sacrifice for sin, but sent Christ to suffer simply to give us a great demonstration of his love for us; may he not put forth his hand again in some greater manifestation of his love, so that the hardest shall be melted into contrition before him?

If man is affected by the atonement only as he acts, how are the wicked to be raised? The truth is, the race are passive, both in the transgression and the sacrifice for it; and only the first and second Adams are active. The first failed in his trial; and the second was obedient and successful. The lives of the race inhered in the first Adam, and for one sinful act were forfeited. (Rom. 5: 18.)

The second Adam comes, and takes the place of the first; endures the trial and redeems us from the curse of the law, and takes our case in his own hands, and declares we shall all live again. (John 5: 28; 1 Cor. 15: 22; Rom. 5: 18.)

This position is the only one that furnishes a perfect antidote for non-resurrectionism, or universal salvation for all after the resurrection.

Christ pays the Adamic debt and all come up; and those who have sought for glory, honor, and immortality, or those who have never sinned, will have a right to their life after it is restored.

Renan Against Himself.

Few are the acknowledged defects in the vaunting infidelity of the 19th century. The broad and unscrupulous assertions of modern infidels are given out in many cases without a shadow of authentication, with the vain hope that force of expression will answer for force of argument. But with the careful reader such things have fallen into complete disuse. He demands a foundation of more solidity than mere bold assertions for the base of a proposition to which he is to give unqualified credence. Ernest Renan, the French infidel, in his, Life of Jesus, endeavors to make a point against the Gospel of Luke, by which he unconsciously catches himself. He says Luke ch. 21 was undoubtedly written after the siege of Jerusalem. Well, what of that? Who cares if it was? And he quotes vv. 9, 20, 24, 28, and 32 to prove it. He claims that the record is "legendary." It is merely a compilation of current stories, written out from memory. He would therefore insinuate that Jesus never made the declarations contained in those verses, but that Luke wrote them years after their fulfillment, in the shape of prophecies, thus charging Luke with the basest hypocrisy imaginable. In this immediate connection he credits Luke with "the most perfect unity," etc., leaving the impression that there can be no doubt as to the authenticity of this Gospel.

Renan doubtless takes this turn to hold the reader. The insinuating slur at first would disgust the pious reader, and the book would be rejected with contempt. But the smoothness of the latter destroys the roughness of the former and thus the casual reader is not offended, and is prepared for stronger meat as he advances in the body of the book. It must be discovered by carefully scrutinizing both horns of this dilemma that Renan has gotten himself into a box. First he unhesitatingly charges Luke with dishonesty, hypocrisy, etc. Of course he does not in so many words, but in an undertone, sluringly. And within twenty words from this, he declares that Luke is perfectly harmonious, and unpretentious. Which shall we believe? Renan's book is puffed and heralded as standard, and is regarded by many as infidelity gone to seed; and yet it abounds, all through its 376 pp. with just such flat and hearty contradictions as the above.

Several of the passages to which he refers for proof that Luke's gospel was written by a designing party, had not the slightest reference to Jerusalem's downfall, but refer in the most glowing terms to that greatest of all events, the glorious second coming of the Lord Jesus, and hence remain still on the docket of unfulfilled prophecy. Read v. 26. Renan ought certainly to have had discrimination enough to have seen that the "these things" spoken of did not refer to the events that clustered around the subjugation of the Jewish metropolis, but to those of grander and sublimer events whose history was not recorded for many centuries after the desolation of Jerusalem by Titus the Roman chieftain, and whose mission was to admonish the nations of the near approach of the "Lord of lords and King of kings."

Peace in Jesus.

Jesus said to his disciples, "These things have I spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

How thankful I am that these blessed words were ever written in the Holy Bible for our consolation, they are precious to me. I believe I understand their meaning. When I look around me and see the sufferings, and hear of the trials of dear friends, those that are dear by the ties of Christian friendship, it is then that I feel thankful that there is a being that we can find peace in. Yes, we can go to Jesus with our every sorrow. He will listen to the cries of his children. He will give that peace that we can obtain no where else. He will not forsake us. He will not turn us empty away. He has promised that his grace shall be sufficient for us.

How full of love and pity, how consoling, how comforting, to have such a dear friend as this. When we stand by the death bed of one we love, we feel that our hearts will break; feel that it is hard for us to say, "Not my will, but thine be done, O Lord!" It is then we look to Jesus for strength, consolation and peace. He alone can give that peace to the believer, that the world cannot give nor take away. He alone can raise our loved ones from their graves, and give them life everlasting.

But we are commanded to "keep ourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life;" and, "to him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne," said Jesus.

How much we ought to be encouraged to do right, and pray that we may have grace in our hearts continually, that we may overcome all the evil influences that surround us. If we only have the love of God in our hearts what a glorious eternity awaits us! For "blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." May we ever have this peace, be overcomers, and be crowned with eternal life when Christ comes.

"Further Thoughts Upon Hades."

I quite agree with Mr. White that in our consideration of hades we "must separate the question of consciousness from that of survival." Unconsciousness may consist with life. My own opinion for a while was that there was in hades a survival of the soul "as a distinct entity," but that it was wholly unconscious; I now see this midway position to be untenable. Man, whatever man is, wholly dies until the resurrection. When God has withdrawn from man his own spirit of life, man cannot but die. His death is called a sleep, because he will be raised out of it.

There is one point adverted to by Mr. White in his article in the Rainbow for September, as also in his article in the Rainbow for June, on which he lays special stress, and in which he makes special allusion to an argument of mine in my Duration of Future Punishment, on which I now as fully rely as ever. It refers to the meaning which all Greek writers, according to Mr. White, attach to the word hades. If Mr. White were correct, I confess, I for one, would not know how to reply to his argument from it. Mr. White, however, is not here correct.

In his article for June he says that hades "signifies in all writers, whether of prose or poetry, a place beneath the world where popular faith placed the souls departed." (p. 209.) In his article for September, he says that "no Greek speaker or writer ever thought that the grave was comprehended in the idea of hades." (p. 419) Mr. White is here incorrect. It is true that the idea he mentions was often entertained by Greek writers, but it is by no means the case that such was the universal idea. Indeed, it was chiefly the scope for fancy and imagination that this idea gave room for that caused the word to be used in this sense so extensively as it was. We find it thus used by poets and others, who did not believe in the survival of the soul at all.

Hades very frequently in Greek writers meant the grave. We naturally turn to a Greek Lexicon to know the meaning or meanings, of a Greek term. When we turn, then to Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, reckoned, we believe, the first Greek Lexicon of our day, we find the following given as the meanings for hades in Greek writers:—"1. Pluto, the God of the nether world. 2. The nether world, the grave, death." Liddell gives references for each of these meanings.

I will merely add to the authority of Liddell the authority of one of the most learned men of any time, that of Abp. Usher, once Primate of Armagh. He expressly states in his Answer to a Jesuit, ch. 8, that hades often in Greek writers means the grave, and gives instances of it. We will content ourselves with one quotation. Hades, says Usher, "is taken for a tomb in that place of Pindarus: 'Other kings have gotten a tomb (hades) apart by themselves before the house, or before the gates of the city." And, therefore, we see that hades is by Suidas in his Lexicon, expressly interpreted Ho taphos and by Hesychius tumbos, taphos, a tomb or a grave. And in the Greek Dictionary set out by the Romanists themselves for the better understanding of the Bible, it is noted that hades doth not only signify what we commonly call hell, but the sepulcher or grave also." Of the Septuagint translation, Usher says, "hades, in the translation of the seventy-two seniors, is not rarely, but very usually, taken for the place of dead bodies."

We do not then come to the Hebrew, sheol, and its Greek equivalent, hades, in Scripture with one fixed definite meaning attached to this latter word in Greek writers. It had among them a great variety of meaning. Some of them meant by it the grave, some meant a heathen God living under earth; thence it came very commonly to mean the place under earth where it was supposed he ruled over a multitude of unsubstantial ghosts or souls of men. We then come to Scripture to know which of these meanings it sanctions, and we fearlessly assert that it never means either the god Pluto, or Pluto's realm of shadowy ghosts, but always the grave, or death, God's penalty for sin.

Perhaps Mr. White may think this of some weight in a question which is certain of thorough discussion in our day. The popular idea of the intermediate state, based upon some of the speculations of Plato, which were taken up by heathen poets and others as a fruitful field for the play of passion and imagination, forms the scarcely-suspected basis for the most enormous amount of falsehood in professing Christendom.

HENRY CONSTABLE.

Things New and Old.

We are charged with "heresy," and are grateful to the Lord that the charge is merited; for the heresy has no relation to his word, but to certain teachings which, on diligent examination, we find inconsistent with his word. Those who brand us with heresy in relation to revelation, bear false witness against their neighbor; for we believe, with faith unfeigned, what holy men of God, moved by the Holy Spirit, have spoken. Those who limit the charge to portions of creeds and theological systems which have no authority over conscience, pay us a compliment when they intend a censure; for truth is so unutterably important that the man who has determined to test her claims for himself by the only infallible standard, thereby gives evidence that he is profoundly in earnest. If we are content to knock away props which many generations have deemed necessary to the safety of the building, whilst acknowledging that our all depends upon its safety, it must be admitted that we have faith in the Builder. If ours were in the hands of bold scepticism, bent upon the overthrow in one common ruin of all that is venerable for age and beautiful for truth, we should richly deserve all the bitter things which have been said concerning us. But it so happens that the men who know us best, are the men who can bear the most emphatic testimony to our loyalty. After more than thirty years service in the great cause of Christianity, by the pen of the living voice, it would be passing strange if our hearty allegiance to this divine system should be justly suspected now. Scattered through our writings are certain sentiments which we would not utter to-day, not because our admiration of the system they were intended to vindicate is less, but because experience and study have convinced us that they are not tenable, their orthodoxy is unimpeachable; but when that is all that can be said for a doctrine, it is time to sacrifice it on the altar of truth, notwithstanding the honored names that have given it their suffrage, and the length of time it has dwelt in the church. If we had not unlearned as well as learned something all these years, ours would be a blank retrospect. There are men who make it their boast that they never changed an opinion in religion. Of the fact we have no doubt, but whether it is something to glory in is another question. This is the class of minds that cannot comprehend the action of increased light on minds of a different order. One of our censors insinuates that for a quarter of a century we have concealed our views on the destiny of the wicked. Whether falsehood or malignity is the strongest element in this statement it is not worth our while to inquire; but men of this type are the dead weight of the church; they are the merest echoes of everything that has been stereotyped in creed or catechism; and if a man, using his protestant birthright of going to the Bible for himself, finds reason there to change his view on any subject, they immediately brand him as a base hypocrite, who always held his present "heresy," but concealed it in the pulpit for the sake of a piece of bread. Such men will not cease to measure others by themselves; for they are incapable of imagining any higher standard. Minerva sprang full grown and completely armed from the head of Jupiter, and these wise men expect perfect theologians as soon as the pulpit is entered. In everything—in all departments of trade, science, literature, philosophy—we are encouraged to go on by these infallibles who denounce the Pope's infallibility, on the principle that they do not like a rival: but when we touch the accumulated priestly rubbish of centuries, that has covered the Book of Salvation with darkness, and filled every corner of the temple with dust and cobwebs, we are denounced as heretics, dangerous innovators, teachers of "new doctrines;" and—as a worthy minister said in a pious passion the other day—"Burn the Rainbow!"

But now let us look at this matter without prejudice. You would not condemn us, or any who think with us, unheard? That would not be worthy of Englishmen. You would not charge us, or any who think with us, falsely? That would not be Christian. Now is it really the case that this magazine teaches new and dangerous doctrines? If they are absolutely new, they must be dangerous; for there was a faith once delivered to the saints, and we have no belief in any new revelation whilst this age lasts. So, having granted the danger if the novelty can be proved, we have narrowed the issue to a point, and shall be able to proceed without embarrassment. But "new" is a relative term. What if it should be found that our doctrines are "things new and old?—new in relation to current theology; but old as the days of prophets and apostles notwithstanding? This is what we claim for them—this is what we have repeatedly proved to be the fact. We challenge certain points in the theology of Christendom—both papal and protestant—with a departure from the ancient faith, with "heresy" in the evil sense of that word; and we affirm, on inspired authority, that our maligned doctrines were the common heritage of the Christian church before either popery or protestantism was ever heard of. As religious conservatives we have gone back, not to the era of the reformation, not to the time of hair-spliting scholasticism, when men turned Scripture into riddles to test their ingenuity, and not to the age of the "Fathers," when the fatal compromise between pagan philosophy and Christian truth was affected; but to the days of our Lord and his apostles, when truth shone forth in her virgin purity, a thing of beauty and joy unspeakable; and there at the fountain-head and source of all that is "true, honest, just, lovely, and of good report," we have found proof irresistible that several of the leading doctrines of the orthodox faith are not of God but of men.

Take one point in illustration—the subjugation of the world to God. That great and wonderful event is to be effected, says orthodoxy, by the agency of the church in preaching the gospel to every creature. The chief object we had in view in establishing the Rainbow,—an object which will maintain its supremacy over all others as long as the magazine exists—was to teach that this is a fundamental and bewildering mistake, causing endless confusion as to the nature and calling of the church, the meaning of the present dispensation, the return of Christ in glory, and the setting up of his everlasting kingdom. We teach—thanks be to God for the privilege!—that our blessed Lord returns from heaven before his kingdom or any part of it can be manifested; that the time of his return is purposely concealed, and may be at any moment; that the church is an election out of the nations; and that the subjugation of the world will be the result of Christ's royal authority as visibly manifested Sovereign of mankind. Is this teaching "new?" It is, in relation to modern orthodoxy. Is it "old?" It is as old the holy documents from which every item of it is derived, and by which its truth is absolutely proved. It is vain therefore to ask us to act otherwise than we are doing. We have no choice in the matter. Whether men applaud or censure, smile or frown, help or hinder, we teach and preach the speedy coming of our divine Lord in power, majesty, and glory ineffable!—Rainbow.

Responses.

A Friend in Crawford Co. Ill. writes:

I send you 50c., and my good wishes for you and the cause of truth. Although I am a subscriber and reader of the TIMES and of some of your tracts, I do not claim to be a Christian. I used to be a Methodist; but though I believed some of their doctrine, some I did not believe. Baby baptism and total depravity, as well as the Trinity, doctrine I could not see; and Adventism has been the means of my disbelieving a good deal more of their creed. Eld. Miles Grant's Exposition of Spiritism was forced on me to read just in time to save me from the meshes of that devilish doctrine. Thank God for people that will urge men to read the truth.

Now, my Adventist friends: none of you ought to be poorer than I am. Let every subscriber pay up for his own paper, and send it to as many as he can; and send something to help put the TIMES office out of debt.

Sr. Almira Waffle says: "I have but 25c. If I wait to make it a dollar, I may not send anything. So I will send this, with my prayers that God will bless his truth, and spread the knowledge of the soon coming kingdom far and wide. I long to enter into that rest."

Br. C. R. Stouffer writes from Chicago; "Dear TIMES: I do not see how one of your readers, whether friend or foe, could withstand the appeal you have sent out for assistance, If ever I coveted wealth I did on reading of your necessities and of how little is being done to meet the wants of the publishing interest. I can send you only a small sum, hoping that it will not be too small to do you good, and that from the East and West, North and South there will come such contributions as will serve to lift the debt that is heavy upon you, and enable THE TIMES to go on its way rejoicing, with means enough to keep the white winged messengers of the coming kingdom flying abroad, silently preaching of one who shall come in the glory of his Father with all the holy angels.

Br. and Sr. J. A. Peterson of Chicago, had talked over the matter before the fire and had determined to send a dollar to aid us. He was burned out, and lost everything; but succeeded in obtaining work at once, and so determined to keep their promise, which he considered as made to the Lord. He said: "The Lord will keep all his promises to us: why should we not pay all our vows to him?" When we thought of their losses, and how they slept the night after the fire on the cold ground, with a side walk for a covering, we thought to refuse the offering: but it was presented in such a spirit that we felt it would be cruel to do so. Heaven's blessing will attend that gift surely.

Sr. Julia Shaw, Dayton Ohio. "My offering is a small one. I am over sixty years old, and work out for a living. But I give what I can freely, praying and hoping that God's blessing will rest upon you, and upon the Press, and upon the whole Advent church: and may thousands be added to the number of those now waiting for Jesus' appearing.

A brother well known for his liberality, in Northwestern Wisconsin, with his family sends $10, and remarks: "I should be glad to do more, but my means are small and tolerably well taxed in support of the cause in my own neighborhood. May the Lord give grace and wisdom to so fulfill my stewardship that I may hear the Well done!"

—We would not have local interests neglected for the sake of the general interest, by any means. But both should be sustained, and can be, if we will only all do our duty.

A Sister at Lewiston, says: We cannot let such earnest appeals pass unheeded. And knowing that a little will be better than nothing, I enclose $2, hoping to be able to send more soon. May the blessing of God rest upon you, and the way be opened that the truth may be spread. The signs of the near approach of Jesus are very clear, and therefore what we do must be done quickly. Oh! that we may all realize the duty which we owe to the cause of Christ.

Sr. Tipple, Rutland, Wis. says: I could say much to you and to all who love the Lord, of the goodness of God to me, in leading me into the light of the truth. I cannot express the peace and joy I feel, as trusting in the precious blood of Jesus. I look for his coming and kingdom as near, the hope cheers and strengthens me, amid life's turmoils and cares, of meeting with all the children of God on the new earth, where we shall be delivered from this body of sin and death, and be like Jesus. The conflicts we now have with a carnal nature will be over and we shall rest in his love forever. May God prosper the Advent cause, and all connected with it, and who labor for it. You have a heavy burden and much care in your department, but I know that God will sustain and bless you in your labors of love for his name's sake.

A Br. and Sr. in Sullivan Co. Mo. says: We have worked hard to improve our land, and make a living. So far it has been hard to make both ends meet. But thanks to our Heavenly Father for the good health we have enjoyed. Soon we hope to have a comfortable home and be able to do something for the cause. We send you a very small present, wishing it was more.

A few words about our lamented Father Higgins. We had great hope that through his labors a small band might be raised up here to walk with us, that we should not feel so much like strangers in a strange land. But he who doeth all things well has seen fit to release our brother from toil and pain, and let him rest a little while, till Jesus comes. And we wait, and pray, hoping the Lord may send some this way to preach the word. If we had not lived so far from the railroad we should have asked you to stop with us on our tour West. We hope yet to have the pleasure of hearing you preach the gospel of the kingdom. While we read the reports of the good meetings, we can only sit and wish we could have been there.

Sr. Williams, Mt. Clemens, Mich. Oh! that every Advent family may be impressed to do something for this cause. I have long felt as if I ought to pay something for publishing tracts, and neglect is my only excuse; for I could have spared a few shillings. We attend the meetings in town. The hat or plate is passed every Sabbath morning. Sometimes the sermon is good at others it is very mixed. I am thankful I can discern between Bible truths, and popular theology.

I have not forgotten where I received my education. It was in the summer of 1866, at a tentmeeting at Mt. Clemens. I often think if I could enjoy that privilege again, I should know how to appreciate it. Oh! the happiness of hearing the truth as I heard it then for the first time from Elds. Himes and Mansfield. Since then I have had THE TIMES, and Quarterly, and other publications to help me on.

We have had no preaching since Br. Snook was here in the spring. We went six miles four weeks ago to hear Br. Fuller. He administered the Lord's supper and we had a precious season. There seems to be several interested in that neighborhood. Br. Fuller works hard on his farm, and does all he can to spread the truth. There are now two ready for fellowship with the church.

Br. Joseph Baker, Cortland Co. N. Y. says: I can now read my Bible and understand what I read. It has always been a comparatively sealed book to me, and in consequence I have always been a little skeptical. I tried all my early days to lean on Universalism, but was never entirely satisfied with it. I was driven to believe that doctrine in trying to believe the immortality of the soul. Of course I thought that was true, as I had always been taught so, and knew nothing else. Now I have learned differently.

Body and Mind[1].—No. 1.

The Gulstonian Lectures for 1870, were delivered before the Royal College of Physicians, London, by Dr. Henry Maudsley, formerly resident physician of the Manchester Royal Lunatic Hospital. These lectures soon after delivery, were published in London and New York, and were received with great favor on both sides of the Atlantic. The publication of his previous work The Physiology and Pathology of the mind, marked the beginning of a new era in the study of mental science, and prepared the public mind for a thorough appreciation of the present volume. Dr. Maudsley states his object to have been to "bring man, both in his physical and mental relations, as much as possible within the scope of scientific inquiry." The first lecture is devoted to an exposition of the physical conditions of mental function in health. In the second lecture, mental disorders are shown to be neither more nor less than nervous diseases in which mental symptoms predominate. The third lecture takes a general survey of the pathology of mind, and treats of the relations of morbid states of the body to disordered mental functions. The appendix contains two intensely interesting chapters on the Limits of Philosophical Inquiry, and The Theory of Vitality.

The method adopted by Dr. Maudsley in the prosecution of his studies is that of induction. Beginning the study of mind as observed in its humblest bodily manifestations, he proceeds in a strictly scientific way to show that, step by step as we advance in the scale of being from the lower to the higher order of animals, we meet in succession the same evidences that convince us that mind, so far as it is a legitimate subject of scientific inquiry, is not an entity distinct and separate from the body. He ends his observations at a point where most writers on mental science begin. He is right and they are wrong. Why should not the inductive method which has in other studies produced the most gratifying results, be as rigidly and as justly applied in the study of mind as in the study of other phenomena? He illustrates the use of this method in various ways, but in none so happily as where he speaks of the manifestations of intelligence in the lower animals. Speaking of the wonderful results of nerve functions displayed by the ant and the bee, he says:

"Granting however, that the bee or ant has these traces of adaptive action, it must be allowed that they are truly rudiments of functions, which in the supreme nerve centers we designate as reason and volition. Such a confession might be a trouble to a metaphysical physiologist, who would thereupon find it necessary to place a metaphysical entity behind the so-called instincts of the bee, but can be no trouble to the inductive physiologist; he simply recognizes an illustration of a physiological diffusion of properties, and of the physical conditions of primitive volition, and traces in the evolutions of mind and its organs, as in the evolution of other functions and their organs, a progressive specialization and increasing complexity."

His definition of memory is very similar to that given by Oliver Wendell Holmes in his Harvard essay on mechanism of thought and morals. "Memory, says Dr. Maudsley, is the organic registration of the effects of impressions, the organization of experience. And to recollect is to revive this experience—to call the organized residua into functional activity. ....Accordingly, in a brain that is not disorganized by injury or disease, the organic registrations are never actually forgotten, but endure while life lasts, no wave of oblivion can affect their characters. Consciousness, it is true, may be impotent to recall them; but a fever, a blow on the head, a poison in the blood, a dream, the agony of drowning, the hour of death, rending the vail between our present consciousness and these inscriptions, will sometimes call vividly back, in a momentary flash, and call back too with all the feelings of the original experience, much that seemed to have vanished from the mind forever. In the deepest and most secret recesses of mind, there is nothing hidden from the individual self, or from others, which may not be thus sometime accidentally revealed; so that it might well be that, as DeQuincey surmised, the opening of the book at the day of judgment shall be the unfolding of the everlasting scroll of memory."

In this connection, and as a further illustration of the subject, as well as to show how eminent men on both sides of the Atlantic view the question, I may be allowed to give, notwithstanding its length, the following extract taken from the oration of Oliver Wendell Holmes, before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard:

"The problem of memory is closely connected with the question of the mechanical relation between thought and structure. How intimate is the alliance of memory with the material condition of the brain, is shown by the effect of age, of disease, of a blow, of intoxication. I have known an aged person repeat the same question five, six, or seven times during the same brief visit. I once asked to see a woman who had just been injured in the street. On coming to herself, 'Where am I? what has happened?' she asked. 'Knocked down by a horse, ma'am—stunned a little—that is all.' A pause, while one with moderate haste might count a hundred, and then again, 'Where am I? what has happened?' 'Knocked down by a horse, ma'am—stunned a little, that is all?' Another pause and the same question again, and so on during the whole time I was by her. The same tendency to repeat a question indefinitely has been observed in returning members of those worshiping assemblies whose favorite hymn is "We won't go home 'till morning." Is memory then, a material record? Is the brain like the rocks of the Sinaitic Valley, written all over with inscriptions left by the long caravans of thought as they have passed year after year through the mysterious recesses?

"When we see the distant railway train gliding by us in the same line, day after day, we infer the existence of a track which guides it. So when some dear old friend begins that story we remember so well, switches off at the accustomed point of digression, coming to a dead stop at the puzzling question of chronology, off the track on the matter of its being first or second cousin of somebody's aunt, set on it again by the patient listening wife who knows it all as she knows her well-worn wedding ring; how can we doubt that there is a track laid down for the story in some permanent disposition of the thinking reason? The objection to the existence of such a material record, that we renew our bodies many scores of times, and yet retain our earliest recollections, is entirely met by the fact that a scar of any kind holds its own pretty nearly through life, in spite of all these same changes, as we have not far to look to find instances.

"I must premise that a million of the starry brain cells could be packed in a square inch, and that the surface of the convolutions has been estimated at 670 square inches, and their depth one-fifth of an inch. My illustration is derived from microscopic photography. I have a glass slide on which is a minute photographic picture which is exactly covered when the head of a small pin is laid upon it. In that little speck are clearly to be seen by a proper magnifying power the following objects: The Declaration of Independence, with easily recognized fac-simile of all the signers; the arms of all the original thirteen states, the Capitol at Washington, and very good portraits of all the Presidents of the United States from Washington to Mr. James K. Polk. These objects are distinguishable with a power of fifty diameters; with a power of three hundred any one of them becomes a sizeable picture. You may see if you will, the majesty of Washington on his noble features, or the will of Jackson in those hard lines of the long face, crowned with that bristling head of hair in a perpetual state of electrical divergence and centrifugal self-assertion.

"Remember that each of these faces is the record of a life. Now recollect that there was an interval between the exposure of the negative in the Camera and its development by pouring a wash over it, when all these pictured objects existed potentially, but absolutely and incapable of recognition, in a space of collodion film which a pin's head would cover, and then think what Alexandria libraries, what congressional-document loads of positively intelligible characters, such as one look of the recording angel would bring out, many of which we can develop at will, or which come before our eyes unbidden, like Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, might be held in these convolutions of the brain which wrap the talent entrusted to us, too often as the folded napkin of the slothful servant hid the treasure his master lent him."

The above hypothesis so ingeniously stated and illustrated by Dr. Holmes, is far more credible, than the supposition that mind is an immaterial spirit-entity residing in the brain, and using its dwelling-place as an organ for the expression of its ideas.

I must right here express my admiration of Dr. Maudsley's style, which to my notion is unequalled by that of any other scientific writer of the age. He never smothers his ideas in a multitude of words. It is evident that he did not graduate at a circumlocution office. What he wishes to say he proceeds forthwith to utter without recourse to those provoking preliminaries, and affected apologies that lumber the pages and obscure the meaning of many of his cotemporaries. Hitherto eminent physiologists for the most part have felt themselves hampered in giving expression to their real opinion of the relations of body and mind, by the metaphysical notions about the mind so prevalent in most schools of theology. But Dr. Maudsley dares to speak the truth as he understands it, without begging the tolerance or deprecating the censure of any school of philosophy or religion. How refreshing it is to read the matured convictions of a well educated, honest-hearted, clear headed, truth loving, and plain-spoken man! Perhaps you have read Edwards and Calvin, and McCosh on the Will. Perhaps you have admired the subtlety of their logic and the force of their reasoning. If so you will find that Dr. Maudsley is a terrible iconoclast. He appears to delight in exposing popular shams and in demolishing popular ideas. Nothing can excel the terseness and vigor of the following passages:

"Physiologically, we cannot choose but reject the will; volition we know, and will we know, but the will, apart from particular acts of volition or will, we cannot know. To interpose such a metaphysical entity between reflection and action thereupon, would bring us logically to the necessity of interposing a similar entity between the stimulus to the spinal cord and its reaction. Thus, instead of unraveling the complex by the help of the more simple, we should obscure the simple by speculations concerning the complex. As physiologists, we have to deal with volition as a function of the supreme center, following reflections, varying in quality and quantity as its cause varies, strengthened by education and exercise, enfeebled by disuse, decaying with decay of structure, and always needing for its outward expression, the educated agency of the subordinate motor centers. We have to deal with will, not as a single, undecomposable faculty, unaffected by bodily conditions, but as a result of organic changes in the supreme centers, affected as certainly and seriously by disorder of them as our motor faculties are by disorders of their centers. Loss of power of will is one of the earliest and most characteristic symptoms of mental derangement; and whatever may have been thought in times past, we know well now that the loss is not the word of some unclean spirit that has laid its hands upon the will, but the direct effect of physical disease."

Dr. Maudsley has no patience with, or sympathy for, the theory of eminent theologians who have labored so assiduously to derrogate the body. He never calls it a "vile tenement," a "prison-house of clay," or "the house that the soul lives in." Having made cases of mental derangement a special study, he found that insanity was invariably caused or accompanied by nervous disorders. Very properly, therefore, he treats insanity as a branch of medical practice. According to the old notions of metaphysical psychology, the mind as an immaterial entity could not come into contact with the body though residing in it, and consequently medical treatment for insanity was thought to be most absurd, as indeed it would have been had that theory possessed the least foundation in fact. The past treatment of the insane, given up to the tender mercies of coarse and ignorant jailers, will for all time to come constitute a dark page in the history of Christian enlightenment and civilization. The savage cruelties of the past centuries, exercised on the most unfortunate of patients, were largely owing to the basis of treatment, founded on the notion of man's double nature. "The habit of viewing mind as an intangible entity or incorporeal essence, which science inherited from theology, prevented men from subjecting its phenomena to the same method of investigation as other natural phenomena; its disorders were thought to be an incomprehensible affliction, and in accordance with the theological notion, due to the presence of an evil spirit in the sufferer, or the enslavement of the soul by sin, or anything but their true cause—bodily disease."—J. H. Whitmore, in Bible Banner

GOOD TIDINGS.

A new work of 425 pp., in large, clear type. Sent, post-paid, to any address, for $1, in cloth binding, or 50c. in paper covers. A discount of one-third to ministers and theological students; also to those who purchase one dozen or more copies.

The design of the book is to give an exposition of Bible truth, relating especially to the nature of man, the future dwelling-place of the righteous, the condition of the dead, the time of the Christian's reward, the destiny of the wicked, the personal coming of Christ, the signs of the times, and our proximity to the judgment. This is a book to read, a book to study, a book to lend, a book to sell. Send on your orders at once. We wish to scatter it by thousands. Let the friends of truth lend a vigorous hand to introduce it everywhere!

THE Chicago fire affects us financially, as it does thousands of others outside the city. We trust those owing the office will pay up as soon as possible, that we may meet our liabilities promptly.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 24, 1871.

WANTED—New Subscribers.

THE mee[illegible] with Mt. Joy church (Southern Illin[illegible] necessarily postponed. Let all interested read the corrected notice.

"I will never leave thee." J. C. Ryle says, that the original Greek of this passage implies—"I will never, no never, no, nor ever forsake thee." What can we ask more?

No Beecher ever uttered wiser words than those by Miss Catherine E. Beecher in a late Independent: 'The Bible is written for the common people in the popular language, and is to be interpreted by the rules used by them in common life.'

IF immaterialist journals are not more careful in what they say and quote about the offices of the brain in the human organism, they will be making converts to materialism ere they are aware. They tell the plain truth quite frequently, as to thought emanating from the brain.

A Hindoo reformer charges that a professedly Christian nation—England—is responsible for the introduction of the use of spirituous liquors into India. Liquor shops are allowed by the British government in every village, and vice, desolation and death follow in their train. Sad work for Christian (?) lands to be about in the last days.

IN his last letter home the editor says: "This morning a bear walked up to our cabin door. A few mornings since one visited the neighborhood, and took a pig in his 'arms,' or fore legs, and walked off with it upon his hind legs. Three bears run a bee-hunter, who had no gun, out of the woods a short time since. But I do not think they will drive me away till my work is done."

WE give elsewhere from an able New York journal, a striking article upon the prospects of the world. We omit the conclusion, which is merely a statement of delusive hopes of the future—hopes that the forces which have hitherto failed to insure peace, will yet triumph. When will the lesson be learned, that the world will reach its final destiny, not by progression, but by a sweeping revolution guided by the hand of the Almighty?

THE dry weather continues, and fires are in sight on every side. One thing is becoming very evident—the earth can burn; and not a few hearts have been made to throb with fear that these fires are but precursors of the final conflagration. Better seek an interest in Christ. If he is your portion, you cannot fear, but will rather rejoice over every token that bespeaks the end of the temporal and the near approach of the eternal.

THE mortality of immortals! We commend the study of this topic to immaterialists, generally; and especially to those who in obituaries speak of death as both 'mortality' and the 'gate of life,' and declare its subjects are 'crowned,' and yet look to the resurrection for comfort and reward and reunion. Do be something and somewhere! If victory crowns and rewards come at death, they do not come at the resurrection. Take a stand somewhere, and don't mix things so.

'I confess I am unable to perceive how death or the grave ever could have any power over the soul of any man.'—Cor. Proph. Times.

If this man will read the following Scriptures he may revise his theology: Is. 38: 17; Ps. 33: 10; 49: 15; or Ps. 30: 3, where David praises God that his soul is brought up from the grave. And many more like passages might be quoted, showing plainly that death and the grave do have power over the soul, and, once dead, hold it with a grasp that only the Infinite can loose.

A CORRESPONDENT says that in the course of a private discussion upon the merits of 'King James' Translation,' his opponent affirmed that the scholars who made that version had the very manuscripts written by the apostles themselves; and he wishes to know if there is any truth in the assertion.

We reply, none at all! The oldest manuscripts accessible to King James' translators, were not older than of the sixth century. The oldest now in existence are the Alexandrian, the Vatican and Sinaitic, of which the last is the earliest, and dates probably from the middle of the fourth century. The assertion that the original manuscripts written by the authors of the New Testament are now in existence, preserved in London, betrays either brazen impudence, or dense ignorance.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

The calls for laborers are unceasing. But the call is not for men (or women—for both are properly engaged in preaching the gospel) who simply wear the badge of the ministry, but for effective workers.

The church is undoubtedly largely to blame for the scarcity of ministers, in that she fails to properly provide for their necessities, even. Hence many men, who if properly supported would have time to "study" to that end, now fail to show themselves approved in the ministry, because quite all their time, and much of their strength is absorbed in some secular avocation, which leaves them no opportunity to fulfill the exhortation of the great apostle to improve their gift.

And we frankly confess that we have no sympathy for those calls for help where the preacher is expected to make all the sacrifice. Many want preachers, and say, 'We will give you a home, while you stay?' Very good. And if this is, honestly, all you can do, it is enough. But be the sacrifice more or less, when a preacher is invited to hold meetings, those who invite him should frankly state the case, just as it is, and tell him whether or no they mean the sacrifice to be his, or whether they purpose to bear the burden with him.

But we are not writing of the churches' duties to the ministry in this article; it is the ministers themselves we want. We are in need of men who after sitting down and counting the cost can cheerfully resolve to give all for Christ, hope for no adequate return here, but have respect to the recompense of reward that enabled Moses to renounce the royal throne of Egypt. We want men who are willing to begin in the lowest places and climb up. We want men with higher conceptions of a minister's duty, than the idea that it means to preach twice on Sunday, and and set an example of laziness to the flock during the rest of the week. We want studious men, who will search everywhere for light on the word of God, that they may be able to interest and teach others. We want pious men, who will see nothing gained in a converted head, unless it is accompanied by a changed heart.

We do not ask for perfect men: we know they cannot be had. But we do ask for men who are striving to attain to that high standard—the measure of the stature of perfect men in Christ Jesus.

We cannot pick them out. They must select themselves. Not every one who feels anxious for the salvation of souls is called to preach. But many who have been called have failed to obey. Sometimes they have excused themselves by demanding some supernatural evidence of the divine will in the matter. But this is wrong. You should listen to your own convictions; you should obey the voice of the church. You need not, and should not thrust yourself forward; but if you have convictions on the subject, first count the cost; make up your mind if you can afford the sacrifice; and if you decide that you can, then alone, before God, consecrate yourself with a solemn vow to go forward in duty as he may open the way for you.

Many useful preachers made this secret vow years ago, and were afterwards astonished when the request came for them "to preach." But the vow was on them; they obeyed; and one step led to another until they found themselves unable to supply a tithe of the demand for their labors.

We do not need men who "know it all"—to use a common expression. We have enough of that class—too many, already. We want men who will be willing to learn: learn by experience, and learn by observation. The minister who goes from place to place committing the same errors of judgment everwhere, thereby injuring himself and the churches, is culpably negligent, and deserves all he suffers. The man who preaches his audiences away from him, instead of to him, ought to find out the reason why it is so. It is of no use for him to kick against the goads, and persist in following his own ideas: if this is the general result of his preaching, either he has missed his calling, or he is to be blamed for it. If his sermons are too dry, he should try to make them juicier. If they drive away their hearers by their length, they should be shortened. If the preacher is prone to ride a hobby, or to indulge sameness, he should study variety in his topics. In short he should seek by every means that does not involve the violation of principle, to make his message attractive as well as edifying.

On the other hand he should not "despise the day of small things," but be encouraged by every bud promising fruit of his labors; and work perseveringly against outward obstacles, as well as the difficulties referred to above.

What shall be done? Even as we write there comes a call from Oregon for a preacher. Where are the laborers? And what are they doing?

HINTS FOR CRITICS.

We suggest that the writers, especially immaterialists, upon the passage usually alluded to by the expression, "Paul's desire to depart," take pains to meet the following points.

1. Whether or no the word desire in the original is a strong superlative, or simply means a mere wish, or ordinary mental emotion.

2. How Paul made the blunder of [illegible] the same letter of recovery [illegible] dangerous sickness as a deliverance, and of death as an event that he desired above every thing else.

3. Give a literal translation of Paul's language, of just his words, with the precise grammatical construction he used.

4. Show how eis to analusai can be consistently rendered to depart.

5. Whether analuo is not sometimes grammatically rendered return.

6. How that the sense and laws of grammar forbid that rendering here.

7. Show that when Paul says "to die is gain," he means gain to himself.

8. Show how Paul come to say that he would not choose between life and death; that he was in a strait between them; and yet in the very moment that he announced his strait, declare a strong desire to die, as the best possible event that could happen to him.

There are some other points, but these will suffice until they are cleared up.

ABOUT THAT CHART.

Br. Wm. L. Himes: Permit me to ask you a few questions about the proposed New Chart. That a good Prophetic Chart is much needed by the ministry and other Bible students, is true. But it should be sufficiently large, and the symbols and figures sufficiently large and separate as to be clearly distinguished by an audience in large houses and tents.

1. Is it to be so arranged?
2. What are to be its special features differing from others?
3. What is to be its size?
4. Whose scale of chronology do you intend to follow?
5. Do you intend that it shall definitely locate the commencement and terminus of the prophetic periods, or only give them on a probable scale?

A reply to these points may produce a greater interest on the subject of aiding the enterprize.

I. C. WELLCOME.

REPLY.

The above are fair questions. We are glad they have been proposed. We answer them in their order.

1. It is to be so arranged that the figures may be clearly distinguished by the most distant portions of the congregation in any ordinary hall or chapel.

2. Size, clearness, number of the symbols displayed, and their combination.

3. We have not yet determined the exact size. But up and down it will be about five or six feet; and long enough to contain all the matter promised on it. It will roll sideways, and may be all displayed at once, or only a portion of it, as the lecturer may choose.

4. We do not intend it strictly for a chronological chart, but for a chart of prophetic symbols. We shall give on it several of the best chronologies, in a way to aid lecturers who may wish to compare them.

We do not intend to make it a definite time chart. We shall simply illustrate the prophetic periods, with their probable eras. Each lecturer can then apply them according to his own views of their significance.

In short, we intend, if we are sustained in the enterprise, to issue a chart of the prophecies that will supersede all others, because of its comprehensiveness, clearness, and beauty. We propose not a chart of our intepretation of prophecy; but a map of the symbols, themselves, to be interpreted by the lecturer or preacher.

PLEDGES.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000) whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

The Toulon, Ill. church proposes to take a monthly contribution for the tract cause. Where there are regular meetings, this is an excellent plan.

Br. Saml. Morrison, says: I will do what I can; for it was by reading THE TIMES and tracts that I received light and was led to change my views. I was brought up to believe in immortality of the soul, endless torment, etc., and supposed they were right. But now I see plainly enough they were not so.

Br. and Sr. Butters, Le Sueur Co. Minn. We will lay by ten c. a week as long as the Lord gives it to us. Send us some of the little envelopes.

Br. John Manwell, Iowa. I have wondered why you did not stop THE TIMES, I have been so behind hand. but it has been a welcome visitor. I love the truth it maintains, and think it gets better and better. Oh! how good it is to walk with Christ here, in full hope of his coming soon to give us crowns of glory and immortality.

Sr. Hannah Reed of Louisville sends a new subscriber, paid in advance as "an encouragement." And it is so. The new subscriber was obtained by lending her own paper for others to read. See to it, that any one who will read it, has THE TIMES.

THE CHICAGO FIRE.

We have been so busily employed that we have had no time to write upon the lesson of the fire. But we have given our readers the best accounts we could obtain; and next week "Our Pulpit" will be filled with a discourse from Br. F. Burr, delivered on the Sunday after the disaster. The lesson of the prevailing fires is that "all is vanity!" God is warning the world to be ready for the final conflagration. But oh, so few heed his calls. Still it is the time for his servants to work. The world is startled; and if we faithfully proclaim our message, some will listen. We should be sanctified "soul, body, and spirit" to the work.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

The specimen page of our proposed Lesson Papers for Sunday Schools has called forth some very favorable responses. But we would like to hear from a few others. We would especially like the opinion of the editor of the Young Pilgrim; and to know if we can have his co-operation in the enterprise.

A GENEROUS GIFT.

Br. Daniel Clow has given us to aid in publishing the new Chart of the Prophetic Symbols, one of his justly famed Hand-raking Reapers.

The regular price of this machine is $160. But as the harvest season is over for this year, and the means for the Chart will be needed soon, he has made a reduction of FORTY DOLLARS in the price in favor of the buyer—a discount of twenty-five per cent—sufficient interest, surely, upon an investment of $120, the price at which we will sell the machine if taken soon.

Who will help us, and at the same time help themselves by a timely investment. See advertisement.

NEW TRACTS—DELAYED.

We have manuscripts of several new tracts, which we were hoping to publish soon. But the fire in Chicago destroyed the only electrotyping establishment within our reach that would do work at reasonable figures. Hence we can publish nothing more that needs to be electrotyped or stereotyped for some little time. Messrs. Marder, Luse & Co. will fit up up their establishment at the earliest possible moment. But a considerable delay is inevitable.

We are sorry to announce that the plates of a new tract by Br. O. R. Fassett, some twenty pages, were destroyed. We regret this delay, for it was the finest thing we have seen upon "Paul's desire to depart." (Phil. 1: 21, 22.)

An Alternative.

If our home be not in heaven, where God is upon his throne, where the angels are, and where no sin is found, then will it be in hell (Gehenna), with the devil and his angels. For these are the final and eternal destiny of man......The earth and all its tenantry shall have fulfilled its end and passed away, the righteous in glory, the ungodly in hell (Gehenna), after which no change is to take place; if so, it has not been revealed. These theories of "materalism," "adventism," "soul-sleeping," and many other kinds of unbelief are dangerous to the welfare of the church of God, and are influencing those who are weak and unstable in their belief. Sooner or later these cloaks of infidelity must be fairly and squarely met, and we hope and pray that our dear brethren who have a tendency to be led away, will pray God to help them contend for primitive Christianity. Amen. The carnally minded desire to remain on earth, but the Christian pants for immortality, and a home in the city, whose builder and maker is God.

—The above we extract from a deciple monthly. We have no comments—only we would like to see the writer's family-physician and learn from him how anxious he is for death and glory. We think the Doctor's testimony would show that like all the rest—he is ready to go to glory, when he can't help himself!

I Come Quickly.

In the seventh verse of the last chapter of the Revelation of Jesus Christ, he tells us, "Behold I come quickly." A little further on this monition is repeated, "Behold I come quickly." Lest there be a believer whose dull ears should not have caught the sound before, his very last words are, "Surely I come quickly." To this thrice repeated warning the beloved disciple, as our representative, makes answer, "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Seventeen hundred years have gone, and our Lord's "quickly" yet tarries. Nevertheless his virgin church may well stand waiting with lamps trimmed. Events accumulate fast, pointing to the Bridegroom's speedy coming. We know not just how soon the time may be, "at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning." But there are many things which indicate that the time is approaching. Many good men have interpreted Daniel's prophecy of 1335 days (or years) after the apostasy to have been recently fulfilled, and their expectation of the downfall of the Pope seems to a large extent realized.

Recent events recall Christ's words, "Great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines and pestilences."

Certainly during the last eighteen months such things have held high carnival. Hurricanes have swept the seas, earthquakes and tidal waves have overwhelmed city and country, in ruin. The Black Death in Barcelona, and the pestilence and famine in Persia have been appalling. The cholera is again marching westward.

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars."

During the past two years there have been unusual auroral displays in the heavens. Richard A. Proctor, one of the ablest men of England, says recently in a scientific article in the London Daily News:

"In whatever way it may be brought about, certain it is that disturbances of the sun are reflected in terrestial auroral displays. The auroras which have occurred lately were predicted by astronomers who know that the sun is undergoing, during the present year, disturbances of the most amazing nature. Solar spots of various dimensions have been counted by the hundred of late, and we now know that when the sun is thus spotted, our earth sympathizes with the central orb. Thrilling from pole to pole with magnetic tremor, she spreads out over both hemispheres the auroral banners that indicate the progress of electric revolutions."

"And upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity."

Certainly of late there has been sad distress and perplexity in sunny France; the widows and orphan children of Germany have not yet forgotten their sorrow. There is not a tranquil nation in Europe, excepting, perhaps, free little Switzerland, and some of the minor kingdoms of the far North.

Daniel tells us among the signs of the end, "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." Verily the wicked are doing wickedly here in New York and elsewhere in these days; but, on the contrary, there never has been a time when so many believers were yearning after heart purification. Those who feel it their special duty to urge the church to higher consecration and fuller trust, tell us that the impetus that has been recently been given to the work is wonderful. Everywhere in the land Christian people are beginning to feel desires after inward whiteness.

Just when the Lord will come we cannot tell. We care not to spend our time in efforts to divine the day or the hour. But yet we believe that the creation groaneth, travailing in pain, ready to be delivered.

The practical lesson of the times is this: WATCH! Ye know not in what hour your Lord will come. WORK! Your time for working in this sin-cursed world, where there is so much work to do, may be very short. CONSECRATE ALL! It is no time for half-hearted men or measures. He hath redeemed us with great cost; we owe him all we have and are. TRUST FULLY! Lean on the arm of him who holds in his fist countless worlds, and yet stoops to your most trivial wants. With him you can be made worthy to live in this great day; without him you can do nothing.—Christian at Work.

The Prospects of the World.

Some twenty or twenty-five years ago, the idea got into the heads of large numbers of enthusiastic people that an era of peace and peaceful progress, or a sort of millennial era, was about to dawn upon the world, and that nations, having at last realized the evils and folly of war, would henceforth dwell together in the pacific fraternity of humanity, advancing in civilization from one step to another, and placidly enjoying the fruits of knowledge, science, freedom and Christianity. Everybody of mature age must remember the hopes that were then excited. We heard eloquent orators, after dilating upon the "horrors of war," argue that nations were now too highly enlightened ever again to engage in such sanguinary and ruinous struggles as had previously disgraced the human race. Poets began to celebrate, in lofty strain, the approach of the era of universal peace. The pulpit was full of hope that the predictions of the ancient Hebrew seers were at last about to be fulfilled. The newspapers argued that the spread of intelligence and knowledge would render wars impossible, and that the progress of national acquaintanceship would result in universal fraternity. "Peace Societies" were established in all civilized countries, and meetings to promote the "peace cause" were attended by enthusiastic multitudes. Statesmen began to see that wars were necessarily damaging, and spoke of the establishment of international courts of adjudication, or a "Congress of Nations," where the principles of justice and public welfare might be brought to the settlement of all disputes. It seemed that at last the happy day was about to dawn, when, as Robert Burns had sung—

> Man to man, the world o'er,
> Would brothers be, and a' that.

Or as the angel had proclaimed, there should be "peace on earth, and good will to man"—the happy time foreshadowed by Tennyson when he

> Dipped into the future, far as human eye could see,
> Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonders that would be,
> Till the war-drum throbbed no longer, and the battle flags were furled.

But how, in the meantime, has the splendid prospect then held out to us been realized? Alas! hardly ever, in the history of this war-blasted world, has there been more continuous war than in the past twenty years, or the years which immediately followed the time of these glittering predictions of universal peace! Hardly ever, if ever, in the sanguinary annals of the human race, have there been, in an equal period of time, wars more destructive than the six or eight gigantic struggles since waged by the civilized nations of the earth—the most highly civilized nations.

The statement may appear startling, but we do not make it carelessly. Let us briefly indicate the wars of our time, as they have lately been accurately collected by a writer to whom we owe the leading idea of this article.

First, after the popular revolutionary struggles of 1849, came the Crimean war in 1854—when Great Britain, France, Turkey and Sardinia were arrayed against Russia—which lasted for two years—in which there were sanguinary battles at Balaklava, Inkermann, the Alma, the Malakoff and other places, and which ended in the humiliation of Russia after the Czar had died broken hearted.

Three years later, or in 1859, came what was termed the Italian war—when France and Italy were arrayed against Austria—which was of but few month's duration, but in which mighty battles were fought with immense carnage—battles like Solferino and Magenta, at the former of which forty thousand men were killed or wounded—and which terminated in the humiliation of Austria, and her loss of her Italian province of Lombardy.

Next in order came the American civil war of 1861, one of the most stupendous and destructive wars in the history of the human race, which was of four years' duration, in which not less than four millions of men fought, and half a million were killed or wounded—a war of a hundred great battles, from Manassas to Donalson, from Vicksburg and Chattanooga to Petersburg and Richmond.

Less than two years after its close came the great war of Prussia and Italy against Austria in 1866, a war which lasted less than half a year, but in which one of the greatest and most sanguinary battles of modern times was fought, the battle of Sadowa, in which nearly forty thousand men were killed or wounded; a war which resulted in the humiliation of Austria and her exclusion from the German Confederation.

Next in order of time comes the tremendous war, fearful in its carnage, profound in its results, which broke out in July of last year between Germany and France—a war illustrated at Weissenburg and Gravelotte, Metz and Sedan, the siege of Strasburg and the siege of Paris—a war of huge battles, in which twenty thousand, forty thousand, sixty thousand men were killed or wounded—a war which ended in the destruction of the formidable army of France, in the overthrow of the dazzling but demoralized empire of the Third Napoleon, and in the seizure by the victorious Germans of the eastern provinces of France.

Next and last in this brief review comes the horrible war which raged around Paris in the present year, from the beginning of March to the close of May. All we [illegible] to say about this most cruel and savage of wars is that it has just been fought in Paris, the "capital of civilization"—city of splendor and luxury, art and science, of polish and elegant manners, of gardens and boulevards, galleries and libraries—city of a thousand newspapers—city of cosmopolitan attraction and illustrious history. It was in "gay Paris" that the most ferocious of modern wars—a civil war, at that—has just been fought.

We will say nothing of the other wars of the last twenty years—the sanguinary war carried on by the British Government in the East Indies from 1857 to 1859—the war of France and Great Britain against China in 1860—the Maximilian war in Mexico from 1862 to 1866—the Danish war in 1865—the Paraguayan war in 1866, or other minor wars that might be mentioned. We have already shown to a sufficient extent how sanguinary has been the record of the human race for the last twenty years.

These numerous and baleful wars came upon the world while yet eloquent orators were dilating upon the "horrors of war," and philanthropists were proclaiming the advent of the era of universal peace, and peace societies were making their demonstrations, while the telegraph united the nations, and science was constantly winning new triumphs, and industry, commerce and invention were ameliorating the condition of the human race, and freedom and knowledge were spreading, and the principles of justice and Christianity appeared to be gaining new power over nations and governments. Mankind had just begun to enjoy the prospect of universal and perpetual peace and fraternity,—had just begun to dream of the Golden Age, when the devouring flames burst forth nearly over the whole earth.—Scottish-American Journal.

AT HOME.

The Cradle and the Grave of the Fire.

Nothing could be more ignoble and commonplace than this quarter of Chicago. I reached it by crossing over the long drawbridge at Twelfth St., which was swinging gracefully on its pivot as I came. The streets were all filled with wagons loaded down with furniture, which exposed to the gaze of the loungers the broken life of the family. The air of the quarter was wholly foreign and not quite reputable. Even the little church of St. Wenzel added to the Bohemian air of the district. German volunteers were guarding the relief stores from hungry Czechs, who would make irregular forays on the provisions. Both sides thought their dignity required they should speak English instead of their native tongue. "Keep your fingers von dem pretzels off, or you'll git a het on you" "Yes! I bet you got a heap o' style, don't it." These colloquies sometimes give us moments of conjecture as to the final doom of our language. I found Dekoven St. at last, a mean little street of shabby wooden houses, with dirty door-yards and unpainted fences falling to decay. It had no look of Chicago about it. Take it up bodily and drop it out on the prairie and its name might be Dickskillet station as well as anything else. The street was unpaved and littered with old boxes and mildewed papers, and dozens of geese wandered about with rustic familiarity. Slatternly women lounged at the gates and bare legged children kept up an evidently traditional warfare of skirmishing with the geese. On the south side of the street not a house was touched. On the north only one remained. All the rest were simply ashes. There were no piles of ruin here. The wooden hovels left no landmarks except here and there a stunted chimney too squat to fall. The grade had been raised in places and left untouched in others, so that now, as in the North Division, the roads seemed like viaducts, and scorched and blackened trees seemed growing out of sodded cellars. But of all the miserable plain stretching out before me to the burning coal-heaps in the northern distance, I was only interested in the narrow block between Dekoven and Taylor streets, now quite flat and cool, with small gutter boys marching through the lots, some kicking with bare feet in the light ashes for suspected and sporadic coals, and others prudently mounted on stilts, which sunk from time to time in the spongy soil and caused the young acrobats to descend ignominiously and pull them out. This was the Mecca of my pilgrimage, for here the fire began. One squalid little hovel alone remained intact in all that vast expanse. A warped and weather-beaten shanty of two rooms, perched on the piles, with its planes nailed half way down them like dirty pantalets. There was no stabler hut in Chicago nor in Tipperary. But it stood there safe, while a city had perished before it and around it. It was preserved by its own destructive significance. It was made sacred by the curse that rested on it—a curse more deadly than that which darkened the lintels of the house of Thyestes. For out of that house, last Sunday night, came a woman with a lamp to the barn behind the house, to milk the cow with the crumpled temper, that kicked the lamp, that spilled the kerosene, that fired the straw, that burned Chicago. And there to this hour stands that craven little house, holding on tightly to its miserable existence.

I stood on the sidewalk opposite, as in duty bound calling up the appropriate emotions. A strange, wrinkled face on a dwarfish body came up and said, "That's a dhreadful sight." I assented, and he continued in a melancholy croon: "Forty year I've lived here—and there wasn't a brick house but wan, and that was the Lakeside House, and it's gone now; an' av ye'll belave me, Soor, I niver see a fire loike that." I believed him thoroughly, and he went away. My emotions not being satisfactory from a front view of the shanty, I passed around to the rear, and there found the Man of the House sitting with two of his friends. His wife, Our Lady of the Lamp—freighted with heavier disaster than that which Psyche carried to the bed side of Eros—sat at the window, knitting. I approached the Man of the House and gave him good-day. He glanced up with sleepy, furitive eyes. I asked him what he knew about the origin of the fire. He glanced at his friends and said, civilly, he knew very little; he was waked up about nine o'clock by the alarm, and fought from that time to save his house; at every sentence he turned to his friends and said, "I can prove it by them," to which they nodded assent. He seemed fearful that all Chicago was coming down upon him for prompt and integral payment of that $200,000,000 his cow had kicked over. His neighbors say this story is an invention dating from the second day of the fire. There was something unutterably grotesque in this ultimate atom feeling a sense of responsibility for a catastrophe so stupendous, and striving by a fiction, which must have heavily taxed his highest powers of imagination, to escape a reckoning he was already free from,

> Like his fellows the midge and the nit,
> Through minuteness, to wit.

Having seen the beginning of the fire we thought it worth while to track it through its rise and its grandeur to its magnificent end after a glorious day's life. There is a very singular caprice of the fire in the North Division, equally remarkable with that in Dekoven st. The house of Mr. Mahlon Ogden, a large frame building standing very near the street, is entirely untouched, while the entire region around it is laid bare. Even the church across the street, which stands entirely detached, is destroyed. The escape of the Ogden mansion is as complete and mysterious as if it had worn an invisible coat of asbestos. The fire was no less singular in what it attacked than in what it spared. Just beyond this house, which would seem with its dry seasoned pine a most appetizing morsel for the fire-devil, there lies a green and tranquil grave-yard, with nothing in it to attract a well regulated fire. But this fiery tempest has swept in among these graves and tombstones, has sought out with an apparent disregard of conducting material, the humble wooden head-boards, and has even gnawed the marble in many places. The last expiring efforts of the flames were in the quiet German cemetery at the gate of Lincoln Park, by the shining beach of the lake. It is here that hundreds of the hunted fugitives of the North Division, hotly chased by the fire, came to pass that first miserable night of hunger and cold. Loads of household goods were brought here, and dashed carelessly upon the ground. As the hard night wore on, and the cold wind came blowing in from the "unsalted sea," chilling the blood after the fever of the day, these unhappy people began to break up and burn the furniture they had saved, and brought so far with labor and pain. Everywhere you may see the traces of that wretched vigil of heart-breaking desperation. At one point was a pile of half burned picture-frames profusely gilded and elaborately carved, and at another there lie the scattered fragments of a richly-inlaid cabinet. A library chair has its back burned away and its upholstery wrinkled and singed with the watch-fire. But there are other and more revolting evidences of the misery which on that night gave many over into infernal guidance. I passed one modest grave, near the scene of a night-camp. A heart was carved upon the wooden tomb stone by pious hands, and into this touching emblem a steel fork had been driven by some brutal fist. Above the outraged blazon were the tender words, Ruhe Sanft ("Sleep Softly").

The scenes witnessed in that quiet graveyard during that night of horror were enough to appall the stoutest temperaments. A throng of half maddened sufferers struggled through the grove looking for their friends and finding no one, oppressed by a weight of anxiety that caused them to neglect their physical discomforts. Delicate women came as they escaped from death in thin fitting night clothes blown about by the early autumn wind. Several were in a state which demanded the gentlest care and sympathy. Many little children were thrown into the crowd too young to speak their parents' names. And upon all the crushing blow of an enormous and irremediable disaster had fallen and rendered them for the moment incapable of rational judgment. I heard of one company of German singers from a low concert saloon, who flew out into the night with nothing but their tawdry evening dresses, who sat shivering and silent in a huddled group in the lee of a tomb-stone, their bare arms and shoulders blue and pinched, and the tinsel flowers in their hair, shining with frost. They talked little, but sometimes they cheated their misery with songs, and it had a strange effect to hear in that gloomy and sorrow-stricken place the soft impurities of the Vienna muse, and the ringing and joyous jodel of the Tyrol. Near by the fragments of a Methodist congregation had improvised a prayer-meeting, and the sound of psalms and supplication went up mingled with that worldly music to the deep and tolerant heaven.

The fire could get no hold on the green wood of Lincoln Park and so gave it up, and went furiously off to the left and ate up all the pretty suburban houses on that side, and ended only when the wide prairie lay before it with nothing more to burn. At the corner of Willow and Orchard sts., the noble outlines of the Newberry School bounds the line of devastation as if to say that the future hope of Chicago, the power that shall yet rise superior to calamity, is Intelligence.—N. Y. Tribune.

Chicago Items.

– – – Don't believe all you read about the Chicago fire; there are many gross misstatements.

– – – It is quite certain that the pecuniary losses by the Chicago fire cannot be less than $300,000,000.

– – – Mr. Cheney's church is burned up—which relieves the Episcopal body of a controversy likely to do it no small injury.

– – – It is now said the spirits predicted the great fire. The curious point is, that not a soul of the Spiritists took advantage of the prediction to either sell out or move away.

– – – The Methodists lost their Publishing House, with press and all fixtures and stock, five churches, and much property belonging to the Garrett Biblical Institute and North Western University—their theological schools.

– – – A lady saved her canary bird and music box. At the place where she rested on the street, the bird began to sing cheerily, while the music box played "Home, Sweet Home!" bringing tears to the eyes of many whose homes had been licked up by the flames.

– – – Mountain fires prevail throughout the length of California.

– – – The Canadians are worrying about another Fenian invasion.

– – – The late elections—Ohio, Iowa, Pennsylvania,—all went Republican.

– – – Grain is going East from Chicago at the rate of 400,000 bushels a day.

– – – The prevailing epidemic of crime appears to be attempts to burn cities and towns. They are numerously reported.

– – – A hurricane in Hanover, Mich. destroyed the Methodist church, by which we understand the house not the people.

– – – Gold mines in Winnipeg, or reports that they are there, have sent hundreds into that region, who hope to get rich suddenly. Better stay at home.

– – – In the last three years the debt of New York city has been doubling every year. By Jan. 1, it will reach $120,000,000. No one dare say how much of this has been stolen.

– – – The Mormon trial has begun. The testimony, thus far, is definite and clear. It remains to be seen if the government will carry out its good begun work, and put down, or out, this infamous system.

– – – A new kind of type for the blind has been invented by Reuben Vose, a New York broker, by the use of which it will cost only $2 to print a Bible, instead of $50, as at present, and to further complete the system, a printing press has been constructed by which the blind can print for themselves, enabling them to carry on correspondence with their friends as well as those with eyes.

– – – The European and North American Railway which was opened on the 17th inst, connects Halifax and some of the most valuable portions of the provinces by rail with Bangor, and consequently with Boston and New York and the great railroad centers of the country. It is expected when in proper running order, to be the means of reducing the time of passage between London and New York to six or seven days. The distance from Bangor to Halifax is 478 miles.

– – – From all parts of the world we continue to receive tidings of destruction of life and property by flood, fire, and shipwreck. In China, the storms and floods, of which we have previously had some accounts, are reported to have swept away three thousand persons. The Russian mining town of Bogoslovsk, in the Ural mountains, has been burned by incendiaries; and in addition to the great disasters in our own country already chronicled, we are beginning to receive accounts of numerous wrecks which occurred during the late gale along the Lake and Atlantic coast. At Halifax, ports on the St. Lawrence, and on both sides of the great Lakes, the devastation has been unusually heavy. These and the other great calamities that have overtaken us, are proofs of the helplessness of man, with all his proud achievements in science, against the unleashed elements by which he is surrounded.—*N. The village of Glen Haven, in Grand Traverse Bay, was entirely destroyed, and forty families were left homeless. The principal portion of Holland was burned, involving a loss of $500,000. In Isabella Co. the damage to pine timber is more than half a million of dollars, and nearly every settlement in the county was burned. At Forestville not a house was left standing. The village of Sand Beach was utterly consumed. Verona, Centre Harbor, and Forest Bay are burned. On Sunday fires were raging in various parts of Gratiot County. In Tuscola County the destruction of property was confined to the pine woods. In Newaygo County several mills were burned. At White Rock in Huron County, a village of 300 people, every one of the inhabitants was obliged to flee into the lake to escape being burned. Saginaw was saved by a sudden veering of the wind. The ravages by fire in the neighborhood of Swan Creek were terrible. The whole face of the country in that section has been completely devastated. The reports of losses constantly coming in are fearful, and

ARKANSAS TOUR.

Friday, Sept. 29. (continued.) Returned to Br. Shaw's on the way to Br. Robinson's, some fourteen miles, where I was to speak at night. On arrival we found Br. Brown, from Buckhorn. He had just got word of my arrival, and hastened to meet me here. Br. B. was formerly a preacher of the M. E. Church, South. He is now an out and out Adventist, and will unite with us. He is young and full of courage and hope. We soon got up the mules again, and drove on to the meeting, and arrived just in time. Br. Robinson had seated his large room in the log house, and we had a good gathering of his neighbors, to whom I spoke from 2 Pet. 1: 14, opening to them the prophecies. Brn. Rosebraugh and Brown followed. We were all weary. The nights now are very cold, but the days are warm as the summer, in the clear sunshine. I have not noticed a cloud for a week or more. Everything is dry and parched. Sky clear as crystal.

Br. Robinson, with whom we stopped, is a Baptist; but when the church cut off Eld. Rosebraugh, he took his stand with him for the truth. He is an old settler, has a large family, and has struggled to raise them up in this wild country. The war well nigh ruined him, and, indeed, about all the rest of the people in this region. The account they give of their sufferings from both armies is awful. But they have lived through it, and are now rising out of the ruin, though still poor. And those of them who have heard the Advent doctrine are cheered with the blessed hope of better times and things soon to come. My visit to them is of great comfort, and they will now take their stand for the truth, and fight their way through all opposition.

Saturday, Sept. 30. We all started early for Wallace's Creek Chapel—five miles. It is an open log house on the banks of the Creek, in the heavy timber, with no dwelling in sight. Our road was mostly through the thick and heavy timber, seeing an occasional log cabin on the way. We forded White River, safely, which is now very low. We also passed through some rich cotton fields, on the River Bottoms. The yields are large. But the people who live on the bottoms are mostly sick with chills, and many are moving to the hills for health and life. The bottom lands are worth $50 an acre; while the hills or high lands sell for from $3 to $10. Many choose these, with a view to health and life, though they make less money.

We had been kindly invited to attend this meeting, and the people generally wanted to hear me on the Advent. But while we were waiting for the minister, who was late, some of the officers of the church made up their minds that it would be a dangerous thing for me to speak; and so on the arrival of their preacher—who, by the way, is a liberal minded man, with a leaning toward the Adventists—he was instructed not to recognize me; so we came on to our next place of meeting, ten miles further, through the woods, up the Blue Mountain. Here we were welcomed to the log cabin, without a window, of Abraham Hester, an excellent old pilgrim, having some of the qualities of Father Abraham, as to the faith of good things to come. He was formerly of East Tennessee, and removed after the war, and settled on this mountain top. The land here is a dime an acre! And it is a rich, productive soil, when once cleared up.

Br. Hester's location is a beautiful one on the mountain top, surrounded with trees, and seemingly secluded from the rest of creation. The horizon seems to shut down within a few miles. One can see nothing beyond for the trees, over which the canopy of heaven closes like a vast dome. I never before reached such an isolated spot. This is getting as near out of the world, and about as high up in it as I have ever been. There is a fine mineral spring in the door yard, and with the best possible atmosphere, it is a fine region for life and health. Father Hester says there are a few farms left, and he would like to have some good Adventists come and settle upon them. He has good neighbors, and they live in peace. If any should wish to get out of the stirring and confused portion of the earth, and find a place of real retirement, they can have it here.

There are plenty of deer, bears, "catamounts," and other wild animals for hunting. The people are some annoyed with them, but in no danger. None have been injured as yet. Bruin helps himself to corn, and the panthers take a pig occasionally.

Sabbath, Oct. 1. I spoke in the log house at 11 a. m. on the evidences of Christ's Messiahship, and of his second coming. At the close I immersed Br. Brown, who has for years known only the substitute (sprinkling) for baptism. We baptised in a beautiful spring of water, clear as crystal. The basin consisted mostly of a rock, worn out by the water, and could not have been better fitted for the purpose. The people gathered about, and we had a solemn, and yet sociable season. It led us all to see the plan of God for future life—by the resurrection.

In the p. m. we gathered again. Br. Burr, a Baptist preacher, asked me some pertinent questions relating to the future of the wicked. I answered them in the hour's discourse. I think many received light on the passages relating to the rich man and Lazarus, thief on the cross, etc.

At night I spoke at Br. Hester's on the mountain top. It was a time of much blessedness. When Father Hester spoke, the whole house was in tears. At the close seven gave their names to become members of the new church. And so the work goes on.

Monday, Oct. 2. I rise refreshed with the mountain air, and my rest in the windowless log cabin. The poor have the gospel in this destitute region.

At 11 a. m. our place was filled again, when I spoke on church organization, and the duties of church officers. We then organized an Advent church, the place of meeting being at Buckhorn. Br. John B. Brown was ordained to the work of the ministry. He was chosen pastor of the church, and Br. Hester was chosen deacon. We then sat down to the Lord's Supper, all enjoying it much. This is the second church organized among the Adventists in Arkansas. The prospects are good for stability and growth. I rest from preaching to-night, and enjoy the mountain air, without cares or work. It seems almost like being out of the world. I have had no mail for more than two weeks, and I have not seen a secular paper for some time, to learn how the world goes on. I get The Times two weeks after publication, and am very glad of this. But these deprivations are nothing when we know that good is being done in the cause of Christ.

Friday, Oct. 3. To-day I preached the funeral sermon of Sr. Nancy Brooks, wife of J. W. Brooks, formerly of Jonesboro, Ill. She was converted through the agency of Dr. Fletcher, during his visit to White River, with his steamboat, some years ago. She was ever after a reader of the Voice, now Times, and enjoyed it as a weekly feast while she lived. Coming into this wild region, where there were no Adventists, she maintained and died in the faith. The last words she wrote in her Bible were "Blessed Hope," and I spoke from these words.

We had a large attendance, and the leading men of the place were out to hear. They wanted to know what we believed of the dead, which I was ready to tell them. I brought out the Bible view of the sleep of the dead, in entire unconsciousness until the resurrection. The people saw the truth, and some said if I remained much longer, and continued the discussion of Bible themes, the whole community would go with us. Two Baptist preachers were present, with whom I conversed on several, to them, difficult points as to the destiny of the wicked. One of them is said always to use in his public prayers this expression, when praying for the wicked: "Where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." I referred him to Is. 66: 24, as an exposition of Mk. 9: 43. The worms feed on dead carcasses, not "immortal souls," or "ghosts." It remains to be seen whether he will revise his prayer.

At night I preached in a log cabin to the mountaineers. I spoke on the subject of perfect peace, and helped them to the higher life. It was received with joy and much approval. After meeting they kept me singing from the Minstrel for an hour, delighted with the hymns and tunes, which were all new to them. I was as happy, yea more so than I could have been in a royal palace. Bless God for the privilege of preaching to this poor people.

Wednesday, Oct. 4. To-day heard of a Baptist minister in White Co., by the name of Lenox, who, it was reported, had been excommunicated from the Baptist Association for holding the Advent faith. It was a mere rumor, and I could hardly have faith in it. Yet I felt that the Lord had sent me here to do his good work, and search out his people, and that as a pioneer, I ought to follow up even reports of believers of the truth. Hence I at once despatched a messenger forty miles to find the man, and get a report from the man himself. After a journey of two days and a half the messenger returned with a note from Br. Lenox, who did not prove to be a myth.

He wrote me that my letter was as great a surprise as though it had dropped from heaven. And the books I sent him he said was just the thing he needed: they were invaluable. I had sent him Whitmore on Immortality, and Collins on Hades, &c.

He had, indeed, been cut off from his Association for preaching that men would not suffer eternal life in misery; and his church was to take up the subject and discuss it this week, after which he would meet with us in conference, the 22d inst. There is another minister, also, near him, holding the same views—Eld. Samuel Tarver, who has written upon this subject in the White Co. Record, an article we shall copy soon. He has the right ring. Light is spreading in this region.

At 10 a. m. Eld. Rosebraugh and myself started down the Blue Mountain for our next meeting, at Bickle's Cove. We were soon at the Christian Chapel in the valley—an open log house. We had a noble gathering of the leading minds of the country. I gave them two sermons on the glorious advent, and the time of the event. It was well received, and the truth is making some progress here. But we have no elements for a church as yet. I was invited to the hospitalities of Br. Henry Bickle, one of the first settlers. He has raised a family of sixteen children, none of whom have ever used tobacco, a remarkable circumstance when we consider that nearly all the men, women and children, even from seven years old, practice chewing, smoking or "dipping!" He is well-to-do, and made us welcome to his hospitalities.

The "Cove," or valley, is entirely surrounded by beautiful mountains. It contains some 500 acres of rich land, which yields good harvests of wheat, cotton, fruit etc. Land is ten dollars an acre. Plenty of wood, and springs of water.

From L D F Armstrong, Detroit Mich.

Though my present church relation is not directly with the Advent brethren, and though upon some points of faith I may differ with some of them, I nevertheless feel a very great sympathy with them in their views of life only in Christ, and no future eternal life out of him; and, also, in regard to the blessed hope of the gospel, the coming and kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. With my present light I am not able to see with you and others of our Advent brethren in your interpretation of the prophetical teachings of God's word; but I find the same difficulty with some of the views of prophecy put forth by our Millennarian brethren, in regard to the Age-to-come or the Millennial state. Whatever that state shall finally prove to be, it will be glorious. I think that too many are disposed to present their own speculations concerning it, rather than what the word plainly declares. But such a course is by no means confined to Advent brethren, as some would have us believe.

Oh! that the Lord would enable us by his grace to more fully appreciate our high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and ever keep us with the eye of our faith fixed, with strong hope, upon the mark of the prize, forgetting as it were the things which are behind and continually pressing forward. And let us not be satisfied with the bare letter of the word, but let us enter into and enjoy its spirit. Let us by faith ever feed upon him whom that word reveals as the Bread of Life, and the Water of Life, and the Tree of Life, the Resurrection and the Life, the Way, the Truth and the Life, Jesus Christ, our all and in all; out of whom we have nothing, but in whom we have all things. Let us think less of ourselves and of perfection in ourselves, and more of Christ and of our perfection in him, and of our present exaltation in him, the head even our living head, already exalted, and his body, the church, now in its humiliation, filling up the sufferings of Christ, but patiently waiting for and believing the day as very near, when the eternal glory shall be manifested, and they shall all together be manifested with him, seeing him as he is, and being made like him. Then, and then only, shall this mortality put on immortality, and death shall be swallowed up of life. Oh! that among those who are professedly receiving this crowning truth of God's word, there may none be found with whom it is a mere theory with which they think they can successfully battle against other opposing theories; but may they rather believe with the heart (the affections) unto righteousness. We may have all knowledge, but if we are destitute of love, we are but as sounding brass or tinkling cymbals. Many can talk the truth; but it is better to live it! This is the more excellent way; graces before gifts; the cross first, and afterward the crown, even the crown of righteousness, which is laid up for us all who love him and his appearing.

From C B White. Pike Co Mo.

This has been a year of years with me. My brethren have been increased. Old Babel's oven has been heated seven times hotter than usual, and principally from a quarter least to be expected; "For its was not an enemy that reproached me" [oppressed me Ps. 45: 12, 14.] "Yet nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." And the life that I live, is by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me. Bless God for his word, which is sweeter to my mouth than honey in the comb. "Wait on the Lord and do good: so shalt thou inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." (Ps. 37.)

That time has not yet come but is near, yea very near. I have oft times been disappointed, have thought, surely our beloved will come now. But my faith is as strong, if not stronger than ever.

The church has ever been subject to disappointments. See at the first advent, when her Lord had been cruelly put to death. The church thought all was lost. "We trusted it was he that should have redeemed Israel." Faith has to be tried. "Many shall be tried, purified and made white."

Some says it is of no use, and even wrong to make any further calculations of the prophets periods. I know we have all been thus educated; and "as the twig is bent the tree's inclined." And I know that at the first advent it was a saying of the Jewish Rabbin's—"Perish the man that shall calculate the time." However we can't all see alike; but let us all watch and be ready; ever praying, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

After a long drought, during which there had been many very favorable appearances of rain, but all signs had failed, one evening the clouds gathered, and the long wished for and much needed refreshing showers came. All admitted that the signs were much less favorable than at times before, and some did not even indulge the hope of rain.

Perhaps thus shall it [illegible] the Son of man cometh. The signs may not be to us as plain as heretofore: hence the numerous and positive exhortations to watch, and the caution, "Beware lest I come upon you as a thief;" "for as a snare shall it come upon them that dwell on the face of the earth."

From Wm G Houtse, Troy Grove Ill.

As to the Earl meeting I must say, that it was impossible for me to get away from the care of my sick wife; who was no better while you were at Amboy. I was thinking at the time of those meetings, how happy you must have been. Although I am denied those privileges here, I hope sometime, when it shall please God, to enjoy with you and others who are true believers the fruition of a well spent life, even if mine was idly spent.

You know about how it is for me to live here. Every question which can be gotten up that seems to favor the doctrines of the different churches of our place is put to me to be answered. As I am almost alone in the Advent faith. The immortality question I have answered them to their own satisfaction: they say no more about it. Mark S. Foscutt, from Plans—a Latter-day saint—came to our Grove, and he was requested to call on me, and talk me out of my views of the Bible relative to immortality and the unconscious state of the dead. By invitation I went to hear him preach. Learning his views at once, I was asked to discuss those questions with him. I partly consented. So I asked him whether I was to understand that he said, God was Almighty—that he had foreknowledge of everything which should come to pass; and whether God created Adam immortal. He answering affirmatively all the questions, I read to him Gen. 2: 16, 17, and asked him to state to me clearly, how God could use such language to Adam, saying that in the day of his transgression, he should surely die, when he claimed that immortality was unceasing existence—could not die?

He has never been here since; and I still believe that the gift of God is eternal life, and the wages of sin is death.

Next Friday evening we discuss the wine question. Two weeks ago the people had a temperance picnic in the grove, and my name was on the list to speak. I made some remarks relative to using fermented wine for sacrament, which did not exactly suit some of the ministers present, nor a good many church members. The remark to which they took exception was this: I said that I did not believe that anciently fermented wine was used. I was challenged to defend my view. So next Friday evening we are to discuss the matter in the Baptist church. I think I am right.

From Ruth A Miller, Van Buren Co Iowa.

I am glad of the privilege of reading your good books and papers. They are my heart's delight, because they give me so much more light on the Scriptures, than the old theory that I was first taught to believe. I learned to love my Savior while young, and the Bible was my study day by day. Yet I could never be confirmed in my own mind what the real punishment of the wicked was. I was for some years almost a Universalist; but still did not dare to place confidence in that theory, though many things looked reasonable. That doctrine was the first that taught me that sheol and hades, rendered hell in our English Bible, was the grave. Yet the word of God appeared to have in many parts contradictions; and my great desire and prayer was, that I might have a true and perfect understanding of it; for I had full faith in his word, notwithstanding all this. And now I thank the Lord that I am permited to see the gospel in its true light, and feel fully persuaded in my own mind. And I would be very glad for others to see as I do.

It would be a great privilege to mingle in the society of my beloved brothers and sisters in the church of my own faith, or go where they are enjoying some of those good camp and other meetings, I read of in The Times. But my means are so limited that it is out of my power to get to them as yet. Still hope and pray that there will be a way opened some day. If not before, there will be when Christ comes to take his children home—those that prove faithful to the end.

"I'm sighing for home, and the thought 'tis nearing,
Makes me cry the more earnest for Jesus to come;
I'll sigh for the kingdom, till Christ shall appearing Permit me to enter my long looked for home
Sweet Home!
Permit me to enter, my long looked for home."

What a beautiful hymn! It does my soul good to read those letters in THE TIMES, I can hear from a great number weekly if I can't see any of them. But there is a place where my hopes are stayed; my heart and my treasures are there, where I hope to meet you all. We shall see eye to eye. Pray for me.

From A P Moore Linden N Y.

I am glad to report my health very much improved since I left Boston and came into Western New York. I have been out of doors the most of the summer and I feel it has been a great blessing to me. I now feel that I can labor more untiringly than heretofore in trying to spread the news of our soon-coming King.

The truths that brought us out to wait for Jesus from heaven are dearer to me than life itself, and I want to be in the condition to best advocate those truths. I am not ashamed of them. Have labored as the way has opened the past summer. I want the Lord to open doors of usefulness before me. I never have solicited an appointment yet, where there was a church. I have an abhorrence of ministers "crowding around" where they are not wanted. I am the Lord's, and as he opens the way I am ready to walk therein.

When we came into this section last spring, prejudice was very strong, and I could see that people were shy of me. But we have kept right on in a straightforward way, and week by week have seen the power of prejudice giving way. When I am at home on Sunday and go to the Baptist or Presbyterian churches of our town, I am invited into their pulpits; and I have a standing invitation to preach in the Baptist church, and had an appointment given out to-day in both churches for Br. Couch to preach next Tuesday eve. in the Baptist church, and I hope to see the truth take root and spring up here. I expect yet to see in this neighborhood a company raised up to "serve the living and true God and wait for his Son from heaven." Am at liberty to go as the way may open, and labor to save men from the wrath to come. I want to "know no man after the flesh," and am not for sale to help build up parties or cliques, but want to gather with Christ and the great truths we as a people represent.

From M S Welcome, Tuscola Co. Mich.

Dear Brothers and Sisters of THE TIMES. I have read your communications with pleasure, and I think with profit. I am one of the little band of believers in Bible truths. Last May Br. Durand came here and labored two or three weeks and organized a church of eight members. Prejudice was very strong. They said all manner of evil about him and the doctrine he advocated. They said we were the Sadducees of old, revived, and it did seem as though Satan had full possession of the community. But, thank the Lord, prejudice is wearing away.

The time for quarterly meeting came and with it our good brothers Mackie, Snook, Wright, Hicks, and others. It did seem as though the windows of heaven were opened, and showers of grace came down. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and numbers added to the church. We now number twenty-six, and still the interest increases. Br. Mackie remained two weeks, and enlightened all of our minds in regard to the great truths of the Bible.

I do bless God that the Bible that was once a sealed book to me, is now the joy of my life. I feel that I can never praise God enough for what he has done for my family. Two weeks ago there was only one lone petitioner in the family. Now there are four to bow around the family altar, and sweet songs and thanksgiving ascend to God. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name!

From Addie Holmes Sanilac Co Mich:

I do love my Savior, and it is a great pleasure to me to be one of his witnesses. It is a year and a half since I first sought for the truth as it is in Jesus; and I can truly say that I have enjoyed more true happiness than in all my past life of sin and folly. I have just passed through a severe illness. I thought of my Savior, how he suffered and died for me; and I felt that if it was his will for me to pass away, that I could bid farewell to all dear friends, and say that all was well: for I have faith to believe that Christ will soon come, and raise his sleeping ones, and give them life eternal. I feel daily more encouraged to press on toward the mark of the prize; and when I think of Christ's appearing, and the beautiful home prepared for all his saints, I seem to forget all my trials and afflictions here, and long to be there.

From Geo W Wyllys, Dustin Ill.

I am still holding on to the faith, believing that the coming of the Lord is not far distant. But can we realize as we ought what manner of persons we should be in all holy conversation and godliness? I feel that there is a proneness in me to wander from the living God; and that when I would do good evil is present. But I feel determined, by his grace, to hold on to his precious promises, and if I do, I believe he will bring me safely through. We are living in perilous times. Scarce a day passes but what our ears are saluted with the story of murders and suicides. Some of late have been very near us, almost in our own neighborhood. We see that wicked men and seducers wax worse, and we read that it will be so at the end. And when I look around me and see the manifestations of the depravity of the human heart, my heart mourns within me, and I pray the Lord to protect me and keep me to his coming.

From B Giddings, Boyne Mich.

We removed from Illinois to this place last spring. We started meetings as soon as we could, in this wilderness country. There was not a family around but would go to a dance; but thanks be to the good Lord, some have turned their faces Zionward, put their trust in God, and are trying to prepare to meet Jesus when he comes. We have preaching every two weeks, and prayer meeting every Thursday evening.

Just one word to the brethren and sisters who use the filthy weed, tobacco. It is about one year since I quit smoking. I had used it about eight years; always said I could not quit using it. But that was a mistaken notion. Let all who use it determine to quit it, for at least one year. Put your trust in the Lord, and your pipe in the fire, and he will give you strength to overcome the appetite.

From E S Rathbun, Crawford Co. Ill.

I am enlightened enough to believe that right is might, and that truth will prevail. There is a Methodist minister here who only two years ago pronounced me a heretic, who now says after all that the "Soul-sleepers," as the Adventists are called here, are about as near right as any of them. My opinion is, if this same preacher could hear you, or some others of your faith, deliver a series of lectures, that he is so honest that he would go to preaching like those that he used to denounce as heretic.

As for the community here, although there is and has been a great lack of vital godliness, still they would like to hear Advent preaching; therefore if you or some of your preaching men can come into this part of the State, it does seem to me that there would be good accomplished, and a work commenced that would go on until the Judge appears. I have tried to get the professing folks, or church members, in this locality to commence and hold a series of prayer meetings, with the understanding that no preaching would be allowed during the process of such a meeting. But they seem to think that this is not the place to try the strength of prayer.

From R B Dutton, Iron Hill Iowa.

I have just got home from the tent-meeting at North Bend. We had a good time. The Baptist brethren in the neighborhood (and two ministers among them), received us kindly, and treated us like brethren. They brought in eatables of various kinds, and told us if we wanted more to let them know. They also provided for our teams without money and without price. Our Baptist preacher took my team home with him and kept it through the whole meeting. The Methodists in the neighborhood were more prejudiced against us at first; but the good Lord removed that, and then it seemed as though they could not do enough for us. Lord, bless that people! About twelve rose for prayer. Six were baptised, and quite a number of backsliders were reclaimed. We can truly say the Lord was with us. Praise his holy name.

From S B Mabey, DeKalb Ill.

The cause in DeKalb is gaining ground. We hope for better days to dawn, of prosperity and increase among this people. We receive a very kind welcome among the many friends, and also from those of other denominations. We think prejudice will continue to decrease as people become more acquainted with us, and our works of faith and love as a people.

From John Bower.

I have just returned home from a trip into the Grand Traverse region. At Br. Skinner's, near the north line of Wexford Co. I found Br. E. N. Bliss from Chicago. He had been laboring to some extent and waked up quite an interest, and had opened the way. I commenced preaching Sunday Oct. 1, and continued with them eleven days, preaching thirteen discourses. Congregations were large. A number rose for prayer. Seven confessed Christ, heads of familes. Sunday the 8th, I planted two sisters in the likeness of Christ's death, by baptism. Others were convinced, and I hope will go forward soon. In the evening fourteen sat down at the table of the Lord. It was a good time. On Wedensday eve. the brethren met before preaching, and I organized a church of eleven members, Br. Albert Brigham, elder. I think a number will unite with them soon.

At the close I requested all that felt they had been comforted by my visit among them to rise upon their feet. A large portion of the congregation rose up. Many were deeply convicted, and I hope they will decide to be the Lord's. They helped me after a godly sort, but did they not meet my expenses. It is a new settlement. The people are commencing to live, and the frost and drouth hurt them much this season.

I would say that I intend to devote the most of my time to new fields and holding protracted meetings; and if any of our brethren will help to meet expenses and supply with tracts, it will be thankfully received. Also, if there are any that wish my labors, they can write me at Lakeview, Mich.

[We heartily commend Br. B. to the confidence of all. ED. TIMES.

Journeyings. No. 4.

I resumed my journey at an early hour, September 16, and on arriving at Minneapolis, I found the city alive with people who were gathering to see the great horse race that comes off today. It is the closing day of the county fair that has been held here the past week, and the horse race seems to be the most important part of it. A mere exhibition of stock with the products of the earth and the industry of the people, as seen in machinery and the various articles that are contributed from the farm and the workshop, is considered rather a dry entertainment for these fast times. Hence the horse race is added, which seems to satisfy the popular appetite, judging from the apparent relish with which the majority participate in it. It is really sad to see so many professed disciples of Christ joining heart and hand in these worldly pleasures. I overheard one man remark with a laugh, as I passed by, "The churches are all racing horses!"

The day has been spent in visiting some of the scattered ones in this place and at St. Anthony and St. Paul. As the evening shades gather once more I find myself with the little church at West St. Paul. Br. N. N. Thompson has sold out here and with his family will move to Mower Co. about three miles from Austin. We shall miss him here, but trust his removal may prove to be the means of letting the light shine in that region where he is to make a new home.

Spent Sunday with the church here and at Cottage Grove. The membership is small, but we have good congregations who are in sympathy with us, and I trust more of them may yet be gathered to the fold of Christ. Monday and Tuesday evenings were spent with the church at Castle Rock and High Prairie. At the former place I met Brn. Geo. and Robbins Miller, with whom we enjoyed a social season, talking chiefly about the Advent cause—what had been done in the past and what remained to be accomplished in the future, especially in the West.

The evening of the 20th I stopped at Pine Island where Br. Reuben Bolles had given out an appointment for me and secured a hall for our meeting. A Spiritist and Latter-day-saint had just closed a discussion on the merits of the religion of Jesus Christ. In the same hall I spoke to the congregation giving a general lecture on the second coming of Christ, and the events to transpire at that time.

Thursday evening I met with a little company at Viola in the little school-house, where we spent an hour in worship. The subject considered was the Bridegroom and the Wise and Foolish Virgins, that went forth to meet him. It is a solemn inquiry for us to make at this time, so near the midnight hour—"Is my lamp trimmed and burning, and have I oil in my vessel?" If so, while he yet tarries should we be overtaken by death, all will be well; or if we live to see the day of his coming we shall all be ready to join with those who will then arise and trim their lamps and go in to the wedding.

Friday brought me once more to my home in Winona. In the evening I attended our regular monthly church meeting, a season of much interest. Three presented themselves for baptism. The following Sunday was a day of blessings for the church. Our congregation was quite full. The baptism at the levee at noon was a most solemn occasion; a large company assembled there, and the day closed with the commemoration of the death of our Lord. E. T. HIMES.

Speak Out.

Don't practice prevarication or circumlocution, young friends. It may be true of language, as judged by the dictionary, and as charged upon it by a famous satirical writer, that it was seemingly invented to hide thought instead of expressing it. To this purpose the "ifs" and "ands" and "perhapses," &c., are very frequently put. But we warn you more earnestly against their prevaricating use, if you are desirous of maintaining your self-respect and integrity.

No; never prevaricate. If a question is asked you, answer promptly and squarely, or decline answering altogether. And the latter course it is your privilege to take if an improper question is put to you, from idle curiosity, or some worse motive. There is nothing more attractive in young people than frankness of bearing, frankness of look as well as of speech, an open countenance and a truthful tongue, an eye that never winks beneath the burdens of a falsehood, and a lip that refuses to let a lie pass over it. There are no words in the English language more valuable than the little monosylables, "yes" and "no." There is no prevarication in them when properly uttered.

But when they are drawled out into 'y-e-s' and 'n-o-o,' then they become words of prevarication. Out with them, in a clear ring of the voice when you speak them. Only so will you do justice in your native sense of propriety; only so can you be truly happy. There is nothing so safe in the long run, and surely nothing more beautiful, than truth, truth frankly spoken. Therefore, speak out.—Sel.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 24, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

THE TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal coming of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; perfection by grace and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches comprising the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. [illegible], and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,
To whom all communications should be addressed.

"Good Tidings"

The long looked for "Conference Book" has now appeared with the above title. See notice in another place, and send for a copy. $1. in cloth. 50c. in paper, postpaid.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

The Babcock Extinguisher.

The fire in the roof of the coal vault of the Tribune Building was on yesterday speedily extinguished by Mr. W. R. Patterson, Superintendent of the Babcock Extinguisher Company, for which the thanks of the association are gratefully tendered.—Chicago Tribune, Oct. 21

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canadas) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

The Proposed Chart.

We confess to but little faith, at first, that our ideal of a complete prophetic chart could be realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, and so made the proposition to publish if a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. The response is encouraging. Shall we have the other needed names?

John S. Lawver, M. B. Geer, Eld. J. Raymond, C. C. Marston, F. Burr, The Chicago Church, D. O. Hink, I. C. Wellcome, J. F. Huber Grand St. (New York) Church. Church at Auburn, Ill. C. Libby (pd.)

Who will help fill up this list?

Besides the above, Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., has offered to give one of his $160 Hand-raking Reapers, if sold soon, for $120. See advertisement.

To Correspondents.

W. K. COLLING. We had already sent you a package of the books, by mail. Trust you will receive them. Always glad to hear from you....N. C. MILLER. We have now written three letters to you at Valparaiso, Mo. Your paper goes there, and we presume you get it. But why do you not receive letters. We would like to communicate with you....W. H. HULS. Cannot possibly attend your next meeting. Will help you when we can....P. L. WILSON. We know of no Advent minister in good standing, or that we could commend, at the point you name. The discussion has been delayed by the other party. He has now promised to be ready Jan. 1....W. A. ALLEN. That firm was burned out in Chicago. We have only our private copy of the Guide left....C. W. PITCHER. Thank you....JAMES BURBANK. What is your P. O. Address? You do not give it....J. F. HUBER. Only that first sixteen pages was printed. Before another "form" could be "set up," it became apparent that "The Advent Quarterly" must be suspended for a time, at least. But it will live again, should time last. Papers sent ...M. E. PALMER. Thank you. Have sent....R SPOTSWOOD. We learn that Br. Marston will visit you. We intended to come when we could; but it will be some time yet. But he can come soon. ....J. R. TURNER. Br. P. G. Bowman's P. O. Address is Lydia, Darlington, Co., S. C. We will call on you if we ever pass that way. We know of no 'political preachers' among the Adventists, at present. Whether it is right or not to preach on politics depends altogether on how 'politics' conducts itself. With questions of political policy we have nothing to do; but we shall stand for principles, come what may. However, this may not cover the ground you refer to. You do not speak definitely. Your other question is answered in another part of this paper. Glad to help you all we can....M. GREEN. Music was sent. If not yet received, please let us know.

hundreds of people are left entirely destitute. Along the Bay City State Road the fire also did great damage. Barns, houses, and crops were consumed and in many instances people lost all they had in the world.

ABROAD.

* * * Thirty deaths a day is the report from Constantinople.

* * * Another tunnel through the Alps—at Mt. St. Gothard—is projected.

* * * In the recent storms and floods in China some three thousand persons perished, with large amounts of property.

* * * Bogovolsk, in Russia, inhabited chiefly by Jews has been burned by incendiaries. 800 houses were destroyed.

* * * The Chinese steal ocean telegraphs—i. e., they fish them up and cut off large pieces which they appropriate to their own purposes.

* * * France and Germany have finally concluded their peace treaty. Twenty-six departments are to be evacuated by the Germans, but not occupied by the French, till the German War bill is paid up.

* * * Full reports of the last German expedition to the North Pole are published. It is claimed that the expedition was successful. The Polar sea was discovered free from ice and swarming with whales.

* * * The revolution in the Japanese government moves steadily forward. The latest Coup d'etat is the abolition of the feudal system, and the centralization of power in the hands of the Mikado. This will remove some obstructions to "the progess" of Japan.

* * * A horrible epidemic has broken out in Kurdistan. Its symptoms closely resemble the plague. Tumors under the armpits, a characteristic of the London infection of 1665, purple stains on the skin, bloodshot eyes, and almost unexceptional fatality are the prominent signs.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

* * * Guatemala, one of the most priest-ridden countries of this continent, has expelled the Jesuits.

* * * The Disciples had just started a publishing house in the city, and lost everything, including the subscription list of a child's paper.

* * * St. Peter exults in the statement that "the Pope's health is still red, rosy, robust and rubicund as ever." There is a right royal ruddiness realized in this redundancy that might almost justify the old-time soubriquet of the Scarlet Lady.—Chris. Union.

"Thus out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God perfects praise. New choirs of glorified children, each moment, are forming in heaven."—Extract from a Sermon by Eld. Slater.

—We should be pleased to see the passage in the word of God that warrants such a statement as the above. His Bishop, in the same pulpit, declared, "No Saint has yet entered heaven—no sinner has yet gone to hell." We endorse the Bishop's view. The song of redemption cannot be sung before that redemption is consummated by the resurrection and glorification of the saints.—Baptist.

* * * Among the ruins of the Western News Company's establishment, where an immense stock of periodicals and books was reduced to ashes, there was found a single leaf of a quarto Bible, charred around the edges. It contained the first chapter of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which opens with the following words: "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary! She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks: among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her." And that was the only fragment of literature saved from the News Company's great depot.

* * * Three Presbyterian churches had over 100 additions last year; 9 had between 76 and 100; 31 had between 51 and 75; 290 had between 21 and 50; 494 had between 11 and 20; 675 had between 6 and 10; 185 had 5; 275 had 4; 310 had 3; 377 had 2; 402 had 1; and 1,514 had no additions at all. This last item the Presbyterian, with some reason, pronounces startling. The church that adds to its numbers not a single member in the course of a year is in a sad condition: and the fact that a single denomination reports 1,500 such churches is melancholy evidence that the Christianity of our time is not so efficient as it ought to be.

—Is this the latter-day progress?

Book Notices, Etc.

D. P. FAULDS, Main St., Louisville, Ky., sends us some fine music for the piano, and will send his list to all applicants. Music mailed free of postage, on receipt of price.

AMONG the religious papers of Chicago, the Standard comes to the surface first. We have received a circular from the publishers announcing that their subscription list is saved: almost everything else is lost. As soon as type and other material can be procured, this able Baptist journal will be published again. Office for the present, 13 Harmon Court.

We are happy to speak a good word for the Christian at Work, an illustrated weekly, published by H. W. Adams, 27 Beekman St., New York city. Send a stamp for specimens. It has much sound teaching in its columns. And the article we quote from it this week shows that one writer at least, is awake to "the signs of the times."

THE question "how he was to live" was a "Knotty Question" to the poor street sweeper, and the "Illustrated Christian Weekly" of October 21st has ably illustrated his perplexities. The "Grain Fleet in New York," "Bethany Sunday school" at Philadelphia, the "Sacred Bambino" at Rome, and a story showing the power of kindness over animals, are the other subjects of illustrations.

The second three months' numbers of this paper are now ready, bound in paper covers, and will be sent by mail post-paid on the receipt of sixty cents.

Address at 150 Nassau St., New York.

ONE Hundred and Eleventh Volume. Number 1426 of Littell's Living Age, for the week ending Oct. 7, begins the one hundred and eleventh volume of that periodical, and is a good number with which to begin a subscription. It contains a Quarterly Review article on Jeremy Taylor; Comets and Comets' Tails, Saint Paula; a Famous Frenchman, Dark Blue; Some Words about Sir Walter Scott, Cornhill Magazine; The Situation at Versailles, Spectator; an instalment of Wilfred Cumbermede, by George Macdonald; besides numerous shorter articles, poetry, &c. The Advance, of Chicago, well says of the Living Age, that "it is a monthly that comes every week." The subscription price is $8 a year, or for $10 any one of the $4 magazines sent with the Living Age for a year. Littell & Gay, Boston, Publishers.

Obituary.

DUTTON, In Buchanan, Oct. 3, Harry C., only son of David S. and Martha Dutton: aged 6 years, 1 month, and 23 days.

Our little Harry is gone; but we mourn not as those who have no hope.

BUSH. Fell on sleep, Feb. 2, 1871, Charles L., son of Richard and Lucinda Bush, of Mt. Sterling, Brown Co. Ill.: aged 6 years and 19 days.

This dear child was loved wherever known. Funeral services by the writer, Sunday, Sept. 17.

GEO. W. HURD.

In a late number of the Port Huron Commercial we find the following obituary of a warm friend of the Advent cause:

On Friday last, Mr. John Moorehouse, of Berlin township, died at his residence at Baker's Corners, of disease of the heart. His death was very unexpected, and although he had been slightly complaining for a few days previous, he had not been confined to his house. On Thursday he retired as usual, sleeping soundly until about three o'clock in the morning, when he awoke in considerable pain, and a few moments thereafter expired. He was seventy-four years of age, and leaves a widow and a numerous family to mourn his loss. His funeral, which took place on Sunday, was the largest ever known in the town of Berlin. The sermon was delivered by Eld. Adam D. Mackie, from the text "I know he shall rise again;" and was an eloquent tribute to the many virtues of the deceased. Mr. Moorehouse had many warm friends, who deeply regret his loss.

Notice.

I will sell at a low figure, to any Advent preacher, who comes properly recommended, three lots of land —40, 80, or 120 acres. The land is 1¼ miles from the Railway station, and has buildings, orchards, and sufficient water. My object is to procure in our midst a man of God, who will preach the word, regardless of popularity, to the Advent church in this region.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 38½ down to 21¼. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh; it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

Usual price, $160; but the machine presented to THE TIMES office will be sold for ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY DOLLARS, if taken soon.

For any further information, address J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Oct. 31, 1871.

Death.

The Scriptures speak of three kinds of death: spiritual or moral death; natural or physical death; and "the second death" or the destruction of "soul and body in gehenna."

Spiritual death, is not death in fact, but a figure of speech, representing moral condition, and drawn from the existence of death in reality. It is a condition of "death in trespasses and sins," which is the opposite of spiritual life. In this death the whole human family are involved, save the innocents who have not come to the years of accountability, and have never personally sinned, and those who have been quickened "by grace through faith." (Eph. ch. 2.) From this death men must be revived, quickened, and re-live, or perish in their sins; and naught but the Holy Spirit can quicken dead sinners to a spiritual life that they may escape "the wrath to come."

Natural or Physical death, is the penalty for the Adamic transgression in which the whole human family are involved, and under which they suffer for the original sin. It is the dread calamity which has fallen upon our world, and which the world has witnessed through the passing generations from the beginning to this hour. (Gen. 2: 17; Rom. 5: 12.)

Attempts have been made by certain theologians to maintain that the death threatened in Gen. 2: 17, and negated by Satan (Gen. 3: 4) was spiritual or moral death. But all such efforts must prove abortive, and forever cover those who advocate the theory with shame and confusion. As though God had threatened as a penalty for sin, that one would be a sinner! These men, also, contend that physical consequences are the legitimate results of sin, or a condition in sin, but not necessarily the penalty threatened.

All this theological effort to maintain this interpretation, is to bolster another theological dogma, unfounded in the Scriptures, and that is, that the penalty of God's moral law since revealed which is thus given "The soul that sinneth it shall die"—is "a condition in sin," insuring "endless misery and suffering," or everlasting life in hell-torments! which they claim is "a death that never dies!"

What strides in "corrupting" the sacred text, will not theologians take to sustain "a pet theory," however absurd and unreasonable, which is toppling to the ground! So God threatened Adam—"In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt be a sinner!" And this is the penalty for sin in the Divine administration! How would this look in human jurisprudence? The penalty for theft shall be, that a man shall be a thief. For arson, that he be guilty of arson. For forgery, that he shall be a forger. And for murder, that he shall be a murderer! Of what force would human law be, with simply such penalties affixed? Will God be less wise than men? and his laws less effective and more senseless than human law?

God defines the penalty for the Adamic transgression when the Eden pair were summoned before him in judgment: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. ch. 3.) How with this explanation which a child can understand, the wise men of our age fail to see or comprehend the truth, is a mystery, unless they have a theology adverse in its teaching, which needs to be sustained at the expense of the word of God.

Death, also, is thus defined in the Scriptures: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit to God who gave it." (Eccl. 12: 7.) All that is constituted of dust in man "returns to the earth as it was," in death; and that which is not dust as "the breath or spirit of life," returns not to the earth, of course, but "unto God" who gives it, and who is the sole author of "the breath of the spirit of life." If that which "returns to God who gave it," of all men, on their dissolution in death, had a conscious existence or was a personal entity prior to birth into life, then it will "return as it was," also, unto God, in a state of conscious being. But few will take this position, I am inclined to think, when they really consider it.

Physical death, or destruction of personal being, is the penalty for the original transgression, to which Adam and his whole posterity are subject: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men." (Rom. 5: 12.) "It is appointed unto men once to die." (Heb. 9: 27.) By which it cannot but be observed that sin and death are kept entirely distinct, the one the sequence of the other, as its terrible penalty!

The dread reality of death as it has and does exist in our fallen world, is wholly inexplicable save upon the consideration that it follows sin as a punishment. Why will any ignore the fact or try by equivocation or subtlety to avoid the conclusion which is inevitable. It is to be observed that the sentence given in Gen. 2: 17, is thus rendered in the margin: "Dying thou shalt die." And Dr. Adam Clark gives it this construction: "Thou shalt become mortal, and continue in a dying state till thou die."

It is contended also by others, that the death penalty is only executed upon the body of a man, while there is "a spiritual entity in man, which constitutes his personal identity, and survives the stroke." But the sophistry of this reasoning is fully expressed when we consider the sentence pronounced by the Judge:" "THOU SHALT SURELY DIE!" To make this to be addressed simply to the body of man, is perfectly ridiculous! Every one who has not a theory to sustain at variance with the idea, will admit at once that this sentence is addressed to man as man; and certainly must include his thinking, intelligent self if any part: for no other could be consciously addressed. And would God attempt to address any other than than man's personal intelligent entity? Furthermore, does God punish with death the mere irresponsible body of man, while he lets the sinner escape the penalty? For it takes intelligence to sin. Any way this may be reasoned, we cannot avert the legitimate conclusion that man in his entire being is under sentence of death. To attempt to argue otherwise partakes of the subtlety of that old serpent, the first enemy of man, who beguiled our first parents into the belief—"ye shall not surely die."

The death inflicted upon Adam and his prosterity is, therefore, cessation of life, and destruction of person. And Webster thus defines the word "death:" "That state of being, animal or vegetable, but more particularly of an animal, in which there is total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions, when the organs have not only ceased to act, but have lost the susceptibility of renewed action."

If this be the case, and none will question it, then death must be the destruction of living, sentient being, and as the Scriptures affirm it to be an "enemy." Milton calls it a "grizzly terror." It is "the king of terrors." From this death Jesus Christ as "The Lord of the dead," is to restore all men again to life, bring a justification from the penalty of the Adamic transgression; and also to give award. (John ch. 5; 1 Cor. ch. 15.)

The second death. There are but two deaths in fact; spiritual death being a mere figure of speech. The first death is that following original sin, the sad effects of which we have witnessed for now six thousand years, bringing the successive generations down to the dust. "The second death" is the penalty of God's moral law; and is to be visited for individual transgression. "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" and for rejection and disobedience to the gospel. This penalty will be executed upon all the finally impenitent and incorrigible at the day of judgment. It consists in the destruction of the soul and body in gehenna (Mat. 10: 28), the "lake of fire." (Rev. ch. 20.)

This is called everlasting punishment." (Mat. 25: 46.) Not because God will be everlastingly inflicting the punishment, but because it is eternal in its effects. The punishment is "death as in the first death;" but while there is a release from the latter there is none from the former. That is everlasting death. It is called everlasting destruction; not because God will everlastingly be destroying the wicked and never accomplish the end; for they are "suddenly to be destroyed, and that without remedy;" a "sudden destruction" is to "come upon them, and they shall not escape:" but because the destruction is complete, and final, and everlasting in its consequences.

It is call "eternal judgment;" not because God will be eternally judging and executing the judgment written upon the wicked; but because the judgment sentence can never be revoked, and the execution never reversed.

The agent of destruction is called "eternal fire, unquenchable fire:" not because "the lake of fire" is endlessly burning and consuming the sinners lost and ruined, and yet never effecting the purpose of "burning them up;" and is to continue burning to all eternity and never be extinguished; but because the effect of the fire will be complete and eternal, before the fires of gehenna go out: "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Even "Sodom and Gomorrah are set forth an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."

The doctrine of an endless hell of torment, unceasing and unmitigated, and ever increasing in despair and anguish while eternity endures, is a theological dogma which has done immense evil; staggering the faith of men in the Bible, and the God and Christ of the Bible; and is a slander upon the character of the most High, as it makes him the most unfeeling, and unmerciful, and unjust of all beings in the universe.

Omnipotent Jehovah in infinite justice and goodness, will put out of existence every being who is undeserving of eternal life. "All the wicked will God destroy." O. R. FASSETT.

Charge to the Pastor.

Make up your mind you must work, but if you consider yourself a fellow-member with the rest, don't work alone. Help your church, but don't carry it. If you find meddlesome busybodies, give them plenty to do. They hate real work as a mosquito does smoke.

Be neither a baby nor a king.

Your main business is to preach; but to do this you must know your people and ascertain their wants. Don't visit just to please, but to help on your work. Some families will need six visits to another's one; go where you can hurt the devil most. Be governed by men's wants, not their complaints.

Preach not as others do, but as you and God can best arrange it. Fill your hearer with sound reason, then cork him tight with a strong application, binding it with a "Thus saith the Lord." Be sparing, if not a little stingy, in using old sermons. Remember, when the stream of study stops flowing, the pulpit pond lowers. Give no censures unless there is love enough to prevent their drowning in hatred. It requires much love to praise, more to improve. Attack measures, and "hit" people only when they stand between, you, and the devil.

You must begin on time, and not be long in uttering what you have to say, if you would have this busy age stop to listen. If you would preach your best sermons, practice them faithfully beforehand. Be bold, but remain a Christian gentleman. When you hit the heart don't forget the head, and vice versa.

Endeavor to be the greatest man in the parish, and that by being the servant of all. Be childish enough to think you never can be left away from Christ. Run to show him all you have and ask him for all you want. Work when you can, retire when you must, and you shall have favor with God when you will.—Congregationalist.

A Burning World.

It is said by astronomers that during the last two or three hundred years over thirteen fixed stars have disappeared from the sky. One of them in the Northern Hemisphere was especially noted. It grew so bright that it could be seen by the naked eye at midday. It appeared to be a world on fire. The color changed from dazzling white to a reddish yellow, and then faded to an ashy paleness. Who could but watch it with feelings of the deepest interest and solemnity! For sixteen months the appearance continued, and then it disappeared forever from the sky.

Such a phenomenon our world may sometime present to watchers upon other stars. "The world also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." Just think of the treasure of gold and precious stones, the costly fabrics wrought with so much skill, the beautiful works of art so highly prized and choicely preserved—all these are to be swept away, as if they were only chaff. Altogether they are not so much in God's sight as the soul of one poor beggar child. Let us learn to look upon worldly treasure as God does, and to value the soul at its real worth. Is it wise to cast away all its happiness for a few trifles that you must soon leave, and that in the end will all be destroyed? —Presbyterian.

John Bunyan.

It being well known to some of his persecutors in London that Bunyan was often out of prison, they sent an officer to talk with the jailor on the subject; and, in order to find him out, he was to get there in the middle of the night. Bunyan was at home with his family, but so restless that he could not sleep; he therefore acquainted his wife that, though the jailor had given him liberty to stay till the morning, yet, from his uneasiness, he must immediately return. He did so, and the jailor blamed him for coming at so unreasonable an hour. Early in the morning the messenger came, and, interrogating the jailor, said, "Are all the prisoners safe?" "Yes." "Is John Bunyan safe?" "Yes." "Let me see him." He was called, and appeared, and all was well. After the messenger was gone, the jailor, addressing Bunyan, said, "Well, you may go out again just when you think proper, for you know when to return better than I can tell you."—Sel.

Infidel Writers.

We have had writers of that description who made some noise in their day. At present they repose in lasting oblivion. Who, born within the last forty years, has read one word of Collins, and Tobland, and Morgan, and that whole race who called themselves free-thinkers? Who now reads Bolingbroke? Who ever read him through? Ask the booksellers of London what has become of all those lights of the world. In a few years their successors will go to the family vault of "all the Capulets." Because half a dozen grasshoppers under a fern make the field ring with their importunate chink, while thousands of great cattle repose beneath the shadow of the British oak, chew the cud and are silent, pray do not imagine that they who make the noise are the only inhabitants of the field; that, of course, they are many in number; or that, after all, they are other than the little, shriveled, meager, hopping, though loud and troublesome insects of the hour.—Edmund Burke.

How You Can Help Us.

1. Let your friends and neighbors see your paper; induce them to subscribe; forward their names and money.

2. In every town and village there are many families who take no religious paper. People who investigate are surprised to find the proportion of such so great. You can do a real missionary work in this direction. The gospel is just as precious where you live as in China, and so are men's souls.

3. Interest your pastor to lend his aid toward reaching every family in the parish. We will furnish specimen copies for distribution gratuitously.

"Behold he Cometh."

Ages ago in the Eastern lands,
They watched for him,
List'ning oft for his chariot wheels
As the day grew dim,
And wondered if he would come again
From Olivet,
With welcoming words on their lips they looked—
And he tarries yet

Every year across winter snows,
With wistful eyes,
Eager disciples have watched for him
To come from the skies;
Every year under summer suns
They have sung his praise,
And cried for him from their yearning hearts—
But he still delays.

They died at their watch on the beacon hights,
And we take their place;
We long, as they longed in the olden days,
For the sight of his face;
The sad earth wants him in her deep wo
To give her rest;
But the years pass on, and he does not come
To make us blest.

Sometimes we look at the floating clouds,
And in fancy trace
The shining robes and the feet of brass,
And his glorious face;
We hush our breath when the gloaming comes,
And can almost hear
The thrilling sound of his blessing words,
But he is not near.

Yet courage, brothers! we have his word,
And he will not fail;
Let us be patient, and watch and wait
Till our prayers prevail.
He will surely come, as he said he would,
In the light sublime;
And we shall forget, as we see his face,
This waiting time.

"Doctrines of Devils."

The above Scriptural phrase is indicative of much more than the religious world seem to apprehend. We cannot fail to discover two things at once growing out of this language. (1) There are devils; (2) They have doctrines to which men will give heed.

Let us first inquire where these devils got their doctrines. There seems to be a system of some kind carried on among the devils, and that system seems to head up in the old Serpent, or Satan, who appears to be the Prince of the power of the air, and to stand at the head as dictator of the faith of his kingdom.

We should naturally suppose that some central idea would constitute the basis of his doctrine; and that each of his wonderful systems of religious faith would sustain a strong analogy to that central idea. Now if if we can discover what that grand center of his system is, we shall be able to detect his doctrines, as they are endorsed by men, as he has no other object to accomplish in his mighty work but the ruin of the race of mankind. And he would, of course, set up a system in opposition to the one God has established; and would very likely begin operations about the same time, for fear God would get the start of him in establishing his system first.

Reasoning from these premises, we should go back in the history of man and find how matters were conducted at the outset of human existence. We find that God placed man in a beautiful garden, and bade him eat of its luxuriant fruit. Even the tree of life was his to partake, while he should observe the restrictions placed upon him, which were to let one tree in the garden alone; he being forbidden to touch it, lest he die.

While apparent contentment seemed to be enjoyed by man in this beautiful place, all at once there is a voice heard saying, "Yea, hath God said ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" The reply was: "We may eat of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it; neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." The voice is heard again, saying, "Ye shall not surely die."

Here is warfare begun. And man is the victim of the contest. God said to him, "Ye shall surely die;" and the fo declared, "Ye shall not surely die."

The principle laid down by God here, is, that sin shall be punished with death, as the result of partaking of the forbidden fruit; but, the enemy affirms, rather, an advantage will be gained: in that man will become as gods, knowing good and evil.

There is a claim of a modern date, which savors largely of this idea, viz. "Death gives us more than was in Eden lost; this King of Terrors is the Prince of Peace." Again, there is another idea of modern date that looks very much like this original doctrine of the fo. "There is no such thing as death; that which appears to be death, is only transition." Is it not plainly to be seen that the two systems started in Eden were, death as the result of sin, and no death following disobedience?

Let us now place in juxtaposition the two doctrines placed before man in Eden, and those which have been kept before him through the history of the world.

God said: "Thou shalt surely die." (Gen. 2:17.)	Says the fo: "Ye shall not die." (Gen. 3:4.)
"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, and in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 146:3, 4.)	"Thought and reason are essential qualities of spirit, and cannot perish; but must endure as long as God endures." "Matter cannot think."
God speaks of man in death, saying: "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not. They are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." (Job 14:21.)	"The spirits of the dead become the guardian angels of the living, and know all about the condition of surviving friends."
"For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything." (Eccl. 9:5.)	"The dead know more than the living, and the unchained soul is a thousand times more capacitated to comprehend God and eternity than the living man."
"If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" (1 Cor. 15:32.)	"The soul of the righteous man will go immediately to heaven, where are pleasures forevermore."
Again: "I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Thes. 5:23.)	"Some believe in the resurrection of the body, but not I. Good by flesh and blood, I have had enough of it. What I shall have in its place I know not." (Beecher, as reported in N. Y. Herald, May 8, 1871.)
"By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." (Rom. 5:12.)	"There is no such thing as death: that which appears to be death is only transition."
"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (1 Cor. 15:26.)	"Were death denied, poor man would live in vain."

Hanging on the tree of inherent immortality is Mohammedanism, and Swedenborgianism, and Mormonism, and Spiritism, and Universalism, and the superstitious notions of purgatory, and the intercession of saints. Is it not a little strange that a cardinal doctrine of Christianity, if pure, should produce such fruits as these?

Lest some should doubt the correctness of our application of the above systems to the doctrine of inherent immortality, let us analyze a little. The grand center of Mohammedism is the natural immortality of man; upon which dogma the seven hells and heavens of that system are adjusted. That system could not continue a moment, could you convince all its subjects that a dead man is really dead?

Swedenborgism is built entirely upon the idea of natural immortality. This is a system of Spiritism, in one form, from beginning to end, and repudiates a literal resurrection of the dead.

Mormonism, too, stands on the same basis, and could not hold together were it not for the notion that the spirit of a dead prophet told Joe Smith where the copper plates were, and told him how to interpret them.

Take the idea of man's natural immortality away from Spiritism, and it never would draw the second breath.

Convince the Universalist that man does not act or think in death, and the chance for future and universal restoration is used up: as there is no chance for the soul to answer for wrongs done, by suffering the penalty due its sins; and by virtue of ability to endure the penalties inflicted satisfy justice, and be restored to favor and happiness.

Christ says "a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit." Hence I conclude the tree of inherent immortality is a corrupt tree, and planted by Satan; and his doctrines grow upon it. Let us beware of anything that savors of the devil's doctrines.

Jealousy.

"Jealousy," J. N. Brown says, "is that particular uneasiness which arises from the fear that some rival may rob us of the affection of one whom we greatly love, or suspicion that he has already done it."

Webster says: "Jealous means suspicious; apprehensive of rivalship," etc.

Jealousy among ministers is one of the most successful mediums through which the devil, at the present time, operates upon the work of God. It often happens that at the very time when unity of purpose and concert of action is most needed upon the part of the ministry, and when the success of the entire scheme depends most upon such a course, that the devil will spring some trap of jealousy and by the suspicious apprehension of some tool of Satan in the form of a jealous minister, the whole plan is thwarted, and the work that otherwise might have been a glorious triumph, proves a complete failure.

It is natural for some men to be jealous. They look with suspicion and disparagement upon every scheme that has not its origin in the fostered palace of their own inventiveness. They are men who never fail, only as the result of the stupidity of those associated with them. The efforts that are purely their own are invariably grand and triumphant successes—their own report being witnesses. Such men we should expect to be jealous of everything that looks like success outside of their own track.

Ought this to be the case? Have ministers any time to spend in jealous bickerings about each other? I write not thus because I have had any very particular experience in this direction of late; but I have seen the working of it, in other days. And my experience with it has led me to abhor it as one of the most deadly foes with which a living ministry can be infested. When we see the blessing of God attending our brethren and signal success appearing to perch upon their efforts to promote God's glory, then for us to become jealous of them, and fear they might outstrip us, or get more honor than we, is simply ridiculous: and such conduct should be spurned with contempt from the dignity of his position by every man who would be a worthy and acceptable minister of the New Testament. Ought we not rather to rejoice when we see success attending the labors of any faithful servant of God? If our brethren have talents of a superior order compared with our own, let us not begin our jealous whisperings about their pride, enlarged cranium, etc.; but let us pray God to keep them humble, and most heartily and with all the energy of our whole being unite with them in the good work of saving perishing souls and spreading the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

The jealousy already referred to may properly be called an ungodly jealousy. The very nature of the case precludes the idea of there being any God in it. There is a jealousy, however that all ministers should have. Paul calls it "Godly jealousy." He says, "for I am jealous over you (the church) with a godly jealousy." (2 Cor. 11:2.) Reference is here had to that ever diligent watch-care with which the faithful pastor guards the sacred interests of his flock. There should be more jealousy of this kind in the ministry and less o[illegible] which we first referred. [illegible] help all to whose charge is co[illegible] the proclamation of "the present truth" to be faithful to God, to each other, to the truth, to the church and to humanity. Amen. C. C. MARSTON.

THE great want of this age is men. Men who are not for sale. Men who are honest, sound from center to circumference, true to the heart's core. Men who will condemn wrong in friend or fo, in themselves as well as others. Men whose consciences are as steady as the needle to the pole. Men who will stand for the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels. Men who can tell the truth, and look the world and devil right in the eye. Men that neither brag nor run. Men that neither flag nor flinch. Men who can have courage without shouting to it. Men in whom the courage of everlasting life runs still, deep and strong. Men too large for sectarian bonds. Men who do not cry, nor cause their voices to be heard on the streets, but who will not fail, nor be discouraged, till judgment be set in the earth. Men who know their message and tell it. Men who know their places and fill them. Men who know their own business. Men who will not lie. Men who are not too lazy to work, nor too proud to be poor. Men who are willing to eat what they have earned, and wear what they have paid for.—Sel.

A Letter to the Press.

Dear Press: You will pardon the liberty I take in addressing you these few lines. I congratulate you upon your prosperous journey to our publishing office, and I am heartily glad you met with a warm reception; and am further pleased to know you were enabled to enter at once upon your task of "pressing" the importance of present truth; and I do hope that these good brethren will never compel you to stop this pressing, for the want of fire, water, paper, ink, or any thing else that you may need.

By the by, I understand that you and Br. William had a little private conversation while you were being enstalled in your place, in regard to the kind of people you had come among, and the nature of the work they would expect you to perform and whether you could expect that they would "back you up," while you kept pressing the truth before the people. My opinion is, that the longer you are among us, and the more you and our people get acquainted, the better each will like the other; and I think you will find us "true blue," as the saying goes.

Now I want to say a few words about a late speech you made to our people in which you "pressed" the necessities of our Publishing Office. I was glad when I read that speech, and as I read I began to feel, then I began to think, and pray too, and the result of it all was that I came to the following conclusion: that Advent believers cannot, must not, and will not, treat such appeals with indifference or neglect. Why Br. Press, I knew our people twenty-five years ago, and I knew they were, and are still a feeling people. They have and can still feel deep into the pocket for the sake of Jesus and his cause, and rejoice in the privilege of so doing.

Therefore I come to a second conclusion: that the apparent lack upon our part to relieve our publishing office is, that while we do not lack feeling nor yet means to show our feeling, we do lack a suitable plan by which each individual can give his or her mite. For it is true, that the large amount necessary to carry on the cause we all love must largely be made up of "mites."

So I came to a third conclusion, which was that I would write to you and suggest a plan and have you press it upon our people. So here it is.

THE CHILDREN'S FREEWILL OFFERING.

OBJECT: For the Publication of the Glad Tidings of the Coming Kingdom.

PLAN OF WORK: Let every subscri[illegible] THE TIMES, be it father, mother, [illegible]ther, sister or friend, resolve that each child of the family (and you said there were 4,000 families) shall receive a few cents per week, at least for the month; and that at the end of every month, each child shall send to the office of THE TIMES, the amounts received, with their names, and the same be acknowledged by you. I suppose we can safely average two children to every family where THE TIMES is read, so that for the 4,000 families we shall have 8,000 children, and five cents a week to each would be 40,000 cents or $400 dollars a week. One month would swell it to $1,600, and three months to $4,800.

Now Br. Press, don't you think the plan is a good one? This large amount can be secured by only the small mites of five cents a week, given through our dear boys and girls, who we hope will go with us into the blessed kingdom when Jesus comes; and who will remember about this when we shall forget it.

Poor as I am, I believe that I can well afford to give five cents a week to each of our little ones (and I have three, God bless them.) Why the thought of bringing my de[illegible] children into sympathy with m[illegible]lping on the cause of Jesus, [illegible]self more than an equivalent, n[illegible] mention the pleasure and happiness the children will derive from being made the direct contributors to the cause of Jesus.

Now Br. Press, what say you? Will you submit this to our people? If so, then "fire up," and be about it. Make the warmest impressions you can. Dress the plan up in your own style; only don't fail to have "plenty of gravy" to go with it.

Please answer this soon.

Yours working for Jesus,

D. O. HINK.

Why Not Use Tobacco?

First of all, it is poisonous! Mark its sad use on those just beginning its use. Also its blighting, withering influence on the minds, as well as bodies of those who are its habitual users. It is tyrannical! Who among its votaries doubts this. Not that young man, who several years ago began to chew tobacco for the avowed purpose of saving his teeth, Saying, "I'll risk it! I can quit it any time I choose!" Twelve years have passed and what does the sequel show? Teeth badly decayed, heart disease, nervous debility, and with these, comes an awakening consciousness of the evil of tobacco, and a desire to be free from its power. After a three month's siege tobacco comes off victorious, because it is the strongest, having a foothold in every nerve and fibre of the system.

Young men, beware of the first taste of tobacco, as well as the first glass of liquor. Both are a step in the wrong direction, difficult to retrace. It is filthy! So its best friends acknowledge. Some months since while speaking with a Christian brother about its use, he remarked, "It is an abominable, filthy habit, and I wish I was rid of it." "Hast thou faith? Have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth." (Rom. 14:22.)

It is expensive! Let every person who uses this unnecessary article, make an estimate of the cost of the same and he will be surprised to see how much he is throwing away. Let that brother and sister down in —— county, count the cost before they ever buy another pound of tobacco, while they are too poor to afford a religious paper whose truths they profess to love. Don't let it separate you from the love of God. This is the sure foundation.

It makes men forgetful! A short time ago, I heard a lady say, she "hated tobacco worse than ever," because her faith had been sorely tried with a good brother, who uses it excessively. Said she, "I had repeatedly been solicited to visit them (with husband, who sometimes passed that way), but could scarcely afford it, as the fare would be nearly ten dollars. Quite an item for the wife of a minister who has no salary. At last the invitation came: "Tell her to come and it shan't cost her a cent." So the trip was made. They received a hearty welcome, a God bless you, come again!" and—that was all! Did he forget?

Tobacco hinders the spiritual growth and development, just in proportion as it poisons mind and body. Don't try it. Let alone the unclean thing! It is a shame to Christianity to spend money in this way. Verily, this is taking the Lord's money and consuming it upon the lusts of the flesh, while the Gospel of Christ goes a begging.

"Let us who have named the name of Christ depart from iniquity." Making our bodies fit temples for the Holy Spirit to dwell in. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." (Rom. 12: 1.) "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10: 31.) M. B. SMITH.

The Witness of the Spirit.

This great blessing is the privilege of all true believers. Wesley says: "By a sense of pardon, I mean a distinct, explicit assurance that my sins are forgiven." Says another writer: "I should have never looked for a witness of the Spirit, had I not found numerous Scripture which positively asserted, or held it out by necessary induction; and had I not found that all the truly godly of every sect and party, possessed the blessing—a blessing which is the common birthright of the sons and daughters of God. Wherever I went among deeply religious people, I found the blessing. All who had turned from unrighteousness to the living God, and sought redemption by faith in the blood of the cross, exulted in this grace. It was never looked upon by them as a privilege which some peculiarly favored souls were blessed with; it was known from Scripture and experience to be the common lot of the peple of God. It was not persons of a peculiar temperament who possessed it; all the truly righteous had it, whether in their natural dispositions sanguine, melancholy, or mixed. Simple and illiterate as well as those of high cultivation, had a full and clear evidence that God, for Christ's sake, had forgiven their sins; the Spirit itself bearing witness with their spirit that they are the sons and daughters of God."

Martin Luther says: "Let us assure ourselves that God sendeth his Spirit in our hearts." John Calvin says: "The Spirit of God gives such a testimony with our spirit that we perceive our adoption to be certain." Bp. Hooper said: "Blessed is the man in whom God's Spirit beareth record that he is the son of God." Abp. Usher says: "From adoption flows all the Christian's joy, the spirit of adoption." —Sel. by D. C. Corwin.

Consecration.

The above term is expressive of that state which distinguishes between the worldling and the Christian. It implies a separation from a common to a sacred use, whether it pertains to ones own self, or to a thing that may be appropriately used in the service, or worship of God.

It is exceedingly gratifying to see some waking up to this very important work, and giving themselves and all they possess into the hands of the blessed Savior, and no longer regarding themselves as their own, but as the purchased children of Christ, bought with his own precious blood.

We have long thought that there would be a power to draw out some to the consideration of this indispensable work; and it is certainly pleasing to see any who have hitherto neglected such very prominent gospel truth, walking up to the altar of full consecration to God, which is the only condition of acceptance with him.

We as a people are certainly in advance of the world, professedly, so far as Bible truths are concerned; and when we find some who are behind the Methodist denomination in the work of consecration we are glad to see them step into the waters and be healed. If there are still others, who have neglected this first principle of Christianity, and are only theorists, would it not be well for them to bestir themselves and do the first works, if they have begun in the middle or at the last end of Christian duties. Let us begin right, and progress right, and then we shall be likely to end right.

W. A. FENN.

Night and Day.

What a beautiful thought is embodied in those words of holy writ—"and the evening and the morning were the first day," "and the evening and the morning were the second day." Morning has, and ever shall follow evening; and though our whole life may seem like one continual night, it shall truly be succeeded by the brightness of eternal day.

In computing time, we reckon that day commences at twelve o'clock, and thus we have both its extremes shrouded in darkness. We have a similar idea of life; of morning's childhood, and evening's old age. But it need not be thus with the Christian's life; for the evening-time may be brightened by the countenance of our heavenly Father; so that which seems to us like a beautiful sunset scene, is but a type of a single ray from the sun which will shortly usher in the bright and glorious morning of the resurrection.

We read of those in ancient times who died, being "old and full of days," yet how many have died being old and full of nights. Evil thoughts and deeds, unthankfulness and complaint, are such as make up our nights. Our days are made up of pure thoughts and righteous deeds; sorrow patiently borne; words of sympathy to the poor; little acts and looks of kindness which bring back the glad sunshine of some weary soul, and are as balm to the wounded spirit. They are the bright gems, whose radiance sparkles through all time, and by whose clear light we can behold the highway cast up for the ransomed of the Lord. Then can we look beyond to that city which hath no need of light of the sun nor of the moon.

The Outlook.

The end is near. Travel all over the country and see things as they really are, here and there; read the daily record of the world's "goings on;" above all, read the best and only book in the present strife and confusion, haste, and material progress and exclusive pride therein; and it comes upon us more and more with awful force—the judgment is near! Hedged about by the rules and respectabilities of sect, and so prejudiced against the simple truth, earnest Christians of all denominations are beginning to see the light; manifesting their partial enlightenment in one or another dazzling fashion; seeming—O, strange phenomena!—to rejoice over and help forward a revelation which they in their creeds and articles and formal, personal statements deny; admitting away, one by one, the once asserted force of the comparatively few points of Revelation on which the anti-Advent formula reposes.

And yet, when I go into a little Advent chapel, and see the smallness of the number gathered there, and realize something of the blameable coldness that is in the hearts of many of the most highly privileged in Scripture illumination, I wonder where faith is to be found on earth; and when I see visions of an infinite compassion that considers the infirmities of man. Then it is not for any neighbor that regret or censure spring, but one feels as if in his own shortcomings he knew of a wide waste of barren soil;—in a multitude of unbelievers the sense of desolation and of individual responsibility seem alike enhanced. It is only to strive, strive, strive; if by any possibility we may attain the prize of eternal life—so soon to be conferred or forever refused. Then how the wisdom which Christ imparts—and concerning which I recently heard Eld. Hastings speak so comfortingly—comes to the mind. What is this world and its troubles and plans?

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they."

A few shall be waiting and longing, in sufficient hope and trust, while millions will be knocking when he cometh. Talk of revolutions? When the despised of this world shall become the princes of the new earth, these discords which now concern us so mightily will fade away into everlasting contempt. And the strain of the whole meditation comes again: This Revolution is at hand, even at the doors! Our minds sweep over thousands of indications that correspond to the prophecy; and in this we cannot be mistaken. We seem to be past the day and hour when in any promiscuous audience it is necessary to enumerate testimonies to the fulfillment of Paul's picture of the last seconds of time.

A few score of people, in all this crowded city of two hundred thousand inhabitants, openly and specially signify their understanding of this season, as the Book has foretold it. This truth is no longer hid, as far as any lack of mere proclamation is concerned. Yet only a handful are gathered in acceptance of the Revelation which closes the volume. The devil says, It cannot be worthy of acceptance, or the heralds should be counted by thousands, and the waiting children of Christ by tens of thousands. But we know of a verity that the end is at hand.

Thank God, that Book which distinctly marks the signs of the closing age of this earth tells us in the brightest letters how to get ready for the change of residence—to that eternal world, which the righteous alone shall enjoy.—C. in Crisis.

A Conscientious Murderer.

A late narrative of travels in Russia contains the following illustration of religious fervor in that country: A lady, on leaving a private party in St. Petersburg, at a rather advanced hour in the morning, called a droshkee, and having given directions to the driver, the latter proceeded toward her home, as she thought, instead of which he drove her to a rather deserted part of the city, when suddenly he turned round and cut her throat, the rich sable-lined cloak in which she was enveloped having excited his cupidity. Having divested her of this, he dragged the body to the brink of the canal and threw her into it. He then folded up the cloak and laid it on the seat.

On his way back to his stand he was hailed by a gentleman, and, however, reluctant, obliged to take him up as a fare. The gentleman not only noticed the cloak but touching it found his fingers stained with blood. He said nothing until he reached a police station, where having ordered the driver to stop, he gave him into custody on suspicion. The gentleman happened to be the husband of the murdered lady, and by the light recognized the cloak as belonging to his wife. The tragedy happened during Lent, when meat is forbidden. The man confessed the crime. The murdered lady had a little basket with her which contained a pie. Having been asked by the commissary why he had not eaten the pie, "How could I think of eating the pie?" replied the assassin; "it may contain meat, and (devoutly crossing himself) I am, thank God, a good Christian."—*Cor. Our Pulpit.

The Chicago Fire.

Abstract of sermon by Eld. F. Burr, in Green St. Chapel, Sunday evening, Oct. 15th, 1871.
Lesson: Heb. ch. 8. Texts: Luke 13: 1-5 & 21: 26.

I. The Hand of God.

No event, be it small or great, can transpire in the universe, without the knowledge and permit of the Almighty. And in the years that are past since sin first entered with its attendant train of disasters, amid the rising and falling, the building up and overturning of temporal works, nothing has transpired without either the direction or permit of God. Those who are not God's children do not often see it in this light. They have their idea of fortune and misfortune separate from an overruling Providence, and if they prosper it is attributed to their own energy, or to some natural force or law with which they acted in harmony; and if disaster comes, it is because they failed to act aright in view of some natural law, or because the forces of nature were contrary to them.

The people of God, recognizing God as supreme controler, see all events in the light of his revealed word, and are not puffed up by prosperity or disheartened by adversity. In great events that take the world by surprise, the disciples of Christ see the purpose of God in the fulfillment of the prophetic word, and are therefore not astonished.

Look back a few years and notice some of the events that illustrate this. Notice the manner of the settlement of this country, and the establishment of this government. The unconverted student of history remarks it as quite a strange thing that so many of the first settlers should choose the rough hills of New England and endure such hardships, in preference to choosing a portion more easily subdued, and with a less rigid climate. And then, it is strange also that the few colonists should so successfully resist the power of Great Britain in their revolution. And he glories in it, and says, "We are a mighty people, and have done great things!" But the attentive servant of God sees all this as a means in reserve by the Heavenly Father to bring about the fulfillment of prophecy which reads, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Under the former monarchial systems there was no progress for ages: but to ripen the world for judgment, there is brought forth a system of government and a people that shall infuse new life and move the masses in a progressive way. God has accomplished this, and the end is near.

Also the stretching of the Atlantic cable beneath the ocean's wave, and the invention of the telegraph itself, are regarded as great achievements of man, and, indeed, they are; but the purpose lies beyond all this in the mind of God, even a preparation for Babylon's downfall, when the exclamation "Alas! alas!" may be sounded throughout all lands by one pulsation of the knowledge of man.

And the great civil war this people have recently passed through, has been regarded as a dire calamity, and a judgment of the Almighty for the sins of the people, and indeed it was all this and something more. The prophecy of Habakkuk in the third chapter, which I read to you as a lesson, speaks of the "tents of Cushan" as being in affliction. The marginal reading of "Cushan" is "Christophia." This was to be the case just preceding the time of judgment, and in the troubles of the African race and their deliverance from bondage in this country, we have its fulfillment.

And we have had the signs in the darkening of the sun on May, 19th, 1780, and the falling stars in November, 1833, and the elements of land and sea have manifested a strong tendency to show the approaching dissolution of nature's forces as they now subsist. We have seen the shores of continents swept by tidal waves, and whole islands engulfed, in answer to the expression of the "sea and the waves roaring," or "raging."

We have seen the earth heave and quake in every land as it "reels to and fro, and staggers like a drunken man."

And now, there comes the most appelling devastation of fire, and with one fell swoop the destroying angel touches city and country, and wo and ruin unexampled follow in his course.

II. The Fire.

Look at the experience of this great city of the Northwest, and see an example of Jehovah's power. One week ago to-night the people of this city went to their beds in peace as usual. The Sunday Times of that day contained a two-column article on the wealth and glory, and progress of Chicago. It boasted in unmeasured terms of what had been done and what was being done, but it was only a sample of the boasting that has been often repeated in times past. It was like Nebuchadnezzar's great speech, "Is not this great Babylon which I have built?" But the spoiler came, and in one day the glory and pride of this city came to nought, and those temples, and palaces, and works of art, the boast of man, were a blackened, crumbling, ruined mass.

III. Why is this?

Some say it is a judgment upon the city for its wickedness. Perhaps so. But why are not other cities as wicked as this also visited? Are not the people of Chicago as generous, as large-hearted, as humane, as others? Nay; but the people of Chicago are notable for these good qualities. There is crime enough here, and I would not cover it, but "are Chicagoans sinners above all people because they suffer such things?" I tell you nay, "but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." The Almighty is showing the world by visible tokens the coming dissolution of all things, and in these startling scenes we are warned to be ready for the "great and notable day of the Lord." And in that great fire one peculiar feature was noticable. Where the hindrances were the greatest, there the fire burned the fastest, and raged the fiercest, and seemed the most fiendish. Did you notice this, and that the first mile of its course after it commenced the south branch occupied but about four hours, while the next two miles occupied sixteen hours? But the first mile on the south side was mainly of buildings of brick, and stone, and iron, while the last two on the north side were mostly of wood. Will stone, and brick, and iron, consume quicker than wood? Yet they melted down like wax as it were before the intense heat, while the wooden blocks on the north side were much longer in consuming. It brought to my mind as I stood beholding it, the account of the fire that consumed Elijah's sacrifice on Mount Carmel, in which the fire burned the sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and licked up the water in the trench. The hand of God was in this conflagration, not merely because of sin, but also because of judgment to come.

IV. Its effect. Have the people learned true wisdom from this sad experience? Are they permanently benefited in a moral sense? I fear not. Pride is humbled for a time, but it is pride still. There is no more real recognition of God's word to day than one week ago. The imminent danger is past, peace abides with us, and men whose "hearts failed them for fear," are growing harder and prouder than before. New Chicago will be a magnificent city, and the world shall be prouder of it than ever.

But there are a few who see another city of golden light and fadeless glory, and the hearts of such failed not amid the general gloom. I have not seen a disconsolate pilgrim in all this. On the contrary, they are happy and cheerful. How joyfully they take the spoiling of their goods, knowing that in heaven they have a more enduring substance. Indeed our brethren who are losers of earthly property by the fire seem to be the happiest class among us. And one brother told me to-day in my house that the night after the fire he spent under the sidewalk, and said it was the happiest night of his life. Think of the sustaining grace in all these sad scenes. Can the world present anything like it? The man of the world may endure hardness, but will his happiness be increased at such a time? I think not. Let us all drink of the same peaceful fountain that we also may have grace to sustain in the hour of need.

V. What next? We are past the imminent danger, and the people will be more careful hereafter, and we will have no more such scenes. So says the world, but my friends, I have a different word of instruction for you to-night, from that. I cannot say to you that we are past all such scenes of disaster as this, I see the dark cloud of disaster hang heavier before us than it has been heretofore. Take courage now, the worst is to come. I see in the appalling disaster, connected with the terrible devastation by fire in several of our neighboring States but fresh tokens of a coming judgment day, and as we near that day the omens will thicken, and the scenes are to be still more terrific. As a ship that sails over the sea, and nears the harbor amid the storms of a surf beaten shore, so the church of Christ are passing on and nearing the eternal haven, and the tempestuous gale that shall carry us through the judgment scenes is not to abate, but to increase. Nevertheless we stand firm. Let the storms beat, and the night grow blacker in darkness and gloom, the people of God fear not the danger, for our heavenly Father is at the helm.

I do not expect many will be willing to receive this. It is cold comfort to a worldly-minded man, and there are but few who are not too worldly-minded to accept this truth that cuts off their darling earthly hopes. The people of Chicago do not wish to hear such a solution of the question of the future. Men who preach such things are in no higher repute to-day than were Noah, Isaiah, or Jeremiah in their day. The people have had trouble enough already, and do not wish the wound made worse, but call for some mollifying ointment. Dear hearers, I tell you truly, there is no healer but Jesus. There is no other ark of safety amid these storms. The trouble of the sore is, there is proud flesh, and it must be cut away or you perish. Earth is growing palsied in her circulation, and trembles with age, and is weak with labor, and must soon pass away. Happy is he who profits by these lessons of the past and present, and lays up his treasures in heaven. Events do not go backward in their lessons but press forward toward the close. Dr. Croly has written of it in dramatic poetry—

"But a day is coming fast,
Earth thy mightiest and thy last;
It shall come in fear and wonder,
Heralded by trump and thunder;
It shall come in strife and toil;
It shall come in blood and spoil;
It shall come in empire's groans,
Burning temples, trampled thrones;
Then ambition rue thy lust—
Earth to earth and dust to dust."

Thus it shall be for a brief portion of time, and beyond the judgment day the fairer scenes of glory await the weary, faithful pilgrim. O sinner, ponder well these lessons. Remember, that while the scenes around us bring naught but fear to those who have no hope in Christ, there is a fount of inexhaustible love ready for you, if you will but give yourself up to be guided and saved by him who died for you, and who rose again for our justification. Cast away your pride and accept this precious Savior, and all will be well with you.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... Editor.

Tuesday Afternoon, Oct. 31, 1871.

We have an interesting letter from Br. Fasset, who has arrived safely in California, for our next paper. It was received just as we were going to press.

The Boston Traveler thinks Tilton's eulogy of Mrs. Woodhull paralleled only by the deification of the harlot in the French Revolution. The Traveler is right, except that the former act was endorsed by multitudes, and the shame of the latter is centered upon a few.

A text for the times may be found in Gal. 6: 10. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Those who would know the dividend upon this investment can learn of it by reading vv. 8 and 9.

By an oversight, the gift of four cents, by a little boy at Alton Bay, was not mentioned in our receipts. It was given with evident heartiness, and as thankfully received as any donation that has reached us. We do not know his name. It is doubtless in the Book of Life; and may he so live that it may never be blotted out of that record.

The Gospel Visitor—organ of the Dunkards—frankly avows its faith that the spirits of the dead hang around their friends, the churches where they used to worship, and the grave-yards. This gives new color of probability to many ghost stories. But how came God's inspired prophet to make such an awful blunder, and say that the dead perceive it not, whether their sons come to honor, or are brought low! After all, perhaps its the Visitor that is wrong, and the Bible is right. We think so!

A writer in the Christian Advocate in the midst of a very weak criticism of the Bible Union Translation, makes one good point, concerning its rendering hades by underworld:

> 'And in the underworld.' Now this is not a literal translation, nor is the word English in the sense in which it is here used; it is not found in Johnson and Webster at all. Worcester introduces it, but as in the sense of the lower or inferior world. By no means is it a translation of hades.

It is worth while to make a note of the fact that the Baptist, a leading journal of its denomination South, says:

> We know nothing of Christ's invisible kingdom or church, nor do the Scriptures teach us that he has either a 'church' or 'kingdom' in heaven; hence, the expressions we so constantly hear in prayer, 'thine upper and better kingdom,' 'the church triumphant in heaven,' etc., teach the people falsely, and should be avoided. Christ's triumphant church and glorious kingdom universal, will ultimately be here on this earth, the scene of his suffering and seeming defeat.

While traveling recently in Illinois, we happened to be in a car with a number of legislators going to the recent extra session of the legislature of that State. Presently one of them proposed to get up a euchre party to "kill a few hours of time." Another, who sat directly behind us, indulged about equally in scoffs at religion and his brandy bottle. Are these the men to make laws in these times? Men who on their way to one of the most important sessions of their body, must have a game of cards to "kill the time!" Men who fear not God, and set examples of profanity! There is much said of progress and reform. Evidently both are needed, and at headquarters too.

One of the train boys on the Michigan Central Railroad recently while distributing his "prize packages" offered them to two Methodist ministers, one of whom proceeded to rebuke him for encouraging "gambling." The train boy, in retorting desired to know wherein his prize-package sales were any worse than the grab bags, post-offices and fish-ponds of church festivals? And the minister, evidently guilty, was shut up. He had nothing to say. Shame, shame on the ministry and churches who compromise the gospel message by "doing evil that good may come." And let those who oppose such things—as some do—be more fervent in opposition than ever.

A writer in the Prophetic Times, on the intermediate state, depends upon 'an unbroken chain of circumstantial evidence.' His chain has two links: The 'spirits in prison' of 1 Pet. 3: 18, 19, and 'the angels that kept not their first estate,' of Jude. And he triumphantly asks—'Is not the existence of an intermediate state plainly taught in these two passages?' Possibly we are very dull: but we cannot with our present intelligence perceive what the condition of certain fallen angels has to do with the condition of man in death. Our friend has no 'chain' at all—he has only two links, and they do not belong together.

The Prophetic Times has an article on 'the intermediate state.' Its concluding words are, 'From all false doctrine, heresy and schism, good Lord deliver us'—a prayer that could hardly be offered in a more appropriate connection: for while the first portion of the article is full of eminently sound and strong points, the latter part is almost undiluted error. And his 'best hold' in any event is 'a chain of circumstantial evidence,' or inferential testimony. This sort of evidence is well enough when there is no other witness to be had, though even then it is often of the most deceptive character. But whoever heard of direct testimony being set aside by circumstantial evidence? It is only done in immaterialist theology.

The Baptist informs a correspondent that "hades means nothing more than the 'spirit world.' That part occupied by the spirits of saints is called Paradise. Thither Jesus in spirit went with the thief, and preached to the spirits therein during the space of three of our natural days."

—It is quite certain that hades means 'nothing more' than that. The term is used in that sense by some of the heathen writers. But it is also used by them of the grave, the tomb or sepulcher: and in the Scriptures has only this sense. Hezekiah says—'Sheol, or hades cannot praise thee.' (Is. 38: 18.) David says: 'Like sheep they are laid in sheol, or hades.' (Ps. 49: 14.) Substitute 'spirit world' for grave in either of these passages, and we should not only be taught that spirits are unconscious, but that 'sheep' after death are 'laid in the spirit world,' also!

The Christian Record thinks we, and others might attend the Harrisonville debate. When any clear-headed Advent preacher can have a candid chairman, knowing enough of the rules of public debate to be able to deal justly by both parties, we feel willing to risk him, alone, against a meeting house full of opponents. But if we could have known that not one among Eld. Green's many opponents would act the gentlemanly and Christian part to this extent, we would certainly have made an effort to be present; though with little faith that any moderator's decision would have been respected by such an audience. As to the claim that the victory of Treat over Green was 'overwhelming'—that was to be expected. We seldom hear of a debate in which both parties are not overwhelmingly victorious—both sides always 'whip,' as the boys say. Our friends affirm that Br. Green maintained his cause, in spite of unfair treatment. We were not present, but we believe what they say about it.

THE FIRES!

It is well to talk about "natural causes;" but there is a God, and what we call nature is but the manifestation of his works, and of the principles upon which they are accomplished. He rules in nature and over nature, and nothing occurs, even the fall of a sparrow, or the dropping of a hair from our heads, without his notice. Hence while we talk about human agencies, the drouth, the winds, atmospheric conditions, etc., as connected with the fires of this season, we must not forget that God's hand is in and over all these startling catastrophes.

The record of the fires is absolutely appalling to the mind that soberly considers it. From the time the first faint rumors of the Minnesota and Wisconsin conflagrations came to our ears, almost every day has added new terrors to the list of disasters, until we must cease to wonder that some have asked themselves if the fires of the last days are really kindling. The record is unprecedented. "The judgments of God" are in the land; but it remains to be seen whether "the people will learn righteousness."

But we would not be misunderstood. We do not think it true that the people of the Minnesota woods, of the Wisconsin pineries, of Eastern Michigan, or of Chicago were sinners above all men. This is not what God designs to teach by providential calamities. The solemn lesson is best expressed in our Savior's own language—"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." God is calling upon the nations to repent and give glory to him. He is seeking to show them the vanity, yes, the folly of living for this life and this world. His providential dealings would, or should lead them with one voice to cry—Is there anything better, more permanent and enduring than this world affords? and how can we be saved from the apparently impending doom of all things?

Some are thus affected, and would lay hold upon the hope of the gospel if it were fairly presented to them; and among all the great needs of the present time, there is none greater than the necessity for men full of the Spirit and power of God to proclaim to the perishing world the gospel of Jesus Christ—to tell them that only by a living union with him, by the principle of faith and the operation of the Holy Spirit, can they come into possession of endless life or an enduring inheritance. And this proclamation must be made by men who feel their message and have received an unction from on high. As Adventists we claim to have the message that the world needs at this juncture. Hence our duty is plain: we should either deliver the message with power, enthusiasm and energy; or else we should retire from the field, and cease to assert that we have the truth for the times, or, as Peter styled it—"the present truth." It is no time to talk the next world and live as if there were no other world than this; but a time to make God's cause first in every relation in life—to do, to suffer, to sacrifice in order to let the world hear the proclamation that only a little while remains for probation; that soon he that is filthy, unjust, without Christ, must so remain, and therefore perish in the great cleansing fires of the approaching day of God.

Let us, then, who claim to have received the light of God's word, either rise to the level of the responsibilities which that light imposes or renounce our high pretensions, and tell the honest truth—that our hearts and hopes are fixed here, and we have no settled convictions of "the good things to come" spoken of in God's word!

THE MONEY.

We do not know whether to be most amused or provoked at the anxiety of a class of persons to know what becomes of the money sent to our office. We are responsible to those who send the money; and this class will always find us ready to account for the funds of the Association. But busybodies, never giving anything themselves, though exceedingly anxious about what others have paid, must content themselves with the Treasurer's report, which they can study at their leisure. We are under no responsibility to them.

Can our readers believe that friends from this village have been approached within a short time, by persons professing godliness and an interest in "that blessed hope," with insinuations and inquiries to learn about what proportion of the receipts of the Association were appropriated by the Editor and his family? Yet it is a fact that it has been done.

The excuse offered for this contemptibleness was, that they "could not see where he got his money to travel so much!" And because they "could not see," they proceed to libel and and slander, by insinuations that as they "can not see" where it comes from, therefore we must steal it! Poor souls! They do us some present injury; but we have all time, and eternity beside, to live it down.

We do not care particularly for these petty slanders so far as we are concerned personally; and would not refer to them on our own account. But they work a deeper injury. The harm they do is this, they have prevented many generous souls from helping the cause in the West, who, otherwise would have aided it. Our injury is nothing; but the harm to the cause is serious. There is not the least danger of the necessity arising, as it once did in long ago, old fashioned times, to send out word that the people's offerings are too many and too much, and the current may be stayed. Every intelligent Adventist knows that tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars could be expended annually in various departments of this cause, to the very best advantage. Why, then, obstruct any one of the channels through which the much smaller streams of assistance flow? Were it not better instead of hindering this good work by venting petty suspicinos, or jealousy, to help and encourage by cheering words and kindly endorsement? For our own part, we would not care to face the judgment with the conviction that we had turned aside a single penny from any good work by utterance of suspicions founded upon evil surmisings, much less with a consciousness that we had helped stay the proclamation of this glorious gospel of the kingdom.

THE TRUE SYSTEM.

There has been a great deal said about "some system of giving." The best system we know of was that uttered by the converted persecutor, Paul. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him."

But says one my wages only come monthly. Very well. Carry out the principle Paul enunciated. When your wages are received set apart what you honestly can for the Lord—sanctify a portion to him. And do it every time.

Let the farmer carry out the same principle. When the wheat is sold, set apart "in store" what you will give to the cause of God. And do the same in all your sales.

It is the way to help further the gospel and dispense religious charity. There have never been any permanent improvements upon Pauline theology; nor have we seen any church economy superior to his. The trouble is, to get men and women of the Pauline spirit—washed, cleansed, sanctified by faith and the Holy Spirit to carry out his suggestions.

Suppose we one and all commence to practice what he preached and practiced too.

"GLAD YOU WERE NOT THERE!"

So many have made this remark in relation to our office since the Chicago fire, that we feel constrained to say a few words to the point. We were glad we were not in "the burned district" of Chicago; but had we been settled on "the West Side" where we expected to locate if we went there, we could have accomplished a great deal of good both for our Association and for others, in the days that have succeeded the fire. Our presses would have run night and day to the advantage of not only ourselves but many who suffered loss—for there was not an office left in Chicago as fairly equipped as our own for work.

There are many reasons why our office ought to be in Chicago: but we shall not waste any time in useless repinings that it is not in the best place. Our establishment here we look upon as providentially provided: and as long as the way is not opened to a better place, we shall pursue all the advantages of our present location, and make the best of the disadvantages. Doubtless when the Master we serve is ready for us to go elsewhere, he will open the way.

Meanwhile those who desire and have pressed the change will never have a better chance for action than the present.

POST OFFICE ADDRESSES.

Notwithstanding all that has been said upon the subject, about one half of all the letters we receive are defective in this respect. Out of twenty letters in a recent mail, we had to get the State, or Post Office, or name, from the postmark or memory, or a guess. How easy it would be for every writer to give his post office, county, State and name, written plainly. Please do it.

A CONVERSATIONAL ILLUSTRATION.

G. Br. W., don't you want The Times?

W. Yes, but I have not got the money just now.

G. But you will have it by and by, won't you?

W. Why yes, I hope so.

G. Then may I not order the paper for you?

W. Yes—I want the paper, and I think I shall have the money before long.

G. Very well. I will take your name, and you can hand me the money as soon as you get it.

Now as I know this brother to be good, and I forward his name, which you place upon your books. Of course brethren working for The Times in this way, will be very careful to send none but those they are satisfied will pay up all right.

What think you of the policy?

—The above is the substance of a proposition by Br. Green. He knows that in many instances other religious journals have had their list enlarged with good names, by pursuing this policy. He asks what we think of the plan. We reply, we will be happy to send the paper to any person and wait upon them for the pay, if they are endorsed as good by any of our brethren in the ministry: indeed, we should esteem it a privilege under such circumstances as those detailed above. Br. Green suggests that such subscriptions should be charged to the minister sending them. But we would prefer to keep the account direct with each subscriber, as less trouble and work for us.

"THE BIBLE BANNER."

A WORD TO PREACHERS.

1. We will send the Bible Banner to any preacher or theological student for 75 cents, with choice of a book from our valuable list, or for 50 cents, without a book.

2. We will send the Banner free to any preacher who devotes his whole time and energies to the gospel ministry, provided he desires it and will endeavor to secure subscribers.

3. Let all who answer to this description, whose names are not already on our list, give us their address without delay. And let all our preaching brethren who now take the Banner tell us if they would like to have it continued, and send us such communications, selections, facts, incidents, suggestions, and words of cheer as will make the paper still more excellent in its contents and more efficient in its truth-telling mission. Address, "The Bible Banner," 14 Murray St. New York City. In behalf of our common cause,

G. E. Merrill, Worcester, Mass:

I am still trying to let my light shine, and to give a reason of the hope I have with meekness. Not long ago I attended a Baptist prayer-meeting, the second or third that I have attended with them since I became a believer in the precious truths of the Bible. As you may think, it sounded strange to me, to hear addressed to the impenitent these words, "As you value your immortal souls, seek the Lord!" I felt like asking the brother where he found those words. Surely they can't be found in the Bible. Instead of having an immortal soul, or being immortal in any way, we are exhorted to seek for that gift. Why seek for it, if we already have it? Echo answers why? Let me believe the Bible, the book of inspiration, rather than the heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul.

I bless the Lord that I ever saw the light on this subject, for it makes everything else connected with the plan of salvation plain. This is the key that unlocks the door of truth, and lets us out into the liberty of the sons of God. It is believing the truth (the mortality of man) that makes me love "that blessed hope," the appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ. I hope so to live that when he does appear I can hail him with joy, and not with grief.

I received the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, Extra, addressed to the brethren and sisters. I have read it over two or three times; and I wish to say that I am in perfect sympathy with the cause in the West, and have been ever since I knew anything about it, and more so now I have read the Extra, and learned that there was a debt on the Society. I assure you, you have my prayers; and not only my prayers, but I feel it a privilege to help pay the debt. I feel as the writer does: "If I could I would pay the whole debt." But I can't. But will pledge $5, and pray that your hopes may be realized, and that you may as you say, receive a letter from every subscriber of THE TIMES. I don't expect all can give, but all can write. Let all write, and all that can, let them send in their pledges, that this debt may be cancelled. I know it can be if we will. Let us do it with cheerfulness, for the Lord loves a cheerful giver.

C. S. Branch, Connecticut. About five or six months ago I picked up one of your papers, THE TIMES, and I observed a statement from you or one of your contributors, that neither immortal soul, never dying spirit, nor everlasting torment could be found in the Bible. I thought this was the most reckless assertion I ever saw, especially for a Christian paper to make. I never was any lover, up to that time of the Adventists, for I was always taught they were star-gazers and prying unto God's word, and meddling with things that were not intended for us to know. In this view, it is a pity they were ever written. But at that time my cup of disgust and abhorrence was full. I went home and thought I would look up a verse or two and write to those crazy Adventists.

Well, will you believe me? I have been looking every evening and Sabbath, with few exceptions, since, and I am surprised to say at this late day of my life, that I can adopt the sayings and teachings of Paul: Man is of the earth, earthy. I acknowledge that you and the Advent Church have the truth upon the Bible, and on every hand I find in it the doctrine the Adventists proclaim.

My name is enrolled on the book of a church that holds altogether different views. They hold that man is immortal and that the gift of eternal life is not through our Lord Jesus Christ (as is expressly laid down and recorded over and over again in the most unmistakable language in the Book of God.)

Now I say to the church above alluded to (without calling any names), show me book, chapter and verse where man is called immortal, and that the wicked are to suffer to all eternity in everlasting hell-fire. If you can point me to any passages to confirm the belief you cherish so fondly, it will be gratefully received; if not I must conclude that you have deceived me, and are now deceiving your followers. If you can show me the Scripture asked for, you will have re-established my faith, and I will humbly ask forgiveness. But on the other hand, if you cannot produce the desired proof, come out like men, and own it, and place yourselves on the broad platform of Bible truths! Study the Bible, and subscribe for the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, and I surmise that within a remarkable short space of time you will shake off Platoism and every other "ism," and will see the Bible in a new light—one straightforward story.

The Fire n Eastern Michigan.

The little church in Grant township has had a hard time. Oct. 9 Br. Lambkin's family were burned out. They saved their lives by flight, shutting themselves up in a root house, or cellar. As soon as they got in there, they gave God praise for sparing their lives. Then Br. L. took a thick quilt, wet it, and went to look for his brother's family, Mr. Curtis Lambkin. He found that the family had fled, all but his brother, and he was trying to save some things in the house, but failed. He then started to find his wife, mother, and two small children, one but a few months old. They had gone from the place where he left them when he returned to save his things. God blessed him in finding them. He then started with both of his children in his arms, his wife and mother (an old lady of sixty-eight) one on each side of him, a small bundle of clothes on his back, and passed, as it were, right through the fire, for fire was on each side of him. Coming to a piece of low ground which the fire had not touched, he told his little girl to lie down face to the ground, to keep from smothering, and go to sleep. She said, "Pa, I do not want to burn up." He was obliged to lie down with her until she got to sleep. In that way and place they spent the night.

Br. Edwin Lambkin started back from his brother's house to his own family—fire all around him, and found the front of the root house on fire, and his own clothing was also burning. He had a pail of water and a pail of milk, with which he succeeded in quenching the flames, and saving his own life, and the lives of his family. He saved a good share of his things in his root house. But his feed for his stock was all burned. His brother lost every thing but one or two trunks All of their lumber on their places was burned. They depended on their lumbering this winter for their summer's living; but it is all gone now. Hundreds of dollars worth of property is in ashes. Last Sunday night people were obliged to bury their goods to save them. The loss cannot be told.

Evening Talks With my Neighbors.

After a late arrival of Advent books and tracts from THE TIMES office, I concluded to visit each evening Christian families and others until the whole town was canvassed.

I first called on a Disciple family, and said, My friends, here is a little book I desire you to read—Life Beyond Death. It will do you good and edify you.

SISTER. Well, well Br. Lawyer; I understand that you have left us and fallen into "soul-sleeping."

L. Well my good sister, I always answer to any name, if I know that I am meant.

S. But Br. L., what is your present belief.

L. My present belief is simply the whole truth (Bible), as before my belief was partly Plato's Fables.

S. I believe the whole truth as well as you do.

L. Let us see. Do you believe that the works of the devil will be destroyed? (1 John 3: 8.)

S. Yes, I do.

L. Do you believe that the wicked will be destroyed? (2 Pet. 2: 12.)

S. I believe they will go to overlasting torment.

L. Hold on, sister. Is not your denomination a great people to cry out to other sects, "Bible names for Bible things?"

S. Yes, they are.

L. Well, does the Bible give you that name for the future state of the dead, after the resurrection?

S. Not in so many words.

L. Then I do not believe it in so many words.

S. I don't care if the Bible does say that the wicked will be destroyed—I shan't believe it.

L. You know what becomes of unbelievers?

S. That is merely your opinion.

L. Oh! no. I merely read you the Scriptures. It does not require my opinion.

S. "Wise men change."

L. "Fools never do."

S. I will read; for I see that you could not have had any wrong motive in taking your present view, for you are persecuted and abused for it, when before you was very popular.

L. True. One of my old friends said recently to one of my acquaintances, that I "had religion on the brain." I answered, It is better to have religion on the brain, than to have error on it; for it is the truth that saves, and not error.

S. I feel just as happy as you do, in your present belief.

L. True; and yet it may be your destruction (Phil. 3: 19), as I can illustrate, to show you that feelings are no criterion of safety, unless based upon the rock of truth. Suppose I owe you ten dollars. You are in great want; have a large family; husband dead; children crying for bread. Just at this time in the evening I appear and give you a ten dollar greenback. You clap your hands for joy. You rejoice with your children, and you get on your knees and thank God for sending it. You speak comforting words to your children, and tell them that in the morning you will go to the baker's for bread, etc. The morning comes, you go to the baker's and buy your bread and then present your ten dollar bill, when, lo! he pronounces it counterfeit, and takes back his bread, and threatens you with arrest. Will you attempt to say that your feelings of joy were not genuine?

S. Certainly not!

L. Did they (the feelings of joy) save you from starvation?

S. No, they did not.

L. Then how do you know that your present feelings are right, and will not lead to the same end?

S. Oh! I think not!

L. I do not want your "think so's" or "believe so's" but "Bible names for Bible things." Give me a Bible foundation for your feelings.

S. You do not believe that we are all wrong in preaching the immortality of the soul?

L. Do not ask me for my belief. Just ask me, What does the Bible say? What does the God of all the earth say? He says: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezk. 18: 20.)

S. Oh! That does not mean die; it means torment in hell!

L. Who says so? not the Bible, I assure you.

S. Our preachers preach it that way!

L. Then the Bible does not say it that way?

S. No, it does not.

L. Then I do not believe it that way. Good evening.

J. S. LAWYER.

From San Francisco.

Eld. O. R. Fassett delivered his first discourse at Mission Street Advent church yesterday morning. In the morning he preached from 2 Cor. 2: 16—"Who is sufficient for these things?" The line of the discourse will be readily gathered—a natural, simple, yet impressive introductory sermon. The audience was composed of about 100 adults; and there was the attention that signified profound interest in the welcome and unceremonial installation. At the close of the morning prayer-meeting, a greeting song was sung. At the close of the sermon, three young men were given right hand of fellowship by Eld. Howell; whose congratulations on the newly truth-endowed members of the society were most appropriate. Eld. Fassett was then, in a few chosen words, formally greeted by a member of the society. After the introduction, the congregation generally passed up to the pulpit end of the church and shook hands with the welcomed Elder. A.

Mental Aberration.

The death of Prof. Mahan of West Point, illustrates the effects of mental trouble in disordering the brain. Though very well advanced in life he maintained, up to this summer, a clear and active mind, priding himself in keeping up with the latest advances of thought and experience in his profession. In spite of his zeal, however, the Visiting Committee at the last examination of the Military Academy saw fit to recommend his retirement. This was a fatal wound. He felt it keenly as an act of injustice, for so it seemed to him, and his mind became so unsettled that his physcian forbid his being left alone. That he should have thrown himself from the steamboat into the river was not strange, and clearly an act without mortal responsibility. His labors have been intense through life, his responsibilities great and his mastery of the most profound mathematical subjects such as to give him a world-wide reputation. He might have continued to use his mind in the same direction of study without the slightest danger of aberration. But a breath of, trouble in disapointment and the sense of injury, shook reason from her seat till he knew not what he was doing. So often are we reminded that while work is natural and consistent with health, even though it be arduous, anxiety and trouble are deadlier often than material poisons.—Sel.

Sunday in the Stomach.

THE hardest working member of the body is, in many cases, not the hand, not the foot, nor the brain, but that one upon whose action all these depend for constant nourishment. We are apt at all times to gratify the palate at the expense of the digestion, and never more so than when the mind is relieved of its usual cares by the suspension of labor on the day of rest. But how great a mistake it is to rest evary part of the body but one!

The reason for partaking sparingly on the Sabbath of the delights of the table are obvious enough, but should be repeatedly stated, so long as worldly customs exist to draw Christians into temptation. The stomach needs rest, and can at no time take it to better advantage than on that day when the body undergoes least exertion and the mind is free from oppressive care. Those families that employ servants should consider that not only the master and mistress, but also those who wait upon them, have spiritual needs which cannot be supplied if the usual routine of service is insisted upon. Moreover, a partial fast for full-fed persons is not only salutory in a physical point of view, but promotes the exercise of the spiritual faculties, and enables the soul to commune with God with more readiness and ferrency. Therefore, we urge light meals on Sunday, that body and spirit may prosper together.—Sel.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

The discussion at Money Creek, Minn., between Elds. C. F. Dikeman and E. T. Himes was largely attended. The community was aroused to search the Scriptures as never before, and much prejudice was removed. It closed with the best of feeling, after which Eld. Himes preached one evening on the signs of the times and the judgment. A deep interest was manifested among the unconverted, some professing to give their hearts to Jesus. A protracted meeting was called for, but other engagements prevented holding it.——Sr. Dudley is now filling Sr. Fassett's appointments in Minn., and Wis. for the winter.——Br. T. J. Giddings immersed two in Pine Lake, near Boyne, Mich. at the close of a recent meeting.——Br. Lawson baptized two at Toronto, Ont. not long since.——The church at Rochester has just pledged $450 to sustain a missionary, away from home, besides sustaining their home preacher. We know of churches that are dying of dry rot, because they are not doing this very thing. "Dollars for the world; dimes and cents for the Lord" is the rule with many.——We learn that Br. James H. Whitmore is to take charge of the church in Rochester, N. Y. He could not be more pleasantly situated than at East Shelby; but Rochester presented a larger field of usefulness, and the unanimous call was so pressing, that he finally accepted it. We congratulate the church in Rochester, while the friends at Shelby and Barre have our warmest sympathy.——Br. B. F. Stevens, who has been very ill at Portsmouth, N. H. is now recovering slowly. He has been severely afflicted: the Lord will now make him more useful than ever.——Br. I. C Wellcome says: We arrived home in safety Oct. 4, finding friends waiting to greet us and glad to see us, after absence in the "far West" of three and a half months, during which time I have traveled about five thousand five hundred miles, and preached the word of life to several thousand of strangers, and formed many very pleasant acquaintances with dear children of the Lord, and received much kindness of them.——Br. Jonas Wendell is in Ohio, first with the Norwalk church; now in Nevada.——A Brother in El Dorado, Ark., writes that THE TIMES and tracts are eagerly read all through Union county. He has to lend them as soon as read. There will be fruit by and by.——We hear that the editor of the Christian Record is pleased to learn that a cheap edition of Br. M. Field's debate with Connolly upon the State of the Dead is to be published, and declares that brethren will buy two to every one bought by an Adventist. If they do there will be more Adventists within another six months. That is all of that.——Br. J. R. Preston has been very sick for some two months. Is now better again. Says he 'never had a harder time in his life.'——The Advent Herald reports for the three months ending Oct. 1 the following receipts: Subscription, $775; Books and tracts $212; Donations, $422. Expenditures Paper, $417; Editor, $383. Foreman and type setting, $475; Press work $143. The difference to date is $510.

AT HOME.

“ “ “ The Postmaster General intends to urge Congress to establish a postal telegraph. Good.

“ “ “ A man east is making whisky from Canada thistles. That is adding to "the curse."

“ “ “ The Poles of this country are charged with conspiring to murder the Grand Duke Alexis during his visit among us.

“ “ “ Lake Ontario was the scene of a terrible wreck a few days since. Sixty souls found a watery grave.

“ “ “ Three men in Tennessee recently ran away with an express train, while the engineer, etc., were at supper, and robbed the Express Co. safe of $4,000.

“ “ “ Western New York has been on fire—now happily extinguished by the rains. In Rochester the thick smoke darkened the sun until lamps became a necessity.

“ “ “ Affairs are progressing rapidly in Utah. Brigham Young, his son, and others, have been arrested on charge of murder, as well as adultery. Next week we shall be able to give full details of affairs there.

“ “ “ Hawkins, the much married Mormon, has been found guilty of adultery, but sentence has not been pronounced. Not only are active measures being taken against polygamists, but report says, that the parties guilty of the assassinations of Danite times are to be brought to trial.

“ “ “ There was quite a little squall "down east" about a Gloucester fishing smack that violated some of the Dominion custom house regulations. But for the smoke of the Western fires, which threw it in the shade, it would have created quite a sensation. As it was, little was thought of it away from the neighborhood of the transaction.

“ “ “ Tweed, the leader of the corrupt New York officials has been arrested. He is on bail for two millions of dollars. Ingersoll, Woodward and Garvey ran away after putting their ill-gotten gains in the hands of relatives. Over $18,000,000 has been expended on the Court House that ought not to have cost over $3,000,000. For two years one half the revenues of the city have been stolen.

“ “ “ There has been a shameful riot at Los Angleles, Cal.—an attack of 'roughs' upon the Chinese. The mob appears to have been actuated solely by animosity of the race, and desire to plunder. Witnesses before the Coroner's jury are giving testimony with apparent reluctance, under fear of retaliation. The testimony implicate two Irishmen of having boasted of assisting in killing the Chinese. The Chinamen who shot Officer Bilderain were arrested and turned over to the authorities by the Chinese themselves, and are now in jail. Only four of the rioters have been arrested. From $14,000 to $30,000 in money belonging to the Chinese were carried off by the mob. Even those arrested were robbed on their way to jail.

—If this sort of thing had occurred to American citizens in China, where they are as heartily hated as are the Chinese in California, we should hear at once of armed intervention and 'retaliation!' But it would seem singular to us, if a Chinese fleet should appear off San Francisco demanding reparation under threat of bombardment. Unfortunately for the Chinese their heathen government is weak. Fortunately for us our Christian (?) government is strong, and strength make right. It is an awful thing when our people are maltreated in China! Is it any worse than for Chinamen to be abused here? Plenty of room for progress, yet, in this boasted century of advance!

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SABBATH, Oct. 8. Another beautiful day. With the exception of one shower of rain, the last month has been one of unclouded sunshine, and mostly warm weather. We have plenty of dust, but if it were wet we should have mud, and so do not complain.

I spoke to-day in the Log Hall under the masonic lodge room, at Big Platt. My subject was the prophetic history of the world, showing our whereabouts, and that we are near the time when the stone will smite the image. (Dan. ch. 2.) In the p. m. spoke on the time of reward. (Mat. 16 : 27.) Intense interest was manifest upon the subject of future punishment. Several preachers were out, who, I think, received our views of the subject with favor.

At the close, Dr. Grayston arrived, and was warmly greeted by all. This was formerly his place of residence. But our meeting was one of peculiar interest. He had been brought into the faith some years ago by Dr. Fletcher, and we had enjoyed an acquaintance by correspondence. And it was his touching appeals that first led me to think of coming to this State. In the delay the doctor had become quite discouraged about my coming, and had united with the Disciples, until the Adventists should organize. And hearing of my coming he improved the first opportunity to see me.

At eve we bade Br. Baker and family adieu, and went out two miles and put up with Br. Mabury. Br. Treat, a Disciple minister, came in and spent the evening with us, and we all joined in a long and interesting discussion on the main points of Adventism, and the differences between it and the theory of Eld. Alex. Campbell, particularly that point which relates to the law of pardon. Br. T. claimed that Peter had the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and opened the door of the kingdom on the day of Pentecost, when the kingdom was set up, "in the days of these kings." (Dan. 2: 44.) I questioned the point of Peter's organizing the church on the day of Pentecost, because all the apostles spoke on that day as well as Peter. "They all spake with tongues." Besides, the 3,000 that were converted on that day, and immersed, were not organized into a church, but were added to the church that was already established by Christ, and who waited for the Spirit, being about one hundred and twenty souls. It was to those that the 3,000 were added. Besides no such kingdom as they claim was set up on the day of Pentecost, for the plain reason, that the kingdom was to be set up in the divided state of the Roman empire; and this division did not take place until about 500 years after Pentecost, as the empire fell in A. D. 476. Besides the stone was to smite the image on the feet and toes, which symbolized the divided state of the empire, and it would dash it in pieces, sweep it away, and no place would be found for it, and the stone (Christ and his people) should fill the whole earth. This has not yet taken place, but will when Christ comes.

As to baptismal regeneration or pardon, I could not agree with Br. T. He laid too much stress upon it. As a positive institution, baptism saves no one: if it did, it would save all alike. But the great complaint with this class of people, is that there are many baptized and few saved. And those who are saved, are those who make a business of the work of repentance, prayer, and entire consecration to God before baptism. Facts speak for themselves, and one fact is worth a thousand theories.

I find many of the preachers, and brethren of the Disciple school, holding firmly to the sleep of the dead, and other views in which they agree with the Adventists. Will they be called to an account? We shall see. The leaven is working powerfully; and may God speed the right.

We were hospitably entertained by Br. Mabury, in his small, windowless log cabin. Things were neat and clean and comfortable. Br. M. is a man of prayer, and is bringing up his family in the fear of God. I felt at home at his family altar. How blessed the "sweet hour of prayer!"

MONDAY, Oct. 8. Took leave of Br. M. and family and the doctor and I left for his residence on White River, some twenty miles away, through the wilds of Arkansas. In some parts of the way in the midst of the mountain thickets, we were some ten miles from any residence of man. And in these wilds, the bear, deer, panther and other wild animals have their home and abode. Good hunting ground this.

In the way we called upon "Cuff" as he is called, a very excellent colored man, by the name of Jacob Dillard. He has a fine family, and a good farm conducted with economy and skill. No white man in the region is so well off. He was overjoyed to see me, especially as he had read much about the editor. He was converted under the labors of Dr. Fletcher, and inquired after him with interest, and said, tell him that I am strong in the faith, and the more that I read the Bible, the stronger I feel in the Advent faith and hope. The opposition makes me stronger.

At noon we sat down on the rocky brink of a beautiful soft water, crystal spring, and took a lunch which Sr. Mabury put up for us. We enjoyed it much. This clear mountain air and horseback exercise gives a keen appetite for cold corn bread and sweet potatoes. After a half hour's rest, we took up our journey through the wilds. We have not seen a clearing of more than a few acres, through the day; just enough to say that we saw the sun. As we approach the end of our journey, we come into the hard pine woods. The trees are large and very tall, the finest timber I ever saw. But they are far away from the market; and, besides, they are mostly on government land. The most of the lands we have come over to-day have not yet been taken up.

We met three men on the way who have just discovered as they say, a rich silver mine, in one of the mountains near by. They are getting rich ore, that is worth fifty per cent. or more. These lands are evidently full of mineral wealth.

After a weary ride of ten hours, the sun gone down and darkness having shrouded our pathway, the doctor surprised me by crying—"A light! There is my cabin. We are home." The family were burning "fat pine," which gave a glare of light through every opening of the cabin from the illumination within. We were soon cordially greeted by Sr. Grayston and the children, and Br. Anderson, and Sr. Hester their guests, and at once felt at home. The cabin has only one room, and small, with one small window and door, but quite open so that we have plenty of light, and good free air. We have a big fire-place, plenty of wood and fire, and withal sociable and comfortable; only nine of us in the family and all of us well provided for. We have excellent cooks, good table, loaded with plenty of provision; corn bread, fowl, venison, milk, sweet butter, etc. Best of all, are religious associations, with songs and prayer, and free conversations on the good time coming. There are many inquiries about things up North. They think if they could only live "up North, with the good Advent brethren," they would be almost next door to Paradise. I tell them that they enjoy more here, in some respects than we do. And now should we be able to organize, they will be quite as likely to be ready for the kingdom, as we at the North, amid the pride and bustle and fashion of life. Every condition of society has its advantages and disadvantages, which are more or less equalized. We shall not find Paradise by going to any particular place, till we get into the New Earth. Mark this. Better make all the paradise we can wherever our lot may be.

FRIDAY, Oct. 10. Gave two discourses to-day in a log school house, in the woods. A large bear had walked by the house a few hours before, and left his tracks in the pathway. But few persons are injured by them or other wild beasts in this country; and there is but little to fear.

I had a good hearing from some very intelligent people, and the songs of Zion, and the word of God, both took effect. The Doctor feels greatly cheered at the result of this first meeting in his neighborhood. He expects to remove soon to Yellville, in a more thickly settled country, where he will have advantages of schools and meetings. But he wants his neighbors here to have the truth before he moves away; and they will get it. A great field is open in the new home, and he will seek to improve it. He has to follow his profession for a living, and so preaches free, as, indeed, most ministers do here.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 11. Rode eight miles to hold a service by request, at the house of Esq. Lewis, who was supposed to be dying with a cancer. His doctor had told him there was no hope, and had him fed with morphine to kill pain. He and his family were in despair. But Br. Grayson examined the case, and told them what to do, and he would get well; it was not a cancer! I administered the Gospel, and told them to cheer up. They would see better days, if they would prepare for the kingdom. He has given himself to God, and wants to be immersed. In health is the time to serve God.

Taking leave, rode five miles on the way home, and had another meeting at the widow Luther's. She is sick but able to appreciate the truth. We had a time of deep interest. She said she had never heard such good doctrine before. It was, in their language, "powerful good." The most wealthy and influential worldly man in the region was present, and drank down the truth. He told Dr. G.—"that was the gospel, and this was the first time he ever heard the truth." He had not been at a meeting for years. At the close we stopped and took supper, having eaten nothing since morning. I had to sing many of our hymns, and answer a host of questions, apparently to their satisfaction. At 8 p. m., we rode home in the starlight through the thick woods.

THURSDAY, Oct. 13. To-day I rest, preparatory to our journey back towards Batesville. I now sit in the shade of the tall timber, and on the rocks near the opening just north of Dr. G's. cabin. The air is invigorating, and the atmosphere is very comfortable out of doors.

While surveying the field in this State I am greatly encouraged. The prospect is flattering for the establishment of a permanent organization for the spread of the Advent doctrine, though we may be deceived in the elements, and our work may fail. God knoweth.

"Except the Lord conduct the plan,
The best concerted schemes are vain,
We spend our mortal strength for naught,
But if our works in thee be wrought,
They shall be blessed indeed."

For this I hope, and earnestly pray. The prospect is, that on my way back, a new and reliable conference will be added to the Lord's army in the West. The field is large and all white for the harvest.

This p. m., the Doctor took me up the mountain near his residence, on which has been found specimens of lead and copper. It is thought that it contains silver, also. From this mountain we had a view of the country for twenty miles around, a beautiful prospect.

We have now spent our last evening in the log cabin and I am prepared to leave on morrow. I now write by the light of a pine knot. Our cabin is social and pleasant, and I feel about as well as in the ceiled houses of the more improved parts of the country. If we can only feel that we are doing good, no matter for what are called the "improvements" of these fast times.

FRIDAY, Oct. 13. We took our journey through the wild woods and over the mountains to Cooper Hill and Blue Mountain. Just before we started we had a thunder shower, which laid the dust. The way we go would be impassible for a carriage, and we have to ride mules, or horses. I keep on my white mule, and find easy and comfortable riding.

We left at noon for Big Platt, twenty miles away. The Doctor took a notion to lead me through the wildest and most mountainous part of the country, some thirteen miles without seeing a single human habitation. We followed the "hunter's trail," over the steep mountains into deep valleys, on and on, until I was positively amazed with the wild beauties of nature. Oh! how grand and beautiful is this home of the wild beasts of the forest!

About 3 p. m. we arrived at the "Rock House," a projection of overhanging rocks, from a high ledge, covering a large space for the protection of man and beast, from rain and cold. Here seven families hid themselves in the time of the late war to escape conscription in the Confederate army. They remained several years, planting and sowing patches of ground, by which they lived. We saw the remains of their fences and fields.

If any person should get tired of the outside world, and wished to retire from it, this would be the place, of all others I have seen. It is wild, romantic and beautiful.

We did not tarry long, but pushed on, through yet wilder regions until we got out into the clearings again. We passed by a number of farms, where we had friends who would have been glad to have taken us in; but we had to press on to meet our engagements. We found a generous welcome at the widow Baker's.

I must not omit to state the interesting fact, and a moist one too, that soon after we entered the wilderness it began to rain. We were all drenched through and through. As we arrived at our stopping place, we could say sincerely, "Home, sweet Home," even, to "tarry for a night." Here in the log cabin we found a big fire in the old fashioned fire place, bright, cheerful and comfortable; with good religious friends who gave us their sympathy. When we got comfortably dry we had supper, and after songs and prayer I lay down for rest. But I had hung up my chart to dry, and some of the family called attention to it, and wished an explanation. So I rose, and for a half hour talked upon the leading symbols of Daniel and John, and had a good free time. I had quite a little audience.

SATURDAY, Oct. 15. We had fifteen miles to go to meeting on Blue Mountain, by 11 a. m. We mounted our beasts and set out, but were soon in the midst of another drenching rain. We got to the church in season, but found no congregation. The rain kept them away. Mr. Broyles, who lives next to the chapel, and the only resident for miles, gave us shelter, and showed us kindness. After dinner we went to Cooper's Hill, to see Br. Anderson, but he was absent. Night was coming on. Where should we go? The Doctor, who knows about all the people in these regions, said, "Let us go on. I have a good friend near by." We were soon made welcome in the cabin of Br. James Anderson, of the Baptist church.

SABBATH, Oct. 16. Notice of our meeting had been widely circulated, and had the day been pleasant a crowd would have been out. But the rain set in again, and all hope of a meeting was cut off. Here we had to separate—Br. Grayson returning to his home, while I passed on to my appointments. It was a time of tender emotion. We felt the pain of separation. I was now left alone in the wilderness of Arkansas, in a rain storm, with a ten miles journey before me, "old Rock," my mule, and I, were left to our reflections. And he thought and felt, for he was very loth to leave the two horses in whose company he had traveled so much. I find one marked fact in "muleology," and that is sympathy and love of society.

Of my reflections I will not speak, only to say I felt that God had sent me into this new field, and he would make all things work together for good, and give me success. All I have to do, is to "endure hardness as a good soldier."

I had traveled some six miles when I heard a voice, from a house by the roadside—"Are you in a hurry? Can't you stop a while?" And Eld. Baker, of the Disciples, came out, and said, "Alight, and let me put your mule out, and give you some dinner. Come to the fire and get warm and dry." He had heard me preach, and had read Adventism; but he wanted to talk further on the subject. We had a very interesting conversation on the "difficult passages" on future punishment and the intermediate state. Finally, he said that he read Adventism twice. The first time he was quite convinced of its truth. The second time, he compared it with the Bible, and found that nine texts out of ten were perverted! Well, said I, my good brother, if you will prove this, I will give you $1,000 in greenbacks, and publish your review, and give you 10,000 copies of it to scatter among your friends and people. He said it would take some time to do it. Yes, said, I, but will you take the time? You ought to do it, if it can be done. Well, said he, I will think of it, and I may do it.

I then read, sung and prayed, with the family, and we parted in kindness. I came on to Flat Woods, and put up with Br. Bishop. After three days of drenching rain, in the wilderness, with such fatigueing rides, I was weary, cold and about half sick. I now had a little rest, and took care of myself. I began to feel some of the symptoms of the fever of the country, and my first duty was, if I could, to break it up. And I succeeded in doing so.

From J L Hastings.

I feel more fully impressed the longer I live that these are days of increasing peril. The spirit of worldliness and desire for gain seems to have seized almost all, and men are piercing themselves through with many sorrows in the vain endeavor to get a little more of this perishing world. Almost all the preaching we hear is such as tends to turn the attention of the hearers from the fact that the judgment is at hand.

I hardly understand what Br. Reed means when he speaks of Mr. Inskip, in California, as a "powerful man," whom "the Lord is with," when he (Mr. Inskip) or his fellow laborers propose to throw away the glorious truths of Adventism. Perhaps I do not fully understand the meaning of "sanctification." But I have noticed that many who profess it, enjoy so much that they are indifferent to the coming reward. May the Lord save us from such sanctification as this. If anything can sanctify, separate from the world, and cause a thorough self-examination, I think it is a belief in the soon coming of the Lord to Judgment. But when we get a sanctification that goes before, or is not a consequence of a belief in the truth, is is a wrong-end-foremost religion, it seems to me.

Oh! how great the need to heed the admonition of the Savior—"Now if any man shall say unto you, Lo! here is Christ, or there, believe it not."

The open warfare against the saints is over, but how much greater the danger now that the counterfeit so closely resembles the true. May the Lord in his mercy guide and keep us safe unto his coming, is the prayer of your brother waiting.

A Methodist brother in an Eastern State writes:

I subscribed for THE TIMES for six months some time ago, and I like it so well I will send the other dollar and take it for the whole year. (Without flattering you) it is the best religious paper I ever saw. I sent some time ago for Whitmore's work on Immortality. He is "clear as a bell." I read your papers and my heart gets so aglow I feel like saying something. And when I read of that brother in South Carolina, I could not help shedding tears. I am a Methodist, too; and perhaps they will serve me the same way. If they do, they will have to do it very soon, or they will not have a chance. I will try and do a little for the cause by and by. I am now very poor: was once quite well off, for this world's goods; but misfortunes befell me.

From J W Johnson, Shelbyville Ill.

People are calling for tracts. The interest is increasing. More light is demanded. One minister is reported to have said that "materialism is sweeping over this country like an avalanch." I say, let it "sweep"—until every vestige of error is swept from the minds of God's people. I think the readiest way, is for ministers and people to preach a living Jesus—Jesus and the resurrection. One minister not of our faith, said to me the other day—"I feel the influence of the efforts of you soul-sleepers all over this country—especially in the eastern portion of it."

"Soul-sleeper" is a very strong term with our opposers, well let them use it, it does no harm. If they will preach Jesus more, and themselves or their own theory less, more people would be converted from sin and brought to Christ.

I do wish we could maintain regular preaching here. I think great good could be accomplished. All we can do is to furnish reading matter and I think the tracts are the best. Send us the tracts. We intend to keep this matter of Life and Death before the people.

From W K Colling, London Eng.

It gives me great pleasure to read the accounts from time to time of the efforts that you and others associated with you are making in the cause of our dear Redeemer. May God bless and prosper your work and labors of love—of which I have no doubt—because he hath promised it.

I see that you have to contend with a sort of opposition which is not at all to be wondered at. The disciple must not expect to fare better than did his Lord. But even this opposition is means in God's hands of giving you the blessed opportunity of letting the the glorious light of the gospel shine more and more unto the perfect day.

We find the same oppositions here—and no wonder; for our great adversary, the devil, is stirred up, as he always has been, and always will be against those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who shun not to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to a perishing world. The more faithfully the gospel is proclaimed, the greater will be his manifest hostility. But "fear not little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

I see that some are contending for the Seventh-day Sabbath. I had intended to have written a few lines on the subject; but my many infirmities from old age almost prevents me from writing at all. I think it is very clearly revealed to us in Lev. ch. 23, that God had foretold that from the day of Pentecost and henceforward forever the first day of the week should be a Sabbath of rest. See particularly from vv. 15, 16, evidently foreshadowed the day of Pentecost. We have however various other portions of God's word sufficient to induce us to keep holy the first day of the week. But to the Christian every day is holy. The present dispensation is that of a Sabbath.—"We who believe have entered into rest; for he that hath ceased from his works hath entered into his rest, as God did from his."

May the Lord bless all the laborers in his vineyard, which he will do, according to his promise. Yours, faithfully, in the bonds and the blessed hope of the gospel of Christ.

From A P Dugger, Mt Ayr, Iowa.

After a long ride of over forty miles across the high, rolling prairie, I arrived just in time to fill our appointment, in Ringgold Co. Saturday, Sept. 16. Found a crowded house eager to hear the word. I had ridden all day without partaking of any refreshment, and consequently felt rather weak for labor; yet the blessed Lord gave great liberty in preaching his word. I spent the night with Br. Jas. Maudlin. He was among the first to embrace the Advent views in this section, and today is a live member, firm as a pillar in those doctrines which are so near and dear to us all. On Sunday at the social meeting we enjoyed a precious season in singing the sweet songs of Zion and in supplicating the throne of grace. If we would be a live, hopeful and cheerful people, we must be prayerful. Our delight must be in the law of the Lord, in his law we must meditate day and night. I then spoke to the people on the nature of spiritual death, appealing to those dead in trespasses and sins to awake from their state of slumber, and arise from the dead; for Christ stands ready to give them life. On Wednesday eve. I preached in a dwelling house, for the benefit of mother Brown, a member of the United Brethren, who is afflicted, and not able to come out to hear. They are readers of THE TIMES, and are interested in the great truths which it advocates. I spoke on the "Blessed Hope," showing that our only hope for a future unending existence is in Christ; which hope will be realized at his second coming. Soon the dark mantle is to roll off the land, and our earth will stand forth in far more than its Eden beauty. May the Lord hasten that happy period in his own good time. We had a good meeting and look for good results. Our church is small, but it is alive and awake to the interest of the cause, and with a little care will build up rapidly.

From R A Miller, Van Buren Co. Iowa.

We met with a very sad loss by fire a week ago to-night. Our loss is about $2,500. Everything lost but a little bedding and our clothes. It will be hard work for us to get fixed to live comfortably this winter. But dear brethren in the Lord, I am not discouraged. I only wish to hold out faithful for a little longer. If we are poor now, I hope to be rich then, when my dear Savior comes. Then I hope to have a home that cannot be destroyed. My books were burned up, all but my Bible. It was laying on the stand, where I left it when I went to bed. I caught it the first thing and threw it out of the window. We lost a great deal, but if I am so happy as to be accepted of my Savior at the great day of accounts, I know I shall not miss these fleeting things. All, all will be right. And I feel that what I cannot help, is right now with me.

Mormon Immaterialism.

Alex Clark, of the Methodist Recorder, gives the following racy sketch of a sermon by Orson Pratt, a Mormon Apostle, which he heard at Salt Lake City. It needs no comment:

Pratt preached from 1 Cor. 15: 29—"Else what shall they do who are baptised for the dead?" etc. It was a wonderfully logical and ingenious argument to establish the same doctrine which had been introduced in the morning, viz: that the gospel has an agency for reaching the departed, prior to the resurrection. He spoke of the "spirits in prison" to whom Jesus preached, as "the dead." He said that the body was not essential in receiving the gospel—that we believe with the mind, and that spirits in hades could be restored by preaching and by the ordinances; he thought a body was not essential to baptism—that a spirit might be saved by the immersion of the body of another. He contended that this was an old Scriptural doctrine, preached by St. Paul, and in 1830 revealed to Joseph Smith, the identical young man referred to in the prophecy of Malachi. He avowed most solemnly that Elijah, as an angel, visited Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and conferred upon him by divine authority the eternal priesthood.

He said there are three sacraments which are changeless—which are in eternity as now—1. Baptism for the dead. 2. Laying on of hands. 3. Marriage. He said, "Once baptized, baptized forever." "Once married (i. e. to one or more wives), married forever." He ridiculed our common orthodox formula of marriage, viz: "Until death do you part." He said, that, as persons could be scripturally baptized for the dead, so also could persons be scripturally sealed in marriage for the dead. This gives bachelors, who could not choose for themselves in this life a chance; for some kind-thoughted surviving saint may select and seal a wife for a departed brother in the church who passed away wifeless and alone! And so, according to this theory, many a bachelor will wake up in glory, with a wife to cling around his immortal neck, the result of the generous good will of some masculine saint who outlived him on the footstool!

Upon the surface, Pratt's argument had, out of this new departure ology, an easy conclusion. He stated that the marriage of Adam and Eve was a union of immortal beings, for God had joined them in this relation before they sinned. They were married forever. So, in the gospel, which restores to men and women all that was lost by the fall, is marriage an immortal band? If so, the man who, after his wife's death, marries the second time, marries in the gospel for eternity. And so the third or fourth time. Then, if in heaven polygamy be right, it is right on earth! He exultingly declared, that, to admit of marriage as an immortal bond, was to admit the Mormon faith. Thus by apparent honesty of statement and use of Scripture, and by a logic that limped or leaped, as the case might be, Apostle Pratt paraded the outrageous iniquity of polygamy as a virtue and a duty. And these crowds of half-thinkers, illiterate, lustful and easily deceived, are the people to accept it all.

We observe a special effort to emphasize this iniquity at this particular time, owing to certain pending issues in the courts. The Mormon leaders are intent on inflaming the minds of the people against the civil authorities. There is no disposition to dispense with polygamy, but rather to urge it more and more. What the result of the antagonism may be, we cannot foretell; probably bloodshed and conflagration in the Salt Lake Valley may mark the coming pages of the history of this strange sect.

Letter From California.

I have been disappointed while in the Eastern States, during the past summer months, in not seeing any tidings from California in your paper. There are so many here who have announced their deep interest in Second Advent truths, and who are evidently competent to begin and maintain a news-correspondence, that I wonder at the lack of at least a brief weekly budget from California. And now that I have personal reason to know that many persons in the Eastern States are anxious to hear Advent mission tidings from the Golden State, the general sense of the deficiency in the columns of the national Advent paper, to which I refer, is deepened to a "weight of responsibility" which I must occasionally relieve. So I write again.

Well: glad to get back to California. O, garden of summer sunshine all the year round; very beautiful are thy mountain tops and valleys, thy streams and bays; and thy breezes, so cool and refreshing, greet the returned traveler with a delightful welcome. The land never looked so fair, the winds never seemed so inspiriting. Now this is not sentiment; it is raw fact. This is not written for the Ledger, but for the Crisis. And it has to go in as a proper preface! The most charming land reserved for the touch of civilization in the closing days of the old world; often, often filling the mind with hints of that new earth, that Paradise restored. Enough. Glad to get back to California. "And how do you find things?" That's the practical question, for an answer to which some home-bragging trick may be tolerated—once.

During my absence, as you are aware, there has been an appendix to your work—in a separate volume. Those who came after did not credit you with much success, but it is obvious they did build on your work. The Seventh-day Adventists have a very shrewd and devoted minister in Eld. Loughborough; and he and his associates have gathered a "church" represented in a usual congregation of fifty or sixty persons—meeting on Minna St., between New Montgomery and 2d Sts. I speak first of him and his audience.

Last Sunday afternoon I attended service in Eld. Loughborough's hall, and found a congregation of sixty assembled. He spoke at length of the "thousand years," mentioned six times in seven opening verses in one of the chapters in Revelation. He argued against the Whitbyan theory of a spiritual millennium, etc.; spoke rapidly (too fast—a common infirmity in Second Advent preachers), and spoke well While he was speaking, some boys threw in pebbles into the hall, and distracted the attention of the portion of the audience seated nearest the door. I had good reason to believe from remarks I heard as we passed out, that mothers in the neighborhood encouraged this youthful Sunday amusement, to show contempt for the "crazy critters" in the meeting.

I saw in the audience only two persons whom I recognized as of the number of those who attended regularly the preaching of Eld. Grant while here. Eld. L. announced that he would preach in the evening on the Inheritance, and the old and present mode of obtaining an heirship. The Minna St. Hall is entered directly from the street—first story; the place being intended for a store. It is a new building; paint and plastering new and damp. In the course of a few weeks it will be a much more healthy place than it now is for a sitting. Such damp quarters should never be taken for assembly rooms.

Yesterday morning I attended service at Excelsior Hall; Eld. Howell preaching. An audience of between forty and fifty. I saw many familiar faces, from their frequent presence at the Minna St. church, where Eld. G. officiated. Eld. H. preached from the text, "Thy kingdom come." It was a plain, direct discourse, full of the right kind of orthodoxy (if you can mend that ugly old word by a straight adjective). He preached a literal kingdom; and he brought up living Scripture in overwhelming force to substantiate his proposition. The Elder is very ready with the word of truth; and if he was a little more deliberate in his enunciation, he would be exceedingly effective as a preacher, as a speaker. That is to say: he comes close up to the point of being what is termed eloquent on many occasions; and just misses the magnetism, because he does not wait and allow his sentences or paragraphs to take effect, before he opens a new division of the subject.

This matter of art, in clear and impressive delivery, may be despised by some, and others may think it almost irreligious to dwell upon its necessity or commendableness; but ought it not to be occasionally attended to? And is n't it provoking, both to the natural and the spiritual man—if the spiritual man can be said to be provoked—to have a good discourse tamed down from a deserved hight of impressiveness by a jumping habit of declamation?

The Elder, by notice direct to the audience and in prayer, spoke of the ministering brethren expected soon from the East—alluding to Eld. Fassett, and who else? I see you have a sort of condoling notice of Eld. F.'s resolution to come hither; as if he made great sacrifices for the journey and (perhaps) change of residence. If time lasts so long, I desire to know of the stated salary that will induce him to return to the East after three years sojourn in this comfortable country. 'Tis hard to break up old ties and associations anywhere in the East, and depart for another section of the country; and it ought to be so in every case—except in the event of a removal to California.—C., in Crisis.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 7, 1871.

An Introduction.

Reprinted from the American Edition of Henry Constable's "Duration and Nature of Future Punishment."

To the American readers: Taught from childhood, as doubtless you also have been, that all souls are possessed of immortality, and that, for the wicked ones, hell is a place of eternal torment, I ever accepted the belief, and for years have earnestly enforced it upon others. But, during a recent journey in Europe, my faith in that doctrine was staggered by the sight of the multitudes there, and at the thought of the outlying millions still of Asia and Africa, all hurrying on to God's tribunal. Can it be, that in their heedlessness and ignorance, or in their delusive strivings after pardon, they are to meet a doom such as, in its infinity of torture, the human mind could neither conceive nor endure the thought? I have learned to know somewhat of the love of God, the Creator and upholder of these lost millions; how could I reconcile that with the accepted doctrine of unending suffering? I did try, faithfully; even, in these struggles of the mind, writing home to a doubting Christian brother to confirm him in this belief, which I feared was slipping from under me.

Some months afterwards, a clergyman in London put into my hands the pamphlet I here offer re-printed, stating its doctrines. I replied, "Most happy would I be to accept it, if I could: but is it the doctrine of the Bible?" Carefully I read it over. The wicked, after the final judgment, are to be literally destroyed by the fiat of him who, Christ forewarns us, "is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Upon their final death we can look with comparative calmness, though we cannot upon their protracted life in suffering. With them, in the same lake of fire, are destroyed the devil and his angels; and this consequence of sin remains an everlasting punisment, an abiding testimony to all ages of the fearfulness of sin, and so far a guarantee that God's universe shall henceforth remain as thus renovated, forever pure and holy. Nor does such a fate rob retributive justice of its peculiar terrors; for, as there is variety here in the mode of our mortal death, so may we believe of the second death. The impenitent heathen, ignorant of redeeming love, speedily perish, while a longer, more fearful doom, the many stripes of those "who knew and did not," awaits the obstinate rejectors of God's infinite grace.

This view of the future, professedly derived from the word of God, I carefully and prayerfully compared with the Scripture record. And there, as I believe, I found it; and so plainly set forth, I could but wonder that I had so long overlooked it. I had been blinded, as I believe we all are, by the idea that immortality must be a neccessary attribute of every soul, and so the truth had heretofore lain concealed. But with the sweeping away of that error, a clearer light is shed upon the holy word itself, which I can now understand as it was written, not as it is explained for me by commentators. When Christ says, "I give unto them eternal life," and, "he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," he means simply just what he says. He gives us life, a new life not possessed before, which, dating from the "new birth," runs on for a while, coexistent with, and yet not terminated with, our mortal life,—it is a literal, eternal life. Christ uses not the word in a technical "Biblical sense," so-called; he is not speaking for the Doctors of Theology, but so that we, the common people, may understand and hear him gladly. Again when he says, "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life," he means such shall not see this life of eternity. So that, "The wages of sin IS death, the gift of God IS eternal life." (Rom. 6: 23.)

Rejecting the traditional dogma of the soul's essential immortality, denied, it would seem, if anything can be, in the Bible,[2] our doubts and difficulties vanish with it. The justice of God, and the question of the orgin and end of evil, no longer now need the unsatisfactory explanations of Theologic essayists—the difficulties were but one of our own creation. And now, I offer to you, my Christian brother, this little pamphlet, which has brought to me so much of joy and peace: peace in the thought of the final and complete extirpation of evil from God's universe, though it be with the total destruction of the obstinate agents of evil; joy, in its vindication of the power, justice and goodness of our heavenly Father. Will you not, for the truth's sake, thoughtfully study its presentation of doctrine in the light of God's authoritative record? Think not of it as a willful attempt "to "pervert the right ways of the Lord." The simple question is—Is it, or is it not, according to God's holy word? You will perceive that this doctrine establishes that gradation in future punishment which is taught by revelation and reason, in this differing from the views of those Annihilationists, (so-called,) who hold to the immediate destruction of evil doers.

A candid, not dogmatic and bitter, review of the grounds of our belief regarding future punishment is greatly needed at the present day. I speak for the laymen as one of them, and I know also, that not a few of our devout and thoughtful clergymen have serious difficulties on this point. Hear this testimony from that well-known preacher and Bible expositor, Rev. Albert Barnes. Speaking of sin's entrance into the world, and of that eternity of suffering he felt constrained to teach he declares:

"These are real, not imaginary difficulties....I confess, for one, I feel them, and feel them more sensibly and powerfully the more I look at them, and the longer I live....I do not know that I have a ray of light on this subject, which I had not when the subject first flashed across my soul. I have read, to some extent, what wise and good men have written. I have looked at their various theories and explanations. I have endeavored to weigh their arguments, for my whole soul pants for light and relief on these questions. But I get neither; and in the distress and anguish of my own spirit, I confess that I see no light whatever. I see not one ray to disclose to me the reason why sin came into the world; why the earth is strewed with the dying and the dead, and why man must suffer to all eternity. I have never seen a particle of light thrown on these subjects that has given a moment's ease to my tortured mind....It is all dark—dark—dark, to my soul, and I cannot disguise it."[1]

"In the midst of this gloom," as he styles it, Mr. Barnes comforts himself with the belief that, it must be that the Judge of all the earth will do right though appearances are so much against it; it seeming never to occur to him that his own theology, and not [illegible] revealed truth, is here at fault. [illegible] ers of our religious teachers live [illegible] silence, seeking relief from these felt [illegible] ulties in a smothered hope in univer[illegible] salvation, or at least a final restoration of the wicked, or else they fancy a probation beyond the grave: in either case failing to give decided utterance of that future wo, so solemnly enforced by the Great Preacher.

But so far from any tendency to affiliation with Universalists, as insinuated by a recent theological reviewer,[3] this doctrine is diametrically opposed to theirs, more so than is the popular theory which agrees with Universalism, in upholding the error common to both, that "every soul is immortal." That dogma, if you will but recognize it, is the original lie of our sinful world. It was first uttered in Eden when Satan declared to our tempted parents, "Ye shall not surely die;" in the same words is it repeated by the Universalist of our day; and it is repeated still, though it be unwittingly and in other words, by every orthodox religious teacher, when he proclaims, "Ye shall live forever in your sins!" Against both these forms of deception our doctrine opposes itself alike, declaring in the words of the Master, "Ye shall die in your sins, if ye believe not on the Son of God."[4] What possibility for universal salvation, what hope for a future pardon, when the soul is forever literally destroyed? It was to take away this last refuge of the unregenerate soul, that our gracious Lord so fully and unequivocally foretells everlasting punishment—eternal death! And yet in spite of all, the arch-deceiver has for centuries persuaded the Christian church that his lie was not so far from truth; that though all men die out of this world, yet they are all hereafter to live to all eternity. And out of this again has grown that Romish falsehood of purgatory. Sad that our Protestant forefathers, when they took their stand upon the Bible, and rejected the many errors of a corrupted church, had not also recognized and rejected this early device of the old serpent! That immortality thus asserted of all men, our doctrine restricts to those to whom Christ gives it: while that Scripture-promised restitution of all things, the seeming glory of Universalism, but the stumbling block of the popular theory, it makes evident as fully accomplished in the final destruction of all evil-doers.

In this connection, and in cheering contrast to those sad words of the Philadelphia divine, let me quote from the author of this pamphlet, in his preface:

"For myself, I cannot express my sense of the value I place on the view I now seek to impress on others. It has for me thrown a light on God's character, and God's word, and the future of his world, which I once thought I should never have seen on this side of the grave. It has not removed the wholesome and necessary terrors of the Lord from the mind, but it has clothed God with a loveliness which makes him, and the eternal Son who represents him to man, incalculably more attractive. I am no longer looking for shifts to excuse his conduct in my own eyes and those of others, and forced to feel that here at least I could never find one to answer my object. I can look at all that he has done, and all he tells me he will hereafter do, and, scanning it closely, and examining it even where it has most of awe and severity, exclaim with all my heart and with all my understanding "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."

In conclusion, I may state that this question of future punishment, has been freely discussed in the Religious Magazines of England; and I am informed that a large proportion of the intelligent and devout English clergymen, of all denominations, accept the truth of the views herein stated. The agitation on this subject has not reached our shores, at least not fully as yet, but it must be met; and the sooner the truth prevails the better, for the glory of God, and for our common Christianity.

Marriage—What is it?

The great Apostle to the Gentiles forcibly enjoins his son Timothy to "Hold fast the form of sound words." For words are things. Give a sophist liberty to affix to them such meaning as suits his purpose, and he will reason God out of the universe.

The word marriage is thus defined by all the standard English lexicographers whose works are within our reach at this moment.

By Dr. Samuel Johnson: 1. "The act of uniting a man and woman for life. 2. "State of perpetual union."

By Noah Webster: 1. "The act of marrying, or the state of being married; union of man and woman as husband and wife; wedlock; matrimony. 2. A feast made on the occasion of a marriage."

By Samuel Worcester: "The act of marrying, or uniting a man and woman for life as husband and wife; the state of legal union between a man and woman: matrimony; wedlock; wedding; nuptials."

By John Craig: "The act of uniting a man and woman for life in wedlock; the legal union of a man and woman for life; a feast made on the occasion of a marriage."

—Every one but Webster makes union for life essential to marriage, and Webster intimates no dissent from the general dictum.

Consider now the promise required by the Christian church of every man who presents himself as a candidate for marriage. [We quote from the liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal church, but it is essentially the same in all churches :]

Minister.—Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife, to live together after God's ordinance in the holy estate of matrimony? Wilt thou love her, comfort her, honor, and keep her in sickness and in health; and, forsaking all others, keep thee only to her, so long as ye both shall live?—The man shall answer, "I will."

—Now we are not here arguing that the Woodhull-Claflin crowd have not devised or adopted a substitute which is vastly superior to marriage—we will consider that point in its order. For the present, we only insist on the obvious truth that what they commend and delight in is not marriage, but something quite other than that which should be called by its own proper name, whatever that may be. We do not wish to name it; but why should not they. He who has invented something vastly superior to an ax, a hoe, an auger, does not seek to confound it with that which it is intended to supersede: he gives it a distinguishing name, and tries to make the distinction between the old and new as broad and emphatic as he may. Our new lights, on the contrary, seek to palm off their nostrum for what it is not, and thereby betray their consciousness of its inferior character. No man tries to pass off gold for brass, or silver for pewter: if he tries to deceive at all, he proffers his pewter as silver, and his brass as gold and profits or fails to profit as may hap by the presumed lack of discernment in his customers.

We demand that those who commend the Woodhull-Claflin substitute for marriage shall commend it as a substitute, and under a distinct name. Is not that demand clearly just?—N. Y. Tribune.

Writing on Newspapers.

It may be some of our readers are not acquainted with the law in relation to writing on newspapers, or other periodicals, sent by mail. The following is the Act of Congress.

"If any person shall enclose or conceal a letter, or other thing, or any memorandum, in writing, in a newspaper, pamphlet or magazine, or make any writing thereon, which he shall have delivered into any post office, or to any person for that purpose, in order that the same may be sent by post free of letter postage, he shall forfeit the sum of $5 for every offence —and the letter, newspaper, packages memorandums, or other things, shall not be delivered to the person to whom it is directed, until the amount of single letter postage is paid for each article of which the package is composed."—United States Statutes, Section 316

Be Faithful.

No words in the Christian vocabulary are more important than the above. How they thrill the heart of those who desire to be found among the steadfast ones when Jesus shall appear! Connected with these words in the sacred volume is a promise; "Be faithful.... I will give you a crown of life." What an incentive to action! A crown of life! To share the life that is contemplated in this promise stirs the energies of every mortal, that will carefully consider the importance he attaches to his present existence. Also the care-worn sufferer, as he contemplates the vanities and brevity of this mortal life in contrast with that life which is to come, the duration of which has no end, girds up the loins of his mind and resolves to be numbered with the faithful and obtain that glittering crown.

We soon shall reach our home if faithful. Jesus is coming soon and all the faithful will reign in endless day. That beautiful world where endless life will be bestowed upon faithful souls, will transcend all the beauty this poor mortal vale's occupants ever beheld.

"There the glory is ever shining."

And the redeemed host will be welcomed to share the fullness of delight which that celestial realm alone will ever know. Then be faithful. Be diligent in the performance of Christian duty, and all the rapture of that land of life will be yours.

The Foolish Virgins.

"While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept."

When will the Bridegroom come? The birds are waking
The budding forests from their long repose;
And through dark clods, the tender snowdrop breaking,
Her pallid bosom shows.

The days glide on:—beneath the trailing willow
The little stream casts off its crystal chain,
And flashing into light each tiny billow,
Speeds on its course again.

Will he not come when soft-toned notes are drifting
Through golden shadows of laburnum bowers,
And the light pinion of breeze is lifting
The scattered hawthorn flowers?

Will he not come? Like angels in their glory
The tall fair lilies stand in robes of white;
And over ivied walls, and ruins hoary
Falls the sweet summer night.

O sisters, must our lamps be ever burning?
Our eyes are weary, and our hopes decline;
Long have we waited for the Lord's returning,
And yet he sends no sign.

Still onward glide the days:—a sound of sighing
Makes mournful music in the boughs o'erhead;
And heaps of brown and amber leaves are lying
About the path we tread.

Why comes he not? O friends his promise faileth!
Let us lie down awhile, and take our rest
Lulled by this melancholy wind that waileth
O'er earth's faded breast.

The day has died away;—our lamps grow dimmer,
Fresh oil shall feed them when to morrow's light
Illumes the east;—and see, their feeble glimmer
Will last throughout the night.

Rest, sisters, for your eyes are slumber-laden,
Why should ye pause awhile your lamps to trim?
The Bridegroom comes not yet;—each weary maiden
May sleep, and dream of him.

Awake, awake! Through midnight stillness ringing
Comes the sharp echo of that sudden cry!
Rise, Virgins:—hear the herald angels singing,
"The Bridegroom draweth nigh!"

Ah, wo for us! Our last faint sparks are dying,
And nearer, nearer, sounds that warning shout;
O give us oil,—sweet sisters, hear our crying—
Help, for our lamps go out!

Hear us, the sadness of your glance appalleth!
O friends, have ye not known and loved us well?
Like drops of icy rain that answer falleth,—
"Go ye to them that sell."

The door is shut;—yet he is full of kindness,
His tender love will pardon human sin:
The Bridegroom hath compassion on our blindness,
And he will let us in.

Lord open unto us;—O King, receive us,
Our deep unworthiness and guilt we own;
Thou art so merciful, thou will not leave us
In this dark night alone!

He speaks,—that solemn voice so calm and holy,
Its tone of ancient pity hath forgot;
Upon our souls the awful truth dawns slowly,—
Lost—for he knows us not!

Communications.

San Francisco, California.

The first and middle of September I was upon the Atlantic coast preaching "the gospel of the kingdom" to Eastern cities. At this writing (Oct. 23) I am on the Pacific coast preaching "the word of life" to this people. Distance from Boston 5,539 miles. Has not God something to do with this? Has not Jesus counted me worthy, though the least of all, to bear the good news of his coming to the very ends of the land? I must believe it. Oh! what an exalted honor! What a blessed privilege! How unworthy the humble instrument. Yet I adore my glorious Redeemer that he has seen fit in his condescending love to choose and send me on such errands of mercy to my fellow mortals in this the most marvelous and wonderful age of all ages! The Lord has seen fit to open mine eyes to behold wondrous things out of his law, and together with "the abundance of the revelation," has permitted me to see more of this world than I had ever imagined would be my happy privilege, and all without my own guidance or planning. I do feel that all this is under his guiding counsel. This reminds me of the saying of another:

> "He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients, and be occupied in prophecies. He will keep the sayings of renowned men; and where subtle parables are, he will be there also. He will seek out the secrets of grave sentences, and be conversant in dark parables. He shall serve among great men, and appear among princes; he will travel through strange countries, for he hath tried the evil and the good among men." (Manjey's Philo, B. 11, p. 168.)

In some little degree in this my own favored experience, under the providential direction of the Holy Spirit. I hope not to give way to the human weakness of being "exalted above measure" under the condescending mercy of God toward me, so as to require some "messenger of Satan to buffet me" to keep me humble and childlike, which is essential to Christian character and usefulness, and the esteem of my Lord.

My companion has accompanied me to this country by request of the Christian friends of this city and Vallejo, and their benevolent contributions forwarded to bring us here. We had made arrangements to journey by the and be there Lord's day, Oct. 15, but the calamity which befell that city, and the confusion consequent upon the fearful conflagration, made us endeavor to avoid any tarry there to the embarrassment of Christian brethren and sisters who designed to entertain us. We merely passed the suburbs of the city, exchanging cars outside the main part, which was in ruins! In consequence of this we failed to secure half-fare passes, through the kindness and influence of Brn. Billings and Burr, as we had anticipated; and we had to suffer with others in the national calamity.

In order to reach here in time to meet our appointments the 22d we concluded to spend the 15th at Omaha with Christian friends, formerly of Providence, R. I. I had the privilege of preaching in the Baptist church in the morning, by request of the pastor, Eld. J. W. Daniels. And he showed us many kindnesses, together with his family, for which may the Lord reward him at the resurrection of the just.

We left Omaha Monday forenoon on our long journey. A traveler from the West informed us that the cars had been detained in the mountains two days by snow. We, however, had no such hindrances, as the weather was delightful all the way. I should like to give a description of the whole route and the various incidents and occurences by the way, for the readers of THE TIMES: but time nor space will allow. A brief statement is all that can be given.

on the western bank of the Missouri River contains a population of about 17,000 inhabitants. It is not so thriving as formerly, yet is an important city in Nebraska, and on this river and the great line of the Trans-Continental Railway Passengers reach this city from East by crossing the ferry in a boat, the two and a half miles from Council Bluffs, on the opposite side.

The first object of interest West of Omaha is the Platte River and its valley, along the banks of which stream so many emigrants toiled in "the whoa-haw times." This river is broad and deep, though to appearance it is exceeding shallow, and is very treacherous; for if you should step upon the yellowish sand over which the water ripples along, you would, to your surprise go over your head in water and sand! It has fatally deceived many a teamster in by-gone days.

Columbus is ninety-two miles from Omaha, a town of 1,000 inhabitants. It is the seat of Platte Co., and is called by Geo. Francis Train the geographical center of the U. S. He advocated the removal of the capital from Washington to this place! could it be possible I thought, that we are now equi-distant between the two oceans! Here we, after our long journey from Minneapolis to Chicago, and from Chicago to this point have now to journey as far westward as to travel from here to Boston! How vast the distance appeared. And how far from home and Eastern and Western brethren are we going!

WE SHRANK BACK

from the contemplation with a kind of sadness indescribable.

Reaching Grand Island we looked out for buffalo, as our "Guide" had advised us to "keep" our "eye out for buffalo;" but we saw not even one. In this long valley there is "game in abundance, with numerous bands of wild roving horses." These we did not see, they being frightened, probably, by our snorting iron horse. At Potter, Nebraska Territory, we saw "Prairie Dog" villages peopled with their peculiar little inhabitants. Three miles distant from the Railway "the great prairie dog city is situated." We saw these little creatures in the morning, sitting or standing by their little mounds with a hole in the top, and they barking at the passing train! At first at the approach of the train they would as on other occasions of fright scamper for their houses and run down into their holes, and be as silent as death. The animal is of a sandy-brown color, and about the size of a large fox-squirrel. They appoint one as a sentinel to watch while they are in their holes, and have some on guard as pickets, to watch the approach of danger at all times.

Wolves prey on these little fellows, and we saw one prowling near by one of their villages, who on the approach of the cars reluctantly left, sneaking away, eyeing the train every step as though robbed of his breakfast by the intruding engine. In the afternoon of the same day I saw a black wolf on the approach of the train run as if for his life to the hills beyond the valley.

Antelope abound in this Western region, and we saw many herds of them for the first time. It is supposed that this region is the great pasture land of the continent. And it is said that "there is room for millions of cattle in this unsettled country, and then have grazing land enough to spare to feed half the stock in the Union." This may be an exaggeration however. But what is said of the advantages of this country for stock raising, is in a great measure true. It is said that Colorado contains over and vast herds of cattle. One man in Southern Colorado has over 40,000 head of the former kind of stock. We saw Eastern bound trains loaded with cattle for the Eastern market; but our pity was excited when we were told that they were kept fasting for a week—till some fell down dead! Two were dead in one of the passing trains. What a change from their roaming habits, to be shut up and imprisoned on their way to slaughter!

At Cheyenne, Wyoming, is the junction of the Denver Pacific R. R. We are now among the Black Hills, and when we reach Sherman, named in honor of Gen. Sherman, the tallest general in the service, we reach our highest elevation, eight thousand two hundred and forty feet above the level of the sea. This is a noted point for game, black and cinnamon bears being found in the hills, and occasionally, mountain lions. I am glad to record the following language of the guide: "The hand of him who rules the universe is nowhere else more marked, and in no place which we have ever visited have we ever felt so utterly alone, so completely isolated from mankind, and left entirely with nature, as at Sherman, on the Black Hills of Wyoming." Looking ahead on this magnificent landscape, I could but desire to be left alone with nature and with God for a season in contemplation. Oh! how I should have enjoyed the solemn grandeur of the hour. It is said that "at first the tourist experiences much difficulty in breathing, the extreme lightness of the air trying his lungs to their utmost capacity."

"From Sherman to Rawlings the road runs between the Black Hills and the Rocky Mountain range." The scenery is most impressive, and now are continually in sight till we pass over their rugged and barren summits. These Mountains had always from my boyhood excited my wonderment as I studied their geography; but I never dreamed, even, of visiting them and viewing their grandeur and magnitude. God, their Creator and mine, has permitted me to view their majesty and climb their summits in "chariots" with "flaming torches in the day of his preparation." Thank his name! May I yet climb the more sublime and beautiful sun-lit hills of Zion in celestial chariots—even with thousands of angels.

We hastily pass Ogden—"the junction of the Utah Central Railroad, Brigham Young, Pres.," having no desire to patronize it, or visit the "Salt Lake City," in its corruption and heaven daring vices. We would flee it as Lot did Sodom: for this city must sooner or later be visited with judgments for its heaven-provoking sins and crimes; and the nation, too, feel those judgments; for it has permitted the festering ulcer to gather, endangering the whole body politic with its putrid virus, without purging it from the system and cleansing its vital blood, while the sore was in its incipient development. If we are called to visit this city ever in the providence of God, Jehovah will give us a message for it, like that of Jonah to Ninevah! We hope we should not shrink from duty by taking ship for seas! but we covet not the honor of delivering the deserved message.

Sage brush and bunch grass! sagebrush and rocks! alkali sands and dusty beds! make up the most desolate scenery we ever witnessed, for a thousand miles; and before us is the "Great American Desert," till we are wearied with the unsightly landscape. At each station we see men of different nations, the Indians and Chinese being the most conspicuous and attractive objects of our study.

The former come down from the mountains and their sequestered valleys to view the passing train, in all their coarseness and brutal expression, some being of age, in appearance and in fact.

The latter are employed as workmen on the entire length of the railroad from Ogden to San Francisco! The Chinaman, in the estimation of employers, is "the coming man." I was glad to learn that their habits are temperate, and no saloons keeping liquors or lager beer are required for their accommodation. The names of the principal Indian tribes dwelling in this region are the Shoshones and the Piutes.

The Sierra Nevada Mountains, whose summits tower 10,000 feet in hight, are the next principal objects of attraction. These are beautiful, the more so in contrast with the desolate and barren regions we have left behind. We rounded "Cape Horn," the train stopping five minutes to give the passengers an opportunity of standing over a fearful chasm and witnessing the enchanting, wild, and romantic scenery. "Timid ladies will draw back with a shudder, one look into the awful chasm being sufficient to unsettle their nerves and deprive them of the wish to linger near the grandest scene on the whole line of the trans continental railroad."

Mrs. Fassett and myself stepped from the cars and viewed this landscape so grand, sublime, and impressive with feelings of awe and admiration, while the whole train stood where once "Chinese laborers, who broke the first standing ground, were held by ropes until firm foot-holds could be excavated in the rocky sides of the precipitous bluffs, and where they looked like ants when viewed from below."

Friday, at 6 p. m. we arrived at the terminus of our journey by rail, and taking the boat to cross the bay, a brother in Christ, a stranger otherwise to us, found us, and on our arrival at San Francisco hired a carriage to convey us to apartments already prepared. Here we found Christian friends in waiting to refresh us with supper, furnish a warm bath and bed for the dusty and weary travelers in a strange land, and among entire strangers in the flesh! How the Lord provides. Jehovah Jireh!

I have only to add, never in any city have we had a kinder or more hearty and generous reception than among these brethren and sisters of recent conversion to "like precious faith." May the Lord repay them a hundred fold.
O. R. FASSETT.

No Personal Antichrist.

Meanwhile we must pause for a moment, and, in a kind of Parenthesis, endeavor to exhibit and denounce a special device of Satan which has been largely employed by him in these latter days. Its object is, to draw men's minds away from the plain and clear warnings of the inspired prophecies of Scripture, and to direct them, instead, to a fiction, a romance, of his own invention.

Several good men have been led by him, during the last fifty or sixty years, to look for a personal antichrist, an individual, a man who is to arise in the church, and to oppose himself to the church's head by claiming Divine honors, and by drawing away thousands to honor and worship him. Sixty years ago this personal Antichrist was supposed to have been discovered in Napoleon Bonaparte, and we had elaborate calculations, showing that his name gave the 666 of Rev. 13: 18. But the Corsican died at St. Helena, and for many years the question of "Who is Antichrist?" remained unanswered. Recently a second Napoleon Bonaparte has appeared, and the followers of those who were deluded in 1811, show themselves to be equally ready to be deluded in 1871.

The proposition, when presented to our minds, that some individual man is to be looked for, who is to make himself a sort of rival or competitor of Christ, sends us at once to St. John's Revelation. If there is truth in the hypothesis, we shall find it there. The beloved Disciple's prophecy we believe to be complete. It covers all the time, from the apostle's own day to that "Marriage of the Lamb" which we all admit to be still future. It contains the whole history of the church for eighteen hundred years. We do not believe that any important fact or feature could have been omitted. We take it up, then, and read it in a spirit of careful and submissive inquiry; but when we reach the nineteenth chapter, which all must admit to be a description of things to come, we pause, and ask, "Where is that personal or individual Antichrist whose advent some men tell us to expect?" What does St. John say of him? The answer is,—Not one word. But did the Holy Spirit, in revealing to the apostle the history of the church, omit so important a fact? Or did the apostle forget to record it? Neither of these suppositions can be admitted for a single instant. What, then, is this dream of a wonderful rival of Christ, who is yet to appear, but a figment, an invention of the enemy, which he has succeeded in injecting into the minds of some of God's people? What is it but a serious hindrance to the useful study of prophecy? There is no individual Antichrist to be found in St. John's prophecy. The great enemies of Christ there described, are three. The Dragon, who is plainly declared to be "the Devil and Satan;" the Beast, which is the revived Roman empire under its second form of ten-horned confederacy; and the false prophet, the Papacy, which "exercises all the power of the first beast before him." That there should be some other, some fourth enemy, of whom the apostle knew nothing, or of whom he forgot to say anything, is a proposition altogether untenable.

But we may be reminded that there was another prophet beside St. John, and we may be referred to St. Paul's great prediction, in 2 Thes. 2. We willingly turn to that chapter; but we find nothing there, save a prophecy which entirely harmonizes with the the revelation made to St. John.

St. Paul tells us of the wicked (or lawless) one, who should arise in the church. When was he to be expected? When that which "withheld" or hindered was "taken out of the way." St. Paul adds, "Ye know what withholdeth." And all antiquity replies

"Yes, we know, it was the empire—the imperial power of Rome."

When this imperial power was taken out of the way, "Then should that wicked one be revealed." History tells us that when the empire crumbled away, the Papacy came in its room, and that all this took place some twelve hundred years ago.

And how long was this wicked one, this lawless one, this Antichrist, to endure? The answer is explicit. He was to endure until the Lord should appear, who should "consume him with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy him with the brightness of his coming."

Some may interpret these words to mean the revival of the gospel in the days of Luther: others may look for a brighter day yet to come. But both of these will agree that the Lord had not come when Christendom was sunk in the darkness of mediæval superstition. The wicked one held dominion for many centuries; the wicked one, then, was not a human being, but a spiritual usurpation;—in short, the Papacy.

Wonderful, too, has been the exact fulfillment of the prophecy of St. Paul, and wonderful is the voluntary blindness of those who refuse to see it. This wicked or lawless one was to "exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

For many centuries past it has been the established practice of Rome, a practice described and portrayed in the Romish books of ceremonies, that on the election of a new Pope he is carried on men's shoulders into the great church of St. Peter at Rome, and is there placed or seated on the high altar, where he receives the worship of all the cardinals. What clearer or more distinct fulfillment of St. Paul's prophecy than this, any man can expect, we find it not easy to conceive.

But, as if to leave no point in the prophecy unfulfilled, a great council was called in Rome only a year or two since, in which Council it was decreed and declared that the Pope, and all Popes, were infallible and incapable of error, when acting ex cathedra, or as Popes. The occupant of that chair was recognized by a Council, which professed to speak for the whole Catholic church, as infallible i. e. Divine. "He, as God, sat in the temple of God; showing himself that he was God." (2 Thes. 2: 3.)

Divines there have been in our day, who, wiser than Philip (Acts 8: 35), could read the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah and see nothing of Christ in that prediction. Others, in like manner, can read the 2 Thes. 2, and see nothing of the Papacy in that chapter! Of both of these blind leaders of the blind, we can only say, as Abraham said, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

This fiction, or romance, of a personal, individual Antichrist, to be found in some Napoleon, or other imposter yet to be revealed, is one of the most remarkable devices of Satan that has been seen in our times. It answers the enemy's purpose right well; it draws men's eyes away from Christ's chief enemy, the papacy, and sets them to watch for some wonderful man, of whose advent no one of Christ's apostles ever heard anything. May the readers of these papers be kept from this delusion.—Cor. of the Rock.

The Franco-Prussian War.

THE TWO GUILTY ONES.

But why did Napoleon wish for war?

"Because his prestige was lost, because he felt the ground trembling under his throne, because he saw that there was no crown in prospective for his son, because he saw that we had been obliged to bear with him a great deal more than we were wishing to do, and that now all was over for him. Then he did the most foolish and guilty thing he could, but perfectly on a line with his character. He did what a gambler, as he always was, can do! staked every thing on one card. He thought this: "If I succeed and have a great flash of military glory, then nobody can prevent me from reigning over France, and nobody can prevent me from securing Napoleon IV."

But how about the Emperor William?

"The Emperor William was preparing for this war for over thirty years. I can give you proofs that he was. He was always possessed of two great wishes—for military glory and revenge—and he wanted on France a complete German revenge. He always wished for that, although how that could be in accordance with his high Christian principles, I cannot tell. He hated liberty. He hates it still. And he hates France, because he thinks that in Europe France is the standard-bearer of liberty. There is a party in Prussia, of which the present emperor was the head long before he was a king or an emperor, in the time when his brother and his father reigned; and this party is composed of nobles from the north of Prussia generally, who are very warlike, who have great notions of aristocracy, and who hate France because they think France is democracy and is liberty. That party has always had at its head the present emperor. He is the incarnation of that party, and that party is at the same time pedantic, despotic and bigoted.

"Now I can't help thinking that Germany is something better than that. I know what Germany is, and Germany is a great nation of thinkers, and poets, and men of genius, and musicians, and there is in Germany a general taste for what is noble and grand, and I cannot believe that this nation shall very long remain under the heel of the Junker partie."—Coquerel.

Thoughts on Brain Growth

Persons who talk most do not always think most. I question whether persons who think most—that is, have most conscious thought pass through their minds—necessarily do most mental work. "Be aye sticking in a tree, Jock, it will be growing when you are sleeping." So with every new idea that is planted in a thinker's mind. It will be growing when he is sleeping. An idea in the brain is not a legend carved on a marble slab; it is an impression made on a living tissue, which is the seat of active processes. Shall the initials which I carved in the bark grow from year with the tree? And shall my recorded thought grow into new forms and relations with my growing brain? Daniel Webster told one of the greatest scholars that he had to change the size of his hat every four years. His head grew large as his intellect expanded. Illustrations of this fact were shown me many years ago by a famous phrenologist in London. But organic mental changes may take place in a shorter space of time. A single night of sleep has often brought a sober second thought which was a surprise to a hasty conclusion of the day before.—O. W. Holmes.

Modern Jesuitism.

They have spread throughout all European countries, and over our continent too. If they are exiled to-day by the government of Victor Emanuel from Italy, they will find hundreds of other places where to go. Besides, they have entirely recovered from their former decay. Especially under the leadership of their last two Generals, Roothaan and Beckx, their influence with the Pope has become all but irresistible. The last Council has clearly shown that henceforth Romanism and Jesuitism are one and the same thing. They inspire the Pope, nominate the Bishops, control the Synods, make the dogmas, regulate the morals, and—attempt to rule the States. This, however, is most likely the very thing that will lead to their final destruction. The nations and governments on both sides of the ocean, have been awakened to the awful danger threatening them from that direction. We may expect, therefore, a common reaction of all enlightened statesmen and true Christians against the increasing encroachments of this reckless sect. And if it is true, as they have been assuring us for twenty-five years, that the Roman Catholic Church and the Societas Jesu henceforth never can be separated; then the end of that church, as well as that of the Jesuits, would seem to be at hand.—Observer.

The Church Arraigned.

The word we have to say about this now touches the church of Christ. Is the church free from collusion with this seething corruption? Is its testimony clear and faithful against the seductions of a base society? Does it stand forth boldly against the power of wealth and position for purity of heart and life, no matter what it costs? We have no hesitation in saying emphatically "No" to these interrogatories. Men who rob on a large scale are retained in our churches; women whose lives are given to the god of fashion sit at our communion tables; folly flaunts its finery in the best pews; we allow a rogue to purchase impunity by endowing a church or hospital; we connive at the late suppers, the midnight reveries, the waltzes and "Germans," the costly dressing, the hollow visiting, the social tippling, by which sons and daughters are demoralized; we stoop to wealth, and send our missionaries to the poor. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing," to which voice from heaven we respectfully reply, "That would be exclusive and illiberal."

In gay and fashionable Jerusalem of Malachi's day, when "society" was made up of adulterers, false swearers, and defrauders (all good church people), a small remnant stood together in their faithfulness, fearing the Lord and speaking often one to another. They probably did not reach high office or possess much wealth. They were probably overlooked in the proud bustle of vice, or if seen, seen only to throw a sneer at. But they were the Lord's jewels. Such can afford to be sneered at. Such can afford to be very humble and unnoticed and poor withal. Blessed be God, he has jewels in New York! They are the hope of the city as they are of the church—earnest, loving, hoping, praying souls, sighing and crying for all the abominations that be done in this Sodom.—Dr. Crosby, in the N. Y. Evangelist.

The Story of Peshtigo.

THE FIERY HURRICANE.

The sharp air of early October had sent the people in from the evening church services more promptly than usual, although a number delayed to speculate on a great noise and ado which set in ominously from the west. The housewives looked tremblingly at the fires and lights within, and the men took a last look at the possibilities without; for many it was truly a last glimpse. The noise grew in volume, and came nearer and nearer with terrific crackling and detonations. The forest rocked and tossed tumultuously: a dire alarm fell upon the imprisoned village, for the swirling winds came now from every side. In one awful instant, before expectation could give shape to the horror, a great flame shot up in the western heavens, and in countless fiery tongues struck downward into the village, piercing every object that stood in the town like a red-hot bolt. A deafening roar, mingled with blasts of electric flame, filled the air and paralyzed every soul in the place. There was no beginning to the work of ruin; the flaming whirlwind swirled in an instant through the town. There is no diversity in general experience; all heard the first inexplicable roar; some aver that the earth shook, while a credulous few avow that the heavens opened, and the fire rained down from above. Moved by a common instinct, for all knew that the woods that encircled the town were impenetrable, every habitation was deserted to the flames, and the gasping multitude flocked to the river. On the west the mad horde saw the bridge in flames in a score of places, and, turning sharply to the left, with one accord, plunged into the water. Three hundred people wedged themselves in between the rolling booms, swayed to and fro by the current, where they roasted in the hot breath of flame that hovered above them, and singed the hair on each head momentarily exposed above the water. Here despairing men and women held their children till the cold water came as an ally to the flames, and deprived them of strength.

Meantime the eastern bank was densely crowded by the dying and the dead. Rushing to the river from this direction the swirling blasts met the victims full in the face and mowed a swath through the fleeing throng. Inhalation was annihilation. Scores fell before the first blast. A few were able to crawl to the pebbly flats, but so dreadfully disfigured that death must have been preferable. All could not reach the river; even the groups that fell prone on the grateful damp flats suffered excruciating agony. The fierce blaze playing in tremendous counter currents above them on the higher ground, was sufficiently strong to set the clothes aflame, and the flying sand, heated as by a furnace, blistered the flesh wherever it fell. All that could break through the stifling simoon had come to the river. In the red glare they could see the sloping bank covered with the bodies of those that fell by the way. Few living on the back streets succeeded in reaching the river, the hot breath cutting them down as they ran. But here a new danger befell. The cows, terrified by smoke and flame, rushed in a great lowing drove to the river brink. Women and children were trampled by the frightened brutes, and many losing their hold on the friendly logs were swept under the waters.

IN THE FLAMES.

This was the situation above the bridge; below, a no less harrowing thing happened. The burning timbers of the mill, built at the edge of the bridge, blew and floated down upon the multitude assembled near the flats, and inflicted the most lamentable sufferings. The men fought this new death bitterly; those who were fortunate enough to have coats flung them over the heads of wives and children, and dipped water with their hats on the improvised shelter. Scores had every shred of hair burned off in the battle, and many lost their lives in protecting others. The firemen had made an effort to save some of the buildings, and the hose was run from the river to some important edifice. The heat instantly stopped the attempt, but not before the hose swollen with water had been burned through in a hundred places. Although the onslaught of fire and wind had been instantaneous, and the destruction almost simultaneous, the fierce, stifling currents of heat careered through the air for hours. These currents were more fatal than the flames of the burning village. Ignorant of the extent of the fire and the frightful combination of wind and flame, many of the company's workmen, some with wives and children, shut themselves up in the great brick building and perished in the raging heats of the next half hour. Others on the remote streets broke for the clearing beyond the woods, but few ever passed the burning barrier. Within the boundaries of the town and accessible to the multitude, the river accommodation was rather limited, and when the animals had crowded in the situation was full of despair. The flats were covered with prone figures with backs ablaze, and faces pressed rigidly into the cooling moist earth. The flames played about and above all with an incessant, deafening roar.

The tornado was but momentary, but was succeeded by the maelstroms of fire, smoke, cinders, and red hot sand. Wherever a building seemed to resist the fire, the roof would be sent whirling into the air, breaking into clouds of flame as it fell. The shower of sparks, cinders, and hot sand fell in continuous and prodigious force, and did quite as much in killing the people as the first terrific sirocco that succeeded the fire. The wretched throng neck deep in the water, and the still more hapless beings stretched on the heated sands, were pierced and blistered by these burning particles. They seemed like lancets of red-hot steel, penetrating the thickest covering. The evidence now remains to attest the incredible force of the slenderest pencils of darting flame. Hard iron wood plow-handles still remain, perforated as though by minie-balls, and for the main part unburnt. When the hapless dwellers in the remote streets saw themselves cut off from the river, groups broke in all directions in a wild panic of flight and terror. A few took refuge in a cleared field bordering on the town. Here flat upon the ground, with faces pressed in the sand, the helpless sufferers lay and roasted. But few survived the dreadful agony. The next day revealed a picture exceeding in horror any battle-field. Mothers with children hugged closely lay in rigid groups, the clothes burned off, and the poor flesh seared to a crisp. One mother, solicitous only for her babe, embalms her unutterable love in the terrible picture left on these woful sands. With her bare fingers she had scraped out a pit, as the soldiers did before Petersburg, and pressing the little one into this, she put her own body above it as a shield, and when the daylight came, both were dead—the little baby face unscarred, but the mother burnt almost to cinders.

These hardy lumbermen are not wont to exaggerate, and the perfect accord of every story and incident confirm every episode of this tragedy. Faithful to the helpless, a stout woodman carried out on his shoulders one deadly sick of fever. He burrowed for the helpless body a sandy sepulcher, and then began the struggle for his own life. He had lingered too long, and his scarred body was found near the refuge of the man his heroism had preserved.

The tornado played through the desolated streets, and swept the river and the low land adjoining. The timber of the mill floating down among the people, made additional labor and danger, and daylight broke terribly on the saturated survivors before they dared drag their cramped limbs from the icy waters. The mingled crowd of men, women, and children, cows, and swine had held this watery refuge since ten o'clock of the night before. Of the hundreds of human beings that entered the waters, not all escaped; the frightened cows trampled many under the waters; the blistering heat blinded many who groped hopelessly about in the current, and finally sunk. To this day none can tell how great was the slaughter in the waters. After the burning heat of the night, a numbing chill followed, and the water-soaked group crawled over dead bodies and hot sands to the only blazing building in all the waste about them. Groups of dead were found within a stone's throw of the water. Families rushing downward for a breathing place had been blown upon by the rushing blasts and struck lifeless. The ghastly throng huddled, shrieking and bewailing, about the flaring embers, and the terrible roll of the missing was soon called from end to end of the ashen waste. No vestige of human habitation remained, and the steaming, freezing, wretched group, crazed by the unutterable terror and despair, plead with each other to restore the lost ones. The hot blasts of the night had blinded them, and they could but vaguely recognize one another in the murky light of the new day.

AFTER THE CONFLAGRATION.

Long after the flames had died out, when there was no more to feed on, the hot sands rendered moving about an exquisite torture, and long into the dismal midday the survivors were confined to the narrow circuit near the river. As the day wore on, help came in slowly from the northward. Several railroad gangs had escaped annihilation, and one gang, led by an ex-prize-fighter named Mulligan, came with promptness and efficiency to the rescue through miles of burning prairie and blockaded roads. On Sunday night something over 2,000 people were assembled within the confines of this industrious, prosperous city; the dreadful morning light came upon a haggard, maniacal multitude of less than 700. When the work of rescue began it was found that a great number had escaped by the bed of the river and the northern road to the port, and, as they advanced, half-naked stragglers, unkempt and blackened, began to stream into the sparse settlement. As the molten sands cooled off, the woful work of recognition began. Peering into blackened faces, mothers, fathers, brothers tremblingly sought out missing ones.

Some, in the immeasurable anguish of the moment, had dashed themselves against the sands and let out the life with their own hands that the licking flames coveted. Men, too distant from the river to hope for rescue or safety, had cut the throats of their choking children, and were found in groups sometimes unscarred by the flames. In the streets, full twenty corpses were found with no apparent injury or abrasion. Fatuous tradesmen, in the sudden rush of flame, had thrown their valuables into wells for security; every well in the city was turned into a flaming pit, and the very waters half evaporated by the heat. Survivors attest that women and children, cut off from the rivers, were put into wells and covered with bedding. I have looked into every well in the ash-covered clearing, and there is no possibility that a living thing could have endured the flames that boiled and seethed in them.

For hours the unreasoning search was continued by the famished dying remnants, but to little avail; the dead, when recognizable, lay where they had fallen in the streets; where the houses stood, the ground was whipped clean as a carpet, and all hope of identifying human ashes was idle. The next night the long-prayed-for rain came, gratefully to the living, and kindly to the fleeting ashes of the dead. The great dread that hovered over the bay cities and towns was allayed, and the threatened danger nearly gone. Before dark, help came to the perishing sufferers from the neighboring villages. The wounded were taken by boat to Green Bay, whence some were forwarded to Milwaukee.

From nine o'clock Sunday night until dusk of Monday may be taken as the time of the main action in this terrific drama. By Tuesday the sweeping miles of fire had been quenched by Monday night's rain. A slight drizzle still further aided the work of rescue. The ravages of the one night's tornado left unmistakable traces on every hand. Through the solid growth of timber a clean swath of blackened stumps and roots marked the course of the fiery tempests. The roads were cumbered with roasted cattle, and frequently with the carcasses of bears and deer, while the ditches and cleared fields were strewn with smaller game and wild birds. Nearing the vicinity sadder relics were found, for those who penetrated outward through the wall of flame met equally fierce flames in the clearest places. Remote dwellers on the highroads, warned of the great danger, with their families safely packed on their great farm-wagons, made northward through the highways for security; but the flames engulfed them in the heart of the woods, and the fragments of stout vehicles, burned to the irons, now strew the road hither from Marinette, the last town on the Northern Wisconsin border. The highroad enters Peshtigo from the north, through a break in the encircling belt of woods, where the pretty Episcopal Church stood—the last to burn in the fatal place. Even before this was reached, a putrid hecatomb of dead cattle cumbered the wooded street. Among the pines, scores lay, not burnt, but smothered to death. Through this underbrush, thirty bodies of men and children were picked up, more or less injured by fire. In a great many instances the human remains were distinguished from animals by the teeth alone. One horror-struck relative recognized the relics of his nephew by a pen-knife imbedded in an oblong mound of ashes. What does it avail to narrate circumstantially the inexpressible horrors of these succeeding days. What good to tell of the dead faces staring upward through the calm waters; or the piteous circumstances of a hundred heart-wrenching tragedies during and following that treacherous Sunday blast? No moral underlies the terrible story: all that frightened human nature was capable of came into play that direful night; the slaughter resulted from no sin of omission or commission on the part of man. No unseemly panic aided natural causes in achieving, comparatively, the completest devastation in human annals. On the contrary, superhuman daring and energy were put into active operation to mitigate preternatural horrors. The immensity of visible destruction at Chicago surpasses the completeness of this devastation, but Chicago, with all its woes, has not two-thirds of its citizens to deplore as dead.

With one of the men who passed through that night of destruction, I wandered over the pretty rising plain where Peshtigo spread its thriving stores and handsome houses. Save where the houses were built with cellars, which was very rare, there is no trace of a former habitation. Here and there are metallic remnants of sewing-machines and cracked stones. The hardware and drug-store leave almost the only reminder of things that were—a blackened mortar stands idly in a wild confusion of melted glass and lead, with the pestle ready for a new decoction. Two or three men with troubled faces were moving about putting up a shed for the Relief Committee. They answered civilly and sadly that they had been in the fire, but saved themselves and nearest kin. They should have starved to death if the outside world had not stepped in, and now hoped to be shortly on their feet again. They despaired of the bright, cheery little town ever being again as it was, but complacently "reckoned" if the scared ones didn't drive new-comers away by their silly stories, a new people would make a new Peshtigo. If you ever walked over the ground where a camp had been burned, and there are few that served during the war that have not, you found there as much semblance of a substantial city as now marks the spot where Peshtigo's 2,000 people carried on the business of life a few days ago. On the bank of the river fish killed by the dusting [illegible] are still to be seen, which the day after the fire were soft and white and unwounded. Crossing the frail remnants of the bridge on timbers charred and fragile, my neighbor said, "It was as like Judgment Day as I can imagine. Friend Hansen, with his wife and four children, believed firmly that it was, and while the fire rained down, he began to walk composedly up and down his parlor with his family about him, and I have never seen him since."—*N. JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 7 1871.

EVEN the daily papers lack space to tell the stories of the fires. As for us, we can bear to read them no more. They are too full of horrors.

THE Apocalypse is a sealed book.—Zion's Herald.

Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book.—The Angel to John. (ch. 22:10.)

BR. AMES said recently, at the close of a Conference over which he presided:

> A well-conducted religious paper is worth more to a family, in an educational point of view, than four times its cost in common schools. Every economical family, therefore, should take a religious paper.

WE observe that Br. Frank Burr's article on 'Tumble Weeds' has got into the orthodox journals, credited to—Exchange! Possibly they may have forgotten where it was picked up; but we can't help thinking that they hated to give an Advent paper credit for anything so good.

BR. Joseph Morse, who lives north of us in Michigan, says the people in that region have a new name for Adventists, and call them Gizzard-ites. The name would better apply to the class our Savior described as "eating and drinking with the drunken;" of whom another said, their "god is their belly."

SURELY the man is in a sad case who can truly say he is 'ruined' by the loss of his temporal possessions. Many have felt to say it, however. But those who have an interest in eternal things do not feel thus. The best and biggest part of their possession is safe from moth, rust, thieves, or fire.

THE first impulse of the people of this land on reception of the news of the Chicago disaster was to donate liberally to the sufferers. Since then they have been liberally praising themselves for their generosity. Instead of praising ourselves for doing well, it would be better to read and reflect upon Lk. 17:10. We have only done our duty, and, indeed, have hardly done that.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Western Recorder has been attending Chinese worship. He says:

> 'Some come in with a whole roasted fowl, a pig's heart, or a whole goat and place it before the god. When they have allowed sufficient time for him to make a meal, they take it home, saying the god has fed on the spiritual part, and they will eat the carnal part....The more intelligent contend that they do not reverence wood or stone—but the spirit through the image.'

THERE is a good point to this story. We trust it will be appreciated:

> An illiterate negro preacher said to his congregation: "My brethren, when de fust man, Adam, was made, he was made of wet clay, and set up agin de palins to dry." "Do you say," said one of the congregation, "dat Adam was made of wet clay, an' set up agin de palins to dry?" "Yes, sar, I do." "Who made de palins?" "Sit down, sar," said the preacher, sternly, "such questions as dat would upset any system of theology."

IT is a curious commentary upon the church's hope of the world's conversion that the difficulty with the American Board is, not to raise money, but to find men. It is to be hoped that the new field opened in Southern Europe will revive the old enthusiasm. Whilst the Woman's Board finds no difficulty in procuring workers, the new men needed to replace worn-out missionaries at far off stations come not. Is the Savior's last commission forgotten? or is it that men love home and friends, children, wife, and ease too well? Something is wrong!

M. ATHANASE COQUEREL, an eminent French Protestant minister now in this country declares that the French people did not desire war with Germany; nor does he believe the Germans wished it. He arraigns the two emperors as guilty, probably with justice. But the revelations of M. Benedetti show positively that the crime of commencing the bloody conflict rests upon the shoulders of Louis Napoleon, who hoped by it to retrieve his failing prestige. Its blood must be largely upon him.

> GOOD heavens! here is another sect of so-called Christians, said to exist and even flourish in Southern Indiana. They call themselves by the startling name of "The Soul Sleepers," and their idea is that the immortality of the soul is limited to certain lucky ones, through the mediation of the Savior, while all the other souls which are unfit for heaven are annihilated. They are not capable of bliss, and God is too good to torture them. As they are too bad for salvation, and too good for damnation, it logically follows that they must cease to exist altogether. Our impression is that this heresy is an old one revived—either that or something like it.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Our impression is that it isn't a heresy at all, but an old truth revived.

THE Rev. T. K. Beecher, says in the Christian Union that he thinks it highly probable that the spirits which possessed men in the time of Christ were the souls of dead men. In the present day, he asks, what better definition of a crazy man can be given than this: 'A human organism used and played upon by one or more lawless spirits besides its own?' and thinks that these evil spirits might even now be exorcised if there were simplicity and child-like faith among Christian believers.

—As is apt to be the case with utterances of the Beechers, we have here truth and error mixed. A brief definition of a crazy man is, a person with a diseased brain; though, no doubt, some are possessed with demons, as of old. But the demons are not immortal souls, but mortal spirits, minions of 'the prince of the power of the air,' destined to perish with their head and all his followers at the second advent.

As to what might be accomplished by primitive faith, we are happy to agree with Mr. Beecher.

As the contest with the Mormons is exciting much interest, it may be well to note that only Adventists, or those believing as we do, lay the ax at the root of that corrupt tree. The orthodox church admits that the souls of men survive the death of their bodies in a conscious state. Now Mormonism stands or falls with this doctrine. Smith claimed that 'a departed soul' made the foundation revelations of Mormonism to him. Adventists affirm this to be a lie; because the Scriptures declare that man in death is unconscious, and 'knows not anything'—is incapable of making revelations of any kind. Orthodoxy affirms that dead men know more than the living—just as the Mormons claim. Hence it has to hack away at the branches; for it dare not dig up the system by the roots, lest it undermine itself in so doing. How many lies have been founded on that greatest of all lies, uttered in Eden—'Ye shall not surely die!'

IN England they hold large informal gatherings of the Established Church, which they style 'Church Congresses.' Lately, at one of these in Nottingham, Rev. J. C. Ryle chose as the basis of a very eloquent discourse, Heb. 4: 14, "Seeing, then, that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession." There were three leading points in the sermons (1) Where was Jesus now? Not in the grave, not bodily on the Communion table, but in heaven, to warn against infidelity and Popery. (2) What was Jesus doing now? The work of the priest in heaven, interceding for sinners, who therefore, needed no priest upon earth. (3) What was Jesus going to do yet? To come again a second time, to raise the dead, to change the living, to reward his saints, to judge his enemies, and to set up a kingdom in which there should be no sorrow, death, or sin, and in which there should be eternal peace.

—We call that good sound gospel. It has the New Testament, apostolic ring to it.

WE have received a challenge for a discussion with a person who says he is the angel mentioned in Rev. 18:1 and 19:17. We beg to be excused. If he is really the angel, we prefer learning at his feet to discussion.

At present this 'angel' is located in South Carolina: we do not recollect seeing 'the earth lightened with his glory' as he came down, which makes us somewhat skeptical. However, when he takes his stand 'in the sun,' and we hear his voice, as predicted, doubtless we shall believe. Meanwhile we suffer the lashing he gives us as heretics, foolish and anti-Christ, with the more resignation, inasmuch as he includes the entire professed church in the same terms.

This 'angel' goes—for the present—by the earthly cognomen of C. Boyle, and can be found at Lynchburg, S. C., by those interested in his message. And, seriously, had South Carolina best say anything more about 'Yankee Notions,' while she has such a lunatic at large within her borders?

EVERY little while we find something like the following items travelling the rounds of the press:

> An ambitious project has been formed by a small knot of rabbis at Frankfort, to lead the scattered Children of Israel back to Palestine and establish a Jewish Kingdom there once more. Invitations to join the project have been printed in great numbers, and are by this time circulating among the numerous members of the ancient race throughout Germany; and, if we may credit the report of newspapers friendly to Judaism, influential money men in Frankfort—the headquarters of German Jews—have given it their substantial support.—Newspaper, Oct. 1871.
> A great number of religious Jews in Poland are making preparations in Jerusalem, in belief that the time has nearly arrived in which they shall be restored to the possession of that country. They are watching the movements of the Egyptian army, in the belief that some arrangement will be made which will enable them to return to Judea.—Newspaper, July, 1833.

—But neither Egyptian armies nor no 'influential money men in Frankfort' can restore the Jewish nation. Their restoration will be at the same time and of the same nature as that of Sodom, Gomorrah, Moab and Ammon. (Jer. 48:46; 49:6; 39; Ezk. 16:53.)

THE SOUL.

A SCRIPTURAL COMMENTARY.

2 Samuel 1:9. 'Stand I pray thee before me; for anguish is come upon me, because my life (soul) is yet whole in me.'

Ch. 3:21. 'And Abner said......I will gather all Israel unto my Lord the king......that thou mayest reign over all that thine heart (soul) desireth.'

Ch. 4:8. 'Behold the head of Ishbosheth, the the son of Saul thine enemy, which sought thy life (soul.)

V. 9. 'The Lord, who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity.'

Ch. 5:8. 'The Jebusites are hated of David's soul.' i. e., with a "perfect hatred.' (Ps. 139:22.)

Ch. 11:11. 'As thou livest, and thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.''

Ch. 14:7. 'That we may kill him for the life (soul) of him he slew.' Here we find the soul or life, put over against 'kill,' showing that there is a sense in which men may 'kill the soul;' though it cannot be the same sense in which the word occurs in Mat. 10:28.

V. 15. 'Neither doth God respect any person' (soul.)

V. 19. 'As thy soul liveth.' i. e. as truly as thou livest.

Ch. 16:11. 'Behold my son....seeketh my life' (soul.)

So said the great Hebrew king, when Absalom rebelled. If he had believed the poetical theology now received in the church, he might have sorrowed less. The modern poet says: *

"Death is another life. We bow our heads
At going out we think—and enter straight
Another golden chamber of the King's Larger than this we leave, and lovelier."

If this had been true, and David had known it, he would have cared less when his enemies sought his soul, or life.

Ch. 17:8. 'Hushai said, Thou knowest thy father and his men, that they be mighty men, and they be chafed in their minds.'' Margin 'bitter of soul.'

Ch. 18:13. 'I should have wrought falsehood against my own life' (soul.) i. e. brought himself into danger of death, by the act referred to.

Ch. 19:5. 'And Joab....said, Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants which have this day saved thy life (soul), and the lives (souls) of thy concubines.'

Ch. 23:17. 'Is not this [water] the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives?' (souls.)

1 Kings 1:12. 'Let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest save thine own life (soul) and the life (soul) of thy son Solomon.'

V. 29. 'As the Lord liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of all distress.'

Ch. 2:4. 'Walk before me in truth, with all their soul.'

V. 23. 'If Adonijah have not spoken this word against his own life' (soul.)

Ch. 3:11. Thou hast not 'asked the life (soul) of thine enemies.'

Ch. 8:48. 'If they [thy people] bethink themselves....and return unto thee with all their heart and all their soul.'

Ch. 11:37. 'Thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth.'

Ch. 17:21, 22. 'Let this child's soul come into him again....and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived.' Suppose we read it for the argument's sake, at least—'Let this child's LIFE come into him again....and the LIFE of the child came into him again AND HE REVIVED.' Is there anything unnatural in this version? Is not nephesh rendered life, already, in scores of places? Is any other argument needed than a simple presentation of this reading, to settle the question?

The immaterialist theory is, that the real person is the soul. Keep this in mind, and let us paraphrase the passage now to suit that theory:

'Let the soul that dwelt in this body come into this body again....and THE CHILD came into his body again, and THE BODY revived.' This is a just paraphrase of the immaterialist theory; but all must acknowledge it is a carricature of the Bible statement.

The case simply stated is, then, just this. We have traced the usages of the word nephesh through nine books of the Old Testament. We find that in a multitude of instances it means life—cannot justly be rendered by any other term. We have nowhere found it used in the sense of an immaterial, intelligent entity. To insist upon giving it that sense here is, therefore, clearly unwarrantable, unless it can be shown that neither of the common, natural meanings of the word will make good sense. But, as we have shown, LIFE is just the sense demanded by the entire analogy of the passage; and immaterialism is ruled out. (See also remarks on Gen. 35:18.)

However, H. W. Beecher is believed by the mass, when he calls death in the following language, 'a lifting up.'

> Death a lifting up.—I love to think that what seems to be a mystery of the silence of death, which envelopes so many that we loved on earth, is not really a mystery. Our friends are separated from us because they are lifted up higher than our faculties can go. Our child dies. It is the last that we see of him here. He is lifted so far above us that we cannot follow him. He was our child; but instantly, in the twinkling of an eye, God took him, and lifted him up into his own sphere. And we see him not. But it is because we are not yet developed enough. We cannot see things spiritual with carnal eyes. But they who have walked with us here, who have gone beyond us, and whom we cannot see are still ours. They are more ours than they ever were before. We cannot commune with them as we once could, because they are infinitely lifted above those conditions in which we are able to commune. We remain here, and are subject to the laws of this realm. They have gone where they speak a higher language and live in a higher sphere. But this silence is not the silence of vacuity, and this mystery is not the mystery of darkness and death. Theirs is the glory; ours is the waiting for it. Theirs is the realization; ours is the immaturity striving to be ripe. And when the day comes that we shall disappear from these earthly scenes, we shall be joined to them again; not as we were—for we shall not then be as we were but as they are, with God. We shall be like them and him.

—So the child's death was A LIFTING UP, and its coming to life again A CASTING DOWN! So did NOT believe either the mother or the prophet.

ONCE MORE—WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

A little while since we made some suggestions, and propounded some questions concerning the ministry of the gospel, under the heading, 'What is to be done?' We have received one reply that will interest all our readers. As it is a private letter, we shall withhold the name and location of the writer, only remarking that we know the person, and that he is fully worthy of the confidence and esteem of all. He writes thus:

> Dear Brother. In the last TIMES, under the head What is to be done? I found an article in which I can fully agree with you. Now I want to ask you a few questions, first stating my case. One year ago this fall I first came out from the world and resolved to serve God. But having business which called me away before the ordinance of baptism was administered at that meeting, I was not immersed then. Upon coming back home I went to the Baptists' meetings, and took a free part in them. After a few days, candidates for baptism were called for, and I went forward, and was baptized, not understanding that they held all persons baptized by them as members. As soon as I learned this, I began to inquire into their creed and doctrine, and found that they did not agree with my way of reading the Bible, and we had some rather warm talks on the subject. I then asked their minister if I could get a letter from them and he said, "No, only to churches of the same faith and order!" So at one of their regular meetings I asked them to take my name off their books, and at their next regular meeting to give me time to give them my reasons for this request. The first request was granted but the second was refused. But I thank God that I had that trial to pass through, for it has made me strong in the Lord.
> I have twice tried to proclaim his truth, and the Lord has blessed me in so doing; and I am determined to do all that is in my power for the cause of his truth. I have a wife and family whom I must support by my labor. And my wife is hardly willing to let me go out to preach, partly because she thinks I am too young and inexperienced; and partly because she cannot see how we are to get a living: for preachers of the Advent doctrine, it seems, have to support their families and preach besides.
> Now, the question I want to ask you is, Is there any place where I could go and preach where preaching is desired, and get some help from the people. I don't expect, neither do I wish to be wholly supported by the people: but if I could get some help, I could study more than I could if I had to work all the time. I am willing to work, am anxious to work: but I want to study, too. I don't lay any claim to being a preacher now, but I believe, by the grace of God, I could learn if I had help and encouragement.
> I am very anxious to be doing something, but hardly know what to do. If there are places where I could go and begin at the bottom of the ladder and climb up, I am willing to go. I feel my weakness and unworthiness, but I trust in God for strength.
> I want you to write to me; and if there is nothing more for me to do, I can at least work and earn money to pay for tracts and papers. You have my prayers for the success of THE TIMES and the tracts and books which you are publishing.

—If we are to grow and prosper as a people, something must be done to meet the cases of young men like this. It is all true enough that God calls his servants to walk out to the mount of sacrifice with only faith for a support; but that is only a view of one side of the case. He has also demanded of his people that they sustain his laborers. He will not print books, nor make flour, nor coin money in heaven to send down to them; but does these things through his church. And if we awake to duty, and sustain his cause and the laborers in it, he will bless us, and we shall grow and thrive. But if we cease to give; become niggardly and close in our policy, neglect missionary work, we shall surely dry up from the very roots, become mere cumberers of the ground, fit only for removal out of the way to make room for another people who will do God's work for the last days.

PERSONAL.

The past few days have been, with some connected with this office, a season of deep sorrow, succeeded by heartfelt gratitude. Death has been very near our borders, and for a time, it seemed that he would even prevail against our care, our prayers with strong crying and tears, and the best skilled physicians. On Friday last, Addie, Br. Elijah Mansfield's companion gave to the world the life which so nearly cost her own. For hours skill and affection struggled to save the precious life, but early Saturday morning hope failed, and sorrowing hearts gathered around her bedside to watch the tide of life as it slowly ebbed away.

Never were three longer hours. Scarce ever were the consolations of faith in Jesus more effectual, or more consoling. We could be thankful for much. She had not been burned to death, like many of late. She had been all unconscious of suffering, unlike many to whom wearisome months are appointed. She was surrounded with friends, loving hearts and hands, any of whom would have died for her, if it could be. We blessed God for the consolation of the present, as well as for the glorious promises of the future.

But before even the first faint light of day began to shine, a happier light shone in that sad room—a ray of hope! It was like a gleam, only, but how it lighted our hearts. Faith was renewed. God would, now that we were tried, and, indeed, had yielded our own will, and said, "Father, thy will be done?"—he would be better to us than our fears.

She lives to-day—not indeed out of danger, but with a good prospect of future life and usefulness should time continue. We ask the prayers of all in behalf of herself and her deeply afflicted husband and family.

TRUTH SPREADING.

Henry Constable's unanswerable pamphlet on THE NATURE AND DURATION OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT is on sale at the leading book stores in San Francisco; at Bancroft's and Roman's. Over one hundred copies have already been sold in that city. Whitmore's book is also for sale at Bancroft's—the largest bookstore on the Pacific coast.

Dr. A. L. Stone, who has been lecturing in San Francisco on "Questions of Doubt" propounded by his people, declines to preach on the direct question—"Are the finally impenitent punished with eternal misery." Nor does he yet say—after some weeks of time for consideration—that he will undertake to prove an intermediate state of consciousness between death and the Judgment day.

"The orthodox are being brought to bay," says a correspondent.

QUERIES.

T. W. R. There are some passages of Scripture that seem to favor traditional theology simply because of the usus loquendi or a term of terms they contain. This is especially true of words that are translated from a term in the original tongue, whether Greek or Hebrew, that is used in a variety of senses, and therefore rendered by two three or more English words. You will find a case in point in the term nephesh, which is often rendered soul. But it is also rendered life, person, dead body, etc. Now the reader of Hebrew has this advantage: wherever the term occurs he has the word originally used, and can judge for himself of its meaning from the context and sense of its connection: but the reader of a translation, unless there is a uniform rendering of the original word (which is in many cases incompatible with preservation of the sense of the original), must accept the translator's judgment of its meaning, which may be faulty from bias, carelessness, or design.

The word nephesh is found in Gen. 35: 18, and also in 1 Kings 11: 37, and is translated soul. The common reader naturally gives to the word as he reads the sense that he has heard attached to it from childhood, and not being contradicted or corrected, the impression grows to settled conviction, although the idea really has no foundation.

Now, for the sake of the argument, suppose that our translators had rendered Gen. 35: 18—"And as her life was departing (for she died);" and 1 Kings 11: 37—"Let this child's life come into him agair," what a different weight these passages would have in the controversy upon the nature of man. They have rendered nephesh by life time, time and again; there is nothing to forbid that rendering here; it is perfectly congruous; is pertinent in the sense of the connection, and exceedingly natural in either case.

We do not charge design in the translation they have given; but the result has certainly been to darken counsel. With the rendering we have suggested no one would ever have dreamed of any other than the true sense—that in either case (as in scores of other instances where nephesh occurs) the writer had no reference to an immaterial, conscious entity, but simply spoke of the life of the woman and of the child,

If there were a multitude of cases where nephesh was clearly used in the popular sense of the word soul, then there might be an argument by what particular English word it should be rendered: but it is only in a very few instances that the popular definition of the word soul is even claimed to be the meaning: hence there is no rule by which the immaterialist can fairly avail himself of their support. The whole weight of evidence lying in the usus loquendi of the word is against him.

These remarks apply with equal force o the term ruach, rendered spirit in he passage which is the subject of our query. We will lay it and another text before you.

> "Then shall the dust return to the earth as was, and the ruach shall return to God who ave it." (Eccl. 12: 7.)
> "For that which befalleth the sons of men falleth beasts; even one thing befalleth em: as the one dieth, so dieth the other. ea they have all one ruach....All go to one lace [sheol]; all are of the dust, and all turn dust again." (Eccl. 3: 19, 20.)

Now one more passage:

> "And the Lord God formed man of the ust of the ground, and breathed into his nostils the breath of life, and man became a living ul." (Gen. 2: 7.)

Yet another:

> "Behold I....destroy all flesh wherein is the ath of life....and every thing that is in the rth shall die." (Gen. 6: 17. See ch 7: 22.)

We find that God gave man "the eath of life;" that "man, cattle, eeping things and fowls" all possed the same. That Solomon says ey have all one ruach (breath, called shamah in the passages referred to in enesis); and in death man's ruach es to him who gave it. Is there a issing or a weak link in the chain of gument? Not one. God gave "the eath of life!" when we die it passes ain into his keeping. This sense is atural, simple and sustained by the alogy of the Scripture. It clears up -called difficult passages—the Savr's and Stephen's dying words. The mmon idea of these texts has only one g to stand upon, and that is the popar bias arising from the use of the ord spirit. But if ruach were unirmly, in the hudreds of instances in hich it occurs translated spirit, the evailing prejudice would receive a de shock, and we should have at least, is advantage—that the common reads would be better able to judge what as "the mind of the Spirit" in employg that term.

The Hypothesis of Evolution.

This is the title of a pamphlet pubhed as one of the University Series Scientific Lectures, Addresses and says—by Chatfield & Co, New HavConn. Written by Prof. Edward . Cope. It opens unscripturally. Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God shall man live." We all would like to know where the professor obtained this quotation, as we read in Deut. 8: 3, "That he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Again in Mat. 4: 4—"Man shall not live by bread alone; but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Luke 4: 4—"That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." This is but a trivial mistake, but it is noticed to show how often the first line of a speaker or writer will prove an index to the remainder of his arguments. If the key note in music is not pitched correctly, the result is that the whole tune will be inharmonious. And as a general rule when a speaker or a writer errs in his first sentence, we may safely expect that his whole argument will be erratic.

The writer goes on to consider a question at the same time philosophical and theological: but although from his text we would expect a Scriptural argument, he deals out most of the time the theories and vague guess-sees of men.

Not to particularize, his argument is one to harmonize the Darwinian theory with common sense and Revelation. Considering the task before him we can not wonder at his poor success. While no person will deny the facts of similarity in some respects running down from man to the simplest vegetable that can be said to possess life, yet to consider this a proof that man was created by gradations upward from the simplest form of life would simply be belief in something void of direct evidence and in opposition to the Mosaic account of creation. And although some are ready to do this, I thank God the majority of Christian thinkers are not.

The writer's chief and only argument in support of this theory is a showing of facts concerning likeness in structure of many of the inferior animals to man in the different stages of growth. Thus be shows that in the embryonic growth, man first resembles in the circulation of blood, and in the size of the brain, the lamprey, the lowest vertabrate in which the brain can be recognized. Then, later, the fish, the next step in the scale of intelligence. Then the birds, the next higher, and after this the crocodile, the next in order, and finally reaches that point in progression called man.

Then he shows by history how man has advanced in the scale of intelligence. He shows how beast-like to use the term—children are in their first actions and words, and calls attention to many other interersting facts.

But does this prove the Darwinian theory? Far from it. Upon it might be based a supposition that it was true, but not a proof: and even a supposition is impossible to one who believes in the Bible. His argument to avoid the clashing of the Mosaic account with the Darwinian theory is, that man was not a man until God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life: that he then "became a living soul," while before he was only a living body. Far-fetched, to be sure! He would avoid Genesis by making his development theory antedate the Mosaic account.

But to have this ridiculous argument stand long enough to fall down, it must be supported by something beside suppositions. If we turn to Gen. ch. 2, we shall find that the creation of of the lower animals and of man was upon the same day: and although in Gen. ch. 1 the lower animal's creation is spoken of first, in ch. 2 it is spoken of as if man was created first. (Gen. 2: 19, 20.) How will our metaphysical friends answer this?

The author deigns to notice Gen. 1: 26, 27, and in remarking upon it says: "Those who believe that this 'image' is a physical, material form are not disposed to admit the entrance of anything ape-like into its constitution: for the ascription of any such appearanc to the Creator would be impious and revolting. But we are told that 'God is a Spirit;' and Christ said to his disciples, 'A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have.' (Lk. 24: 39.) It will require little further argument to show that a mental and spiritual image is what is meant, as it is what truly exists."

But, Professor, there are those who think differently, who fail to see the great argument in ascribing the term image to such an immaterial nothing as spirit signifies when taken in your sense. Let these persons of different opinions respectfully refer you to the Bible on this question. And to direct your mind speedily to the passages upon this point read Whitmore's Immortality.

But dropping the Professor, let us notice his theory. Let us suppose it to be true; what would be the logical result? If the law of progression has obtained up to the creation of man, it will not cease as long as a higher nature is to be expected. Then man instead of coming to death and jumping off into futurity a happy or unhappy spirit, will rather continue to live here in this present form until he is gradually raised up to the higher form of life, and instead of all the dead being resurrected, none will be resurrected any more than our ape ancestry can be resurrected to enjoy the present advancement of their descendants. They would not be fitted to enjoy the life we live, because of an inferior cast of intellect. So man will not be fit to enjoy the life of his spiritual descendants, because of inferior powers of mind.

Again, as in all time past reproduction of species has been a necessity in order that the ball of progress move on, so will it be in order in the next life; and so on to the ridiculous end.

This is just what Darwinism amounts to—if carried out to its legitimate result. No person should adopt this theory, clashing as it does with reason and revelation.

Of course the Darwinites do not advocate that these are the results of their theory; but we ask any candid person if it would not terminate in the above ridiculous extremities, if carried out in accordance with the law of progression?

J. D. JONES.

We enjoyed a great treat, as we went to hear Dr. Tichenor last Sabbath night, on "Daniel's Vision of the Kingdoms." His analysis of human governments was scathing and true. They are evils which, with their heavy wheels, crush the poor by millions, and grind their very bones and blood and hearts into the dust and death. They are permitted of God, to save from greater curses, but they have always been, are now, and always will be managed by the devil, in revolt from Christ, until "He whose right it is to reign" shall come. Then and not before then, will they be corrected.—Baptist.

" " " In one street I saw the curb-stone calcined and the wooden pavement upon which it joined not even scorched. In many streets I saw lamp-posts twisted and riven by the heat, and close by them articles naturally more susceptible to heat scarcely showing a trace of its effects.

" " " As I traversed the ruins of the North Side, I saw many strange freaks of the flames. Standing at the foot of a street through which a railroad was laid, I saw the rails warped from the bed at short intervals, so that, having a clear view for nearly two miles, the track looked like a huge serpent. But afterward going over this ground, I saw that the wooden roadway from which these rails had been forced by the heat was uninjured.

" " " But the strangest and most incredible of all the freaks of fire ever seen or imagined, is afforded by the residence of Mr. Ogden, to which I have briefly alluded in a telegram. This house, with the grounds and out-buildings attached to it, occupies the small square bounded by Lafayette place, Oak, Clark and North Dearborn streets. The house and barn, with the fences around the grounds, are all of wood, yet these buildings, which are in the very center of the devastated North Side, are the only ones which escaped, and not one of them shows the slightest mark of fire or of smoke. The house, which is an elegant one, with bay windows, Mansard roof, and other ornamentations, is as fresh as the day it came from the builder. The same is true of the barn in the rear, and of the fences and shade-trees nearest both buildings. Yet, all around are the marks of fire that years will not efface. Immediately across Dearborn street, not more than three hundred feet from the Ogden House, are the ruins of Dr. Collyer's Church, with the interior and roof all gone, and on the north side, which is the side nearest the frame house, the immense stone walls have been eaten half way through by the flames. One would as soon have expected a chip thrown into a blast furnace to come out unscathed as this house to have safely emerged from the ocean of flame in which it was surrounded for hours.

ABROAD.

" " " Every preparation for war is being made by Russia.

" " " Antonelli, the great Cardinal States man is dangerously sick: but not so much so as the system he has struggled to preserve.

" " " Young female slaves are shipped by English steamers from Tripoli to Constantinople. Their price at Tripoli is £25 or £30 each.

" " " Of the 120,000 inhabitants of Meschad, the capital of Chorassan, two-thirds perished from hunger and disease in the course of July last, while the remaining third fled and were mostly captured by roving troops of Turkomans and Affghans, and led into slavery.

" " " The extraordinary sum of $375,000 was obtained in two weeks from the Caledonian gold reef in New Zealand. Considerably more than a ton was extracted from 300 tons of quartz. At this rate gold will soon be of as little account as it was in Jerusalem in Solomon's day.

" " " The way Amadeus I was seduced into accepting the Spanish crown was this: His wife's confessor persuaded her, and she persuaded him that it was duty. Certainly no sane man would accept it short of a conviction of duty coupled with a wife's persuasions. A less desirable position of honor would be poor indeed.

" " " It is stated that there is hardly a man in Corsica who would not gladly give his last drop of blood for the advancement of any person bearing the name of Bonaparte. The Corsicans still reverence the name of the first Napoleon, whom they speak of as "our godlike fellow-countryman, and the greatest of all Corsican heroes."—Like many other statements concerning the Bonapartes, the above is untrue. The Bonapartes have just been voted down 26 to 26 by the Corsican Supreme Council, and Prince Napoleon intends to resign.

" " " It is not at all astonishing that money should grow scarce in Paris. The heavy drains made by the indemnity payments must have greatly diminished the aggregate amount of currency in France, and as the German Government persists in hoarding this money which is so sadly needed in circulation, the probabilities are that the payment of the remaining $700,000,000 of the indemnity will seriously disturb the finances of all Europe, if indeed France shall be able to make the payments at all, which is by no means certain, unless German financiers can be brought to a better understanding of the economic laws with which they seem disposed to trifle. The locking up of so large a sum of money must prove disastrous in the end, even to the Germans themselves.

" " " Republicanism is spreading in England—not the brutal Communism of Paris, but earnest determined democracy, working practically and legally to effect its revolution by acts of Parliament. The changes which are proposed are the following: At the close of the present reign, the civil list, i. e., the cost of maintaining the Royal Family and its collateral branches, must be reduced. There must be such a reform of the House of Lords as will exclude from it hereditary imbecility, and open it only to hereditary ability. To some extent, therefore, it must be made an elective Second Chamber, and its obstructive veto power must be curtailed. Universal suffrage is evidently considered premature, but the lodger must have easy possession of the franchise as well as the householder. There must be a redistribution of seats in Parliament on some intelligible principle of wealth, population or area applied to the districts possessing them. The State Church must be disestablished and "the funds, lands, palaces, and parsonages" in its possession must be resumed by the nation whose property they are held to be. The present owners of the land are not to be disturbed, but the sole right of the eldest son to inherit land must be broken through, and every land-owner shall be "left at full liberty to turn his estate into money without the consent of son or any man." Common lands must be held by the state for the common good, manors held from the state ought to be resumed on giving the holder due compensation and be split up into small allotments, and the principle should be recognized that landed endowments for charitable or other purposes become, after a certain lapse of time, the property of the nation. All existing obstacles to the admission of workingmen into Parliament must be removed.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

" " " The Roman Church is splitting in twain. The anti-infallible-ists are uniting and organizing under the name of 'the old Catholic Church.' They are sustained or at least countenanced by all the Catholic governments, and already the Greek church seeks a union with them. This may be the last coming out from mystic Babylon. It looks very much like it in some respects. If so its final fall is very near.

" " " At Columbus, Ga., is a sect, bearing the complicated name of "Theophilanthropists." The creed is simple: "The world is my country, and to do good my religion;" so that we do not see why these new devotees did not call themselves the "Theophilanthropocosmopolitanists," which would have been more impressive and sonorous. One portion of the belief of the Theo Phi's we somewhat approve. It is that "any system of religion which shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system"—rather a broad bit of generalization, but with a grain of truth in it.—N. Y. Tribune.

" " " The London Spectator has an interesting article on the Future State. It goes to show that whilst on that subject the scientific writers of Europe are usually skeptical, those of England are not so. They rather ask "why it should be more wonderful for us to live hereafter than to live now; why it should be more impossible for us to be there than to be here; why we should be so energetically curious about the whence, and so irritable against the curiosity as to the whither." That shows good English sense. As John Newton remarked, "If one found himself in a ditch, he wouldn't wait till he learned how he fell in before getting out." It was the highest praise that could be expressed of a man, "They did not know where he came from, but they knew where he was going to, and would like to accompany him."

" " " Some excellent brethren -men in the pulpit, and men out of it—adopting a new new and current political phrase, are urging our people—in this dawn of the second century of our Church—to take "a new departure," to discard, it would almost seem, some of the best theological positions we have hitherto maintained, and place our denomination before the world, at least, upon other and different grounds. In some quarters it has been intimated that we must especially repudiate the dogma that sin is born of the body, or perishes with it, and the connected position that there is no future punishment for present sin, and no moral connection between this life and the life to come. The implication would appear to be that we must come out squarely, and preach future punishment, not only to take away our reproach, but to give our gospel moral power, and turn men from sin to righteousness of life!—New Covenant, Universalist.

" " " An association of ministers and churches organized at Berea, Ky., in September, on the following basis:

> Believing that the division of the church of Christ into sects which, by creed or practice, exclude from membership persons acknowledged to be true Christians, is schismatic, unscriptural, and detrimental to the cause of Christ,
> Resolved, That we will seek to promote the organization of such churches as will admit to membership all applicants who will give satisfactory evidence of Christian character.

—Shall we never have done with the unmitigated absurdity of forming new sects because division is contrary to the gospel! What bosh for men to proclaim that sects are all wrong, and straightway add another to the list! A sect may be wrong, and it may be right. Whether it is right or wrong depends altogether upon the reasons for its existence. If they are good, the sect is good: otherwise it is of the devil. Paul was of a sect. 'After the way they call a sect, so worship I,' he says. But of all the inexcusable sects, the most so are those that add to the existing divisions on the plea that there should be more unity! 'O-consistency, thou art a jewel!'

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Preached in the Rich Woods Baptist chapel—a log house. Had the most intelligent and best citizens out to hear me speak on the kingdom of God. I showed it was not a church in probation, but the immortal state. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Many had been hearing that the church was the kingdom, and that it was set up on the day of Pentecost. I think that view was seen to be defective. When the prayer "Thy kingdom come," is answered, the "the will of God" will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. That this has not come yet. But it will, and that soon.

At the close Eld. Coffee, a Baptist, asked me a series of questions, which he had prepared with care, with an evident design to put me down. His first question was—"I should like to know sir, the difference between a man and a beast?" I replied from Eccl. 3: 19, 20. And added, their organizations are different; man being placed at the head of the creation.

Second question: "As every Christian has the spirit of Christ, I want you to tell me what becomes of it, when he dies." I replied, that the spirit of Christ in a Christian was not an entity, but a power, or an influence, diffusing peace, love, etc., and ceased to operate upon him at death. (Eccl. 9: 5, 6) "Their love" etc., then perishes. "The dead know not anything."

Third. "What do you do with the words, 'My soul thirsteth for God.' Had he not a soul?" I asked him who he thought it was, that was the happy possessor of "my soul," was it David's body? If so, it was a mere lump of matter. It could possess nothing. It had no intelligence. Who is the happy owner of this immortal soul? But my friend could not find a living owner. So I told him that when David said "My soul thirsteth for God," he simply meant to say I thirst. It was the man, that thirsted, and not an entity within him.

The above are specimens. He held on till half of the audience left in disgust, and said some very ignorant and foolish things in the estimation of the people, whom he sought to turn against me, But the truth never looked so clear and bright.

TUESDAY, Oct. 17. Spoke at the log chapel in the Flat Woods on the spirit of man, and on baptism. These are questions of discussion and dispute, and I was requested to preach upon them. I had before spoken on the soul, which satisfied most, and now they desired to hear on the spirit. I learn that most were pleased. It is said quite a revolution is wrought. The opposition to the Advent doctrine has ceased with about all who opposed it, and many of them have subscribed for the TIMES. A church will be organized here.

The leading opposer here is Eld. John Mann, of the M. E. church, South, who is for sending Adventism "back to hell, where it came from." He is a great hand to preach on Hell. He tells sinners, that if they don't repent, "they will go to hell and be God-dammed." These are said to be his own words. His bishop told him and the other ministers of the conference, that the Advent doctrine must be put down. And they must do it." They are doing what they can, but are not doing a thriving business, as yet. Eld. Mann did not come out to hear or meet me at all (though I was near him), to talk on the subject. And he will find that the Adventists, after all, if he gets acquainted with us, are sustaining the truth by the clearest proofs from the word of God. We only ask him to meet us with the Bible in hand. It might do him some good. We shall never be "put down" by invective or slang. If some have dishonored the Advent cause by apostasy, that does not make against it. Some Methodists behave as badly. But there are good Methodists, and so, there are good Adventists. Let truth stand on its own merits.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 18. Br. Bishop rode with me to [illegible]khorn, my next appointment, [illegible] miles over the mountains. We failed to reach the chapel in time. On arrival the people had just scattered. One half hour which we were unavoidably detained, would have saved this disappointment. I can't say that I did not feel sad. I never disappoint if life and health, and circumstances permit me to meet the people at the time appointed. I saw however many of the leading men of the country who lingered and had interesting conversation on the faith and hope of the gospel.

We now went on with Eld. Brown, six miles to White River, and put up with him, and Father McDearmon, a good old-fashioned Methodist. Sr. Brown was quite feeble, but was much revived by song and prayer. She is in sympathy with her husband, and will help him in his new position. It is good to have our helpmates in sympathy with us in our religious relations.

Br. Brown, has been burnt out within the last year. He lived in a double log house. One end was all in a blaze before they awoke, and he had just time to get his wife and children out, and escape without saving a thing. He has just finished a new log house, and is comfortable for winter. Every thing is uncertain here. In the new earth all will be safe and sure.

Father McDearmon asked me many questions on the state of the dead, and destruction of the wicked, all of which I answered. He did not reply, and seemed to think my answers Scriptural and reasonable, though new to him. We also had some talk about Wesley, of whom he is a great admirer. He likes the old Methodist spirit and practice better than the new.

THURSDAY, Oct. 19. Took leave of friends, and forded White River, coming to Batesville, some twenty miles. Here I got news from the outside world, and got my letters. It has been some weeks since I have seen the papers, which is something of a privation after one has been accustomed to see and read them daily.

I found the citizens of Batesville anxious to hear me again, and so I spoke in the Court House at night on the spirit of man, to an intelligent audience. Ministers, Lawyers, Doctors, with the leading men of the place were out. I gave opportunity for questions, but none were proposed. I never never had a better reception than at Batesville. Mr. Wycough opened his doors to us again, and treated us with Christian hospitality.

FRIDAY Oct. 20. Rode out to the Head-stream School House, six miles, and preached in the forenoon and evening. Put up with Br. John A. Shaw, a late convert. Br. Rosebraugh is with me, and I look for others to-morrow.

SATURDAY, Oct. 21. Met at 11 a. m. The most of the elders and brethren on whom we placed dependence came in. I first laid before them the plan and importance of church organization, when we organized an Advent Christian church. Eld. Rosebraugh was chosen pastor, and Br. Lewis Robinson was chosen and ordained deacon. It was in this neighborhood, that Eld. Rosebraugh was lately excommunicated by the Baptists. But he never stood so high as now with the people. The elders and brethren present then voted unanimously to organize a State Conference. This organization was happily effected. They are now in working order, with good prospects of growth. They are a happy and grateful people. The Lord give them prosperity. The only regret was, that some of those deeply interested, could not be present on account of sickness; especially Br. Lenox from Red River. We all regretted this; but God orders all things well.

At night I spoke to a full house, on the kingdom. We had a melting and blessed time, and all could pray with more heart than ever "thy kingdom come!"

MONDAY Oct. 23. At an early hour came to Batesville. It was hard to part. But we hope to "meet again, ne'er to sever," when Jesus comes.

This dear people are all Southerners. They were all educated in the midst of slavery; but with a full knowledge of my views, as a man from the North, they give me their full fellowship. We knew no difference, and are all looking for the "blessed hope," in one faith, and in love.

SABBATH, Oct. 22. The rainy morning hindered many, but some got to the meeting. We closed with a communion service—a sweet, heavenly time with victory.

From Hiram Munger.

In one of Br. Munger's late Notes by the Way, we find the following interesting passage:

When going to Bath I saw an eagle's nest on a tall pine tree, over one hundred feet from the ground. Here again was a lesson from nature. On inquiring, I found this nest had been there for over thirty years, being repaired up every spring. There are sticks in it, for the frame work, as large as a broomstick, woven in sea grass and fish net, picked up on the shore of the fishing places, until it is as large as a small cock of hay. Each of the parents have been in mourning within thirty years; one having been killed, the other would get a partner in a few days. These are of the largest size, and have been known to take lambs three weeks old, and one was known to kill a twelve-pound goose in January, and would have carried it off, but was prevented by the woman of the house. The eagle, being hungry went to the next house, and seeing a cat in the door-yard, scooped it up for a dinner; but puss set up such caterwauling and scratching of feathers, the eagle carried her about eighty rods and dropped her. The cat fell in the snow, and went back to the house after an unpleasant ride of eighty to one hundred yards. In the summer time they live mostly by robbing fish-hawks, as follows: they hide in a tall pine tree, watching the hawk, and when he gets a fish and rises in the air, as they always do, the eagle will put for the hawk. The hawk will go up, crying bitterly; but it is of no use; the eagle rises the fastest. When above the hawk he makes a dive for the hawk, which, to save his own life, drops the fish, and the eagle catches the fish before it reaches the ground, carrying it off to feed their young, and poor Mr. Hawk must catch another, or go without his dinner. How much like a sectarian the eagle acts.

One more interesting fact, noted in Scripture about the eagle stirring up her nest, is demonstrated. When the young get feathered out, the old ones stir up their nest in such a way as to throw the young ones out, which causes them to spread their wings and try to save their lives by flying, the old ones watching their efforts to fly for the first time. When the young ones are tired, the old one dives under them, taking the young ones on its back, and then soars up very high, slipping out from under them, leaving them again to try their strength of their wings, to save them from falling to the ground, and dashing themselves to pieces. They say the third time the young eagles will fly to a tree and light. Such works of nature are worthy of notice. They show how God deals with young Christians by stirring up their nest to throw them out upon their own resources, and then take them up on high, as on eagle's wings. Some know what it is to be thrown out of their nest before they are worth anything to the cause of God; others ought to be.

After writing the above facts, another was told by an old inhabitant. Years ago an old colored lady lived in that town where this eagle's nest was. She was poor and a good Christian. One day she had nothing in the house for dinner. She heard a noise, and on looking up she saw this eagle after the fish-hawk as usual. When near her cottage, the hawk dropped the fish, and the eagle failed to catch it, and it fell to the ground. She got it and made her a dinner, and thanked the Lord. Br. Storrs, who told me this fact, heard the old lady tell it.

From Geo E Lee, Brimfield, Mass

It certainly seems to me that the "Glorious Jubilee!" can not be far distant. I am bound to be one that shall help to "shout the song of victory." It is joy to anticipate such an event. What can be a more glorious sight than to see the Son of man descending in clouds of glory, with all his holy angels? Who can wish to delay the event? Who is there that would not gladly exchange their all in this world, for the joys of the "world to come." Would not all, if they could in their heart say with the Revelator, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly?" It is a great thing to live in these last days, in constant readiness to enter the kingdom. Yet I am confident that as God has said he would "purify unto himself a peculiar people," it is possible for every one who chooses, to be of that number, who will submit themselves to the will of God and lay hold of his promises? In him I do rest, and his promises trust, knowing that the word of God standeth sure.

From J B Preston, East Gilead, Mich, Oct 5.

For the past month I have been suffering from fever, and nervous prostration so that I have not been able to write but very little. I have not forgotten your columns nor your interest, but hoped to be able to do something that would add more to your interest than former work. But as yet I am unable. Still I believe that God only gives the things that are best for us. "All things work together for good to those that love the Lord." David said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I learned thy statutes." God has given me [by poverty] [illegible] humility, which is a great bles[illegible] But I remember 'twas by poverty [illegible] wrought this grace in me. The captain of our salvation "was made perfect through suffering." May my affliction make me more like him, and they will be a blessing in disguise.

Two weeks ago last Sunday, I visited the church in A—— just as I arrived I was attacked anew with pain in my head and stomach, which almost robbed me of my strength. Still I thought I had faith in God and that he would sustain me. But my faith momentarily failed, and I felt that I was going down. I asked a brother to conduct the service and stepped out of the house. There, though in much pain, I was reminded how many times I had made my boast in God; that he never would leave me when I needed help. And my spirit cried to God—"If I have ever felt thy helping hand, let me know its power to-day." I returned to the pulpit. There—for the praise of God I say it—I felt the girding of an unseen power; and oh! how heavenly the overshadowing Spirit! The moistened eyes told the story—"God is here!" I would not magnify myself, but how precious to know that Jesus is all in all. That God is a refuge for those that trust in him.

While I believe that God sustains his faithful servants, I remember that his word commands a zeal according to knowledge, and I would always stand corrected before the sacred oracles. My physician forbids my studying for the present, but that God who hears the outbreathing of the the heart to him records my thoughts for the welfare of his precious cause. May the blessing of the highest rest upon each department of his own great work, and keep his dear children in the way of duty.

From W C Hall, Fort Howard, Wis.

I send you a paper which gives an account of the terrible fires which have been so destructive to life and property. The best accounts give but a meager discription of the terrible fires. The loss of life is almost incredible. They think in the town of Peshtigo, including the village of 1,200 inhabitants there were five hundred lives lost. On the east side of the Bay the loss of life is greater in proportion to the population even than in Peshtigo. At one mill five miles from Little Sturgeon, out of about seventy persons fifty-five were burnt to death; and some that escaped with life were badly burned. One man that saved his life in a well has just arrived, and is stopping with us. He says that seven got into the well: two were smothered, and five got out alive. The scene was terrible, beyond discription. Around this mill there were about two acres cleared. Most of the people got into this clearing between the mill and the woods, where they were found lying dead the next morning. Those that escaped remained in the well all night.

Other places in Kewanee and Door Counties the loss of life and property is full as great. They say it "seemed as if the world was on fire." Some from Peshtigo say the fire did not come from the woods but came down in the air. They thought the day of judgment had come!

This was Sunday night. They were having a dance at a house in town. When the alarm of fire was given they kept on with their dance, and only one little girl escaped. All the rest were burned in the house. Peshtigo was a very wicked place, but there is nothing left of it now but ashes, except one old house.

From O C Marston, Ancona. Ill Oct 16.

I found the cause here in rather a dilapidated condition. Once there was a thriving interest. But for some cause or other it has measurably died out, and unless God visits the church and community with a shower of reviving grace, it will become entirely dead. I tried to preach three times to interest congregations. The Lord blessed us, as was evident in the free spirit of exhortation manifested among the brethren and sisters at the close of each service. I never felt more of a burden for sinners in my life, and could the meeting have been continued through the week souls would doubtless have been converted. The brethren desired me to stay and continue, but all things considered it was finally thought best to defer such an effort for a time. I believe by proper effort in the name of God there can be a live interest raised up in Ancona. May God grant it is my prayer.

From Anson Brown, Richland, Co Wis.

THE TIMES is a welcome visitor, and a great help to me. I feel thankful that Br. Turner urged me to subscribe for it. He knew it would be a means of my searching the word of God for the truth. The church here is trying to do what they can for the Master. Br. Hough is laboring in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Once in four weeks he visits us to much profit on our part in the way of truth and righteousness. Some are starting for the kingdom every time he comes. His heart is all in the work. He seems to work for the Master, to save the perishing. Prejudice is moving back as a cloud before a morning breeze.

From D T Call, Florence, Ohio.

The little band of waiting ones are still watching and praying for the coming of our Lord. We have the usual amount of opposition with the rest, but that only serves to make us more diligent and fervent in our walk and conversation; for we know that "these light afflictions, which are but for a moment will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," when Jesus comes. A short time since the United Brethren minister that preaches in this place gave us a sermon on the immortality of the soul. After a diligent search he produced twenty-seven texts, among which were the thief on the cross, rich man and Lazarus, Paul's desire to depart, and so on to the end. He gave us a glowing description of our "house eternal in the heavens," to which the "inner man" is transported when this "earthly house" is torn down. Oh! that they would see what great inconsistency they are teaching: for if this earthly house, spoken of by Paul in 2 Cor. 5: 6, is our body, in which the soul lives as a tenant, then this building of God not made with hands must be another body, into which the soul goes at death. Now let us try the case of Lazarus, whom Jesus raised from the dead. He had been dead four days, and consequently he had been in his "house eternal" for some time. But Jesus comes to the grave, and cries in a loud voice—"Lazarus, come forth!" and Lazarus leaves his "house eternal," and comes back and takes up his abode in his "earthly house!"

Now we are told that there is no death in heaven. Again we are told that death is a separation of soul and body. And if death is separation of it here, surely separation of soul and body in heaven is death: and the only conclusion that I can come to is, that when the soul of Lazarus was separated from his heavenly body at the command of Christ, that there was death in heaven!

But still they say that they can see no beauty in the doctrine that we teach. Yet, thank God, some are receiving it gladly. One brother after listening to the discourse referred to, was led to search for himself, and is now rejoicing in the light.

Conference Reports -

From a Baptist Minister.

[The following is a private letter to Br. and Sr. Berry. We keep the name back for the present, for good reasons. Ed.]

I this day had the pleasure of reading your very kind, cheering letter. It caused my eyes to overflow with tears of reciprocal affection to find that comparatively strange brethren had sympathy for me, and for the cause of Bible truth in my hands, while my own brethren—who, so far as man's work is concerned made me a minister of the blessed gospel of Christ, are gushing on me with the same malicious spirit of hate as was thrust upon our blessed Lord and his apostles; and, as then not for any evil or wrong I have done, but because I have tried in my weakness to tell dying sinners there was life in Christ only; and that, that life was offered now, to be consummated to all who receives it, in the resurrection, at the last day: and the rejecters of that life shall be destroyed with the second death.

For this I am denounced as a heretic, and in secret conclaves by whispering slanderers—those who would not dare to meet me face to face, and condemn the doctrine I advocate—my public discourses have been by them tortured into such teaching as was never intended. And now after peddling slander against me three or four years in secret, they have at last, being zealous, vehemently broke loose upon me with a flood of persecution, with intent to break down myself, and others also in the ministry, and, if possible, destroy our usefulness in the future. But thanks to him in whom I trust, they are making converts to the present truth, if possible, faster than we had done.

But why dwell on this picture of human weakness! You will readily perceive that all this must have some effect on my feelings, and so it has: for I am in the very flames of afflicting persecutions. But, thank the Lord, it is all for his truth's sake. Will he not help me? Yes, he does; and I believe he will still continue to help. But as he is to be sought for helping grace, will you pray earnestly for me, and those dear ones who are with me contending for the truth. Let us pray that this contending against the truth may tend to spread it more.

There were but three of the five ministers met at our church, and after a very meager, and singularly conducted meeting of inquiry, closed the proceedings with telling us what conclusion they came to, or how they would report. But I suppose they will report us guilty of the charge brought, and at our next regular meeting it is expected the church will seal our doom. Many seem bent on our exclusion from the church, and from the ministry. How it will result the Lord only knows. If truth prevail I am satisfied. But I may have to find a new home on my own merits.

Conference Minutes

Iowa.

ANNUAL MEETING

The second session of the Advent Christian Conference of Iowa, convened at Cascade, Thursday, Aug. 31.

Ministering brethren from abroad were invited to a sitting. Those present were Elds. J. V. Himes, D. S. Clark, and C. C. Marston. Ordained ministers belonging to the conference present. F. H. Kenny, M. Chandler, R. B. Dutton, P. S. Buck, H. H. Janes. Not present: M. J. Janes, R. W. Wilson, L. G. Hiscox. Licensed ministers: D. A. Dickinson, C. W. Pitcher, G. W. Woodard, J. W. Said, J. F. Adair.

Delegates: Cascade church, G. Dean, H. E. Wright; Manchester, Sr. Cooley and Lewis; Richland, M. Dague, Wm. Groat, N. A. Said, E. A. Said.

Business committee, R. B. Dutton, D. A. Dickinson, C. W. Pitcher.

The address of the President was listened to with interest. He stated that our Quarterly Conference had proved a success with but one exception. Unity had prevailed among the brethren in trying to advance the great interests of the cause of God, and to carry out the rules and regulations of our body with a hearty good will. To God be all the praise.

After a free, mutual, and thorough examination of the standing of each minister among us, all were found to be in good standing and in harmony one with another, with a mind to work for God and the salvation of souls.

Reports of ministers: All had tried to do what they could in their limited circumstances. In some cases much good had been accomplished, several churches organized, and truth is gaining ground. Many hearts and ears are being opened to hear and receive the word of God in love. Therefore they are encouraged and resolved to labor on, trusting in God for help and success.

Reports of churches: Those reported were in rather a low condition, but still maintained their meetings; preaching a portion of the time by different ministers, and some living, working members in all, who were determined to go through to the end, and enter the kingdom at last. The churches at Esgart, Iron Hill, and Strawberry Point were not reported.

Churches received: Elk Valley, organized by F. W. Kenny, Feb. 16, 1871, 27 members. Toronto, organized by R. B. Dutton; about thirty members. Spring Branch, organized by H. H. Janes, July 29, 1871. Ten members.

These churches were in a live, healthy condition, with a weekly prayer, and monthly conference meeting and Sunday school.

The business committee's reports. On Q. M.

WHEREAS, The constitution provides for three Quarterly Meetings in each district, therefore

Resolved, that in some of the districts it not being convenient to sustain three meetings, it is left to the ministers and churches to hold as many as may be deemed profitable to the cause: and

WHEREAS, some of our churches are not supplied with the regular ministration of the word and ordinances, therefore

Resolved, That our preachers of the Quarterly meetings make arrangements for regular circuits, and appointments for each church, as often as circumstances will allow. And that the churches be invited to unite in the arrangement, and give their proportion for the support of circuit preaching in their respective neighborhoods.

Resolved, That hereafter, when our preachers organize churches, that they instruct them to unite in the arrangement of circuit preaching, and make provision for the attendance upon ordinances.

Report received and unanimously adopted.

The following statement was unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, By the proclamation of the soon coming of the Lord, a people have been called out of different denominations, and these having no church organization, there was a necessity for the organization of both churches and conferences. They were at first called Adventists, as individual members, and the churches were called Advent churches. As this cause was extended West, a different position was taken as to the name. Some of the preachers and members having been members of the Christian society, were partial to that name, and some of the churches and conferences took the name Christian without the term Advent. Among these was the Iowa Conference. The State Conferences and General Publishing Associations, all united in the name Advent Christian as a compromise.

For a number of years, the majority of the ministers of Iowa desired to be members and to act in harmony with the Advent Christian body. This was proposed and discussed in several Annual meetings. But it being evident that the majority would not be permitted to rule in this matter, the ministers, with others desiring to unite with the Advent-Christian body resolved to leave the "Christian" Conference, in peace, and organize an Advent-Christian Conference, to become one with the body, in name, heart and action. This was effected last year, and we now invite all the Adventists within the bounds of the Conference in the State to unite with us. The Adventists in Iowa should be one, and nothing on our part that we can do for the unity of all, will be left undone.

If there is any considerable number of Advent ministers and churches who may not be satisfied with our present organization, who still wish to unite in the organization of an Advent-Christian Conference, that will unite all the Adventists, we will hold a convention with them and re-organize for a more perfect union of all, whenever they shall signify their wish to do so.

Br. M[illegible]ing of Chicago, was invited [illegible] as the door may open. [illegible] elected for the coming year were: F. H. Kenny, President; H. H. Janes, Sec'y; D. A. Dickinson, Treasurer.

Campmeeting committee: F. H. Kenny, D. A. Dickinson, I. Cooly, D. R. Lewis, M. V. Plank, A. G. Lewis, D. Mohr.

Voted, that our next Annual Conf. and Campmeeting be held in the Manchester District.

In view of the wants of the cause, and the need of renewed, energetic action among the brethren, therefore

Resolved, That the president in each district confer with the churches in the same, in reference to our next annual meeting, to arouse them to action.

F. H. Kenny, H. H. and M. J. Janes, were appointed delegates to the Western Ministerial Conference.

The first Q. M. to be held in the Deep Creek District, in Oct. The second in Manchester District, about the first of Dec. The third in Iron Hill District about the 1st of February.

This session has been marked by an increasing interest, love, unity, and zeal from first to the last. Much good has been done, and all are much revived and encouraged in the good way. Nine precious souls were baptized into Christ, and many others deeply convicted of the necessity of speedy preparation to meet their God in peace. Preaching by Brn. Himes, Clark, Marston and others: all good, logical, timely, stirring, and effectual.

H. H. JANES, Sec'y.

Central Illinois.

SPECIAL MEETING.

Convened in the new chapel at Auburn, Oct. 14. When organized there being but little business that could be done, there arose a discussion on the formation of a new Conference in the southren portion of the State. It was then unanimously Voted, "That we invite our brethren in the southern portion of Illinois to unite with us."

Adjourned. D. O. GIBSON, Sec'y.

Michigan.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT, Q. M.

The Southern District of Michigan A. C. Conference held its first session at Clapp S. H. in the town of Moscow, commencing Thursday Sept. 21.

Members present: J. M. Snook, A. E. Babcock, J. B. Bissell, C. Fox, and J. R. Preston. Also Brn. Fisher, Taylor, Whitney, and others from Rives were present. The meeting was a pleasant and profitable one. Two were baptized by Eld. Babcock, and added to Moscow church.

Little business was done. A resolution passed making J. M. Snook standing committee for the year, to be assisted by two brethren elected quarterly to prepare business for our meetings, and act as devotional committee.

Adjourned to meet at S. H. No. 6. Rives township, Jackson Co. Dec. 20.

J. R. PRESTON, Sec'y.

I. C. Wellcome, Mission Agent, to travel and collect mission funds and subscriptions. Adjourned.

Wednesday, a. m. Voted, to receive Eld. Jared Whitman as member of Conference.

The committee on T. P. S. Hampson's case reported as previously published in the Crisis. Accepted.

Voted, That the first session of the "Ministerial Bible School" be held in connection with this session of Conference.

Afternoon session.

Report of Tent Committee called for. Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell made some verbal statements of their work, and rendered the report of Br. A. W. Taylor and wife (who have managed the tent the past two summers), as follows:

TENT REPORT FOR 1871.

The Mission Tent was pitched in four towns besides the places of campmeetings, viz. Buckfield, Oxford, Harrison, Livingston. In all these places the meetings have been well attended, with an apparent interest to hear. We think good has been accomplished, and seed sown that the great harvest day will prove to have brought forth fruit unto eternal life.

Total receipts, collections and donations $62.58
Total expenses.................................. 42.46

Left in our hands......................$20.12

A. W. TAYLOR.

Twelve other preaching brethren have aided in preaching in the tent, and without pay, while Br. and Sr. Taylor get but $20.12 for their time. Report accepted.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Mission money received from Jan. 1870, to Oct. 1871: From Augusta, $2.75; Bangor, 2.50; Brewer, 8.50; Biddeford, 10.86; Bristol, 50c.; Durham, $1; Frankfort, 50c.; Hartford, $2.90; Kennebunk, $11; Livermore, $5; Miscellaneous, $16.50; Norway, $12; Palermo, $1; Portland, $8.47; Stark, $1; Sumner, $3.50; Topsham, $4; Yarmouth, $10; Right-hand, $20; Sale of small tent, $20; Sale of tracts, donations of tracts, and donations for tracts, $43.40. Total, $165.38.

I. C. WELLCOME, Treas.

Report accepted. Adjourned to Thursday.

Thursday, a. m.

Voted, To take from the table the following question, which had been laid over from last year: "Does the virtue of membership entitle women to the right of voting in the business sessions of our Conferences." To bring it into form for discussion, the following was offered:

Resolved, That in receiving females into conferences or churches, it does not thereby entitle them to the right to discuss or to vote on business matters, but to the exercise of all the rights the Scriptures have given them as females.

The resolution was freely discussed, pro and con, and the following Scriptures cited and applied: Gen. 3: 16; 1 Cor. 11: 3, 7–11; ch. 14: 34, 36; Eph. 5: 22, 24; 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12; Jud. 4: 4, 6, 9; 1 Ki. 21: 5, 9, 14, 23; Est. ch. 5, with others. The resolution was adopted with one dissenting vote.

Resolved, That we accept the committee's report on the Portland church case, as originally given by them to the church. Adopted.

Voted, That we raise $500 the coming year for Mission and Tract Funds, and that we choose an agent to travel and solicit and collect funds and subscriptions.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with Eld. A. W. Taylor and his wife in their sad calamity by the severe injuries they received in being thrown from their wagon and badly maimed and bruised, by which they are laid by for a time: and as they are in destitute circumstances, we commend them to the sympathies and charities of our brethren and sisters generally, who can give them of their substance in this time of need. Direct donations to them at Byron, Me. Adopted.

Voted, That the thanks of this Conference be extended to the friends in So. Windham for their hospitality in entertaining us during this session.

Voted, That the Secretary forward the minutes of this Conference to the World's Crisis and THE ADVENT-CHRISTIAN TIMES for publication.

Besides the business of Conference we had preaching afternoons and evenings, and several very interesting social meetings, and one session of "The Ministerial Bible School."

Br. Jerry Hill was ordained for the work of the ministry. Our meetings were deeply interesting. We felt assured that the end of probationary time is truly near, and our work will soon close.

Ministers present: C. Goud, F. A. Baker, I. C. Wellcome, R. R. York, Wm. H. Mitchell, Jesse Gay, H. S. Mitchell, E. M. Haggett, Jared Whitman, J. A. Libby, Jerry Hill.

Dele[illegible] I. Carle, Peter Johnson, Geo. Humphrey, R. Varnham, J. Hill, J. Stevens.

C. GOUD, Pres't.
I. C. WELLCOME, Sec'y.

Western Virginia and Southern Ohio.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Convened at Johnston Creek near Walton, Sept. 23. S. P. Whitney, D. Hammack and J. R. S. Mowrey were appointed a Business Committee. Members present: Elds. S. P. Whitney, M. Hammack, J. R. S. Mowrey, D. Hammack, G. Looney. Delegates: Cabin Creek Church, L. R. Kirk: Coon Creek, D. Covey; Rose Valley, John Atkinson; Mt. Pleasant, Jas. Lowrey, Wm. Dorrity, M. Hively, M. Shaver; Hayes J. Chambers; Chambersburg, by S. P. Whitney. Field's Creek, by L. R. Kirk; Poca Fork, A. Pauley; Round Knob, M. Hammack and J. Kiefer. The Secretary being absent, J. R. S. Mowrey was chosen Secretary, pro tem.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Dear Brethren and Friends: It is with much pleasure that I address you upon the present occasion. Feelings of gratitude to our Heavenly Father spring unbidden from my heart when I look back upon the past conference year. With the Psalmist I can but exclaim to-day, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, to forget not all his benefits!"

The past year has been one of success to the cause we love. Three new churches have been raised up, by the blessing of God, who are now knocking for admission into our Conference. Three brethren unto whom the Lord has said—"Go ye into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature," are waiting a seat in our counsels. The field of our labor is enlarging. The "Macedonian cry" comes from every quarter—"Come over and help us!" Oh! for grace to labor more diligently, earnestly, and faithfully!

Perhaps a few statistics of our past year's labor will be of interest to you all. I have baptized into the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection, about fifty souls; organized two churches. Preached 218 sermons, delivered eight lectures, traveled 2975 miles, found a wife, and obtained favor of the Lord.

I have tried to serve you faithfully as president of our body, and am thankful for the honor which has been conferred upon me. I now resign my charge, praying for your future well-being and prosperity. And may the Lord direct you in the selection of a president for the coming year, who may, under the blessing of God guide you to the future usefulness and success in the advancement of the cause of truth. In the conclusion let me exhort you, one and all who are professing to look for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, to gird on the armor anew. Awake to new diligence! "The Lord is at hand!" West Virginia must be conquered for the truth. With us there should no such word as fail. Our enemies are strong: Our God is stronger. On then to victory! Be faithful! Be diligent! "Let your light shine." Strike for right, for God, for truth. Occupy till the Lord comes!

After examining the Christian character of ministers present, the following were granted license for the year: L. R. Kirk, M. Hammack, J. R. S. Mowry, and S. P. Whitney, who was also chosen State Evangelist.

After considering the propriety of procuring a tent for the Conference, the following brethren were appointed as Tent Committee: S. P. Whitney, D. Hammack, and J. R. S. Mowrey, to see to raising money for that purpose.

REPORTS OF CHURCHES.

Mt. Pleasant, Prospering, some additions during the year. Two have fallen asleep,

Coon Creek, Prospering in the faith. Several additions during the past year.

Chambersburg, Several additions; about thirty members; also an interesting Sabbath School.

Hayes, Nine members; two additions; good prospect.

Cabin Creek, Nine members; holds her own; have a good Sabbath School.

Poca Fork, (New) Eleven members; one fallen asleep; in a good condition.

Round Knob, Sixteen members, prospering.

Rose Valley, Eight members.

Field's Creek, Organized with eleven members; bright prospect for building up.

Next proceeded to elect Officers. S. P. Whitney, was elected President; J. R. S. Mowrey, Secretary; M. Hively, Treasurer.

During the entire meeting unity and love prevailed. Sound doctrine was presented which made lasting impressions upon the minds of those who heard. Five souls were baptised into Christ. Seven additions were made, besides several names of persons who will join in as soon as an opportunity is offered. The cause is onward, in the strength of our God. By the sword of the Spirit we will gain the victory that every where elevates society, enlightens the friends of man, and honors God. From every direction we hear the call, Come and preach to us! Five counties are being awakened to the necessity of taking God at his word, rather than trust in the doctrines of men. We, as a Conference desire the prayers of all who are interested in the blessed cause of truth, that we may be able by grace divine to conquer West Virginia with the truth, and prepare a people for the coming of the long looked for King, who has told us to watch and pray. We verily believe he will come soon.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 7, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement, the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection; the finite nature of sin, the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. B. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

Bible Dictionary.

We have a good copy of Smith's Bible Dictionary (abridged), 700 pp., for sale. Price, $3. It is J. B. Burr & Co.'s edition, and is fully illustrated.

"Good Tidings."

The long looked for "Conference Book" has now appeared with the above title. See notice in another place, and send for a copy. $1. in cloth. 50c. in paper, postpaid.

The Minstrel.

We are entirely out of the Minstrel, and shall not be able to furnish any more for some weeks yet. Indeed, the plates are so badly worn, that we may defer another edition until we can make new plates, and give it an improved shape. Only a lack of means to work with causes the delay.

Statistics.

Conferences and States which wish their statistics to go into the new Almanac and Year Book, must send them at once, or they will be too late.

We would like from Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut Secretaries a list of churches; those having chapels, number of members; a list of ministers in good standing, with their P. O. Addresses. Also the P. O. Addresses of the Rhode Island ministry.

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canadas) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists: and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready, and we shall begin to fill orders in a few days. It will be for sale at the Camp-meetings. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity.

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

The Proposed Chart.

We confess to but little faith, at first, that our ideal of a complete prophetic chart could be realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, and so made the proposition to publish if a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. The response is encouraging. Shall we have the other needed names?

John S. Lawver, M. D. Geer, Eld. J. Raymond, C. C. Marston, F. Burr, The Chicago Church, D. O. Hink, I. C. Wellcome, J. F. Huber Grand St. (New York) Church. Church at Auburn, Ill. C. Libby (pd.) R. R. York. Wm. M. Hall. J. C. Stone. W. E. Brown.

Who will help fill up this list?

Besides the above, Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., has offered to give one of his $160 Hand-raking Reapers, if sold soon, for $120. See advertisement.

To Correspondents.

J. A. SMITH. Have not a copy of that number. What shall we send for the $1?....F. M. BERRY. You are entitled to three more 3 months subs. for the money you sent....N. C. MILLER. Can you tell why we cannot get a letter to you? We have written to Valparaiso three times; and the letter has been returned by the Postmaster in each case. Why?....C. C. MARSTON. We will send by express this week. S. E. MABEY. THE TIMES goes regularly to John C——, Missouri. He owes nearly $2. Sent the others, including tracts, to M. E. O., and TIMES to T. F....G. S. PIKE. Obituary.

SMITH. In Adams, Wis., Oct. 22, 1871, Charlotte Smith: aged 74 years.

Sr. Smith was brought up in the faith of the church of England. About two years ago her attention was called to "present truth." She received the message of the coming Redeemer in his kingdom with much gladness, and now rests in hope. May the Lord bless this affliction to her numerous offspring. Services by the writer, in the Methodist chapel, at Postville. Subject: Nearness of redemption, from Joel 2: 1.

G. G. GODFREY.

HOYT. By the late fire at Peshtigo, Wis., Enoch Hoyt: aged 56 years. Martha, his wife: aged 46 years. Francis Edwin, their only son: aged 22 years. Mary Emma Leigers, their daughter: aged 27 years. Louisa Jane Newberry, their daughter, and her husband—all perished in the terrible conflagration Sunday night, Oct. 8.

Of this family only one child remains, a daughter of fifteen years. She was saved by being away from home at the time. The family she was with saved themselves by going into the River. She is left without home or relatives, and deserves as well as needs the sympathy of all.

Br. Hoyt has been for years a firm believer in what is termed Adventism, believing that he would receive eternal life at the resurrection, in the last day. He moved here from Richmond, Me., four years ago, and after enduring great hardships, had made himself a good home. Now he rests in hope of that better home, which flames shall ne'er devour, nor waves ever o'er flow.

W. C. HALL.

CONAWAY. In Rochelle, Ill., Oct. 21, Hattie, wife of Jeremiah Conaway.

She died in the blessed hope of immortality at the coming of Jesus, without a doubt but that she should rise in the morning of the resurrection. She leaves four children with her loving companion.

Services by Eld. D. S. Clark, who spoke from 1 Thes. 4: 18.

J. CONAWAY.

BULHAND. In New Carlisle, Ind., Aug. 26, 1871, of Congestion of the brain, Netta May, only daughter of Charles and Amanda Bulhand: aged 6 years, 3 months, and 29 days.

Yes, my darling is gone. She was a most affectionate child, the pet of her parents, and loved by all. But she was cut down by death's icy stroke, and we left to mourn. We weep as we look back upon our loss. We can see her watching at the gate for Pa to come back from the shop—waiting for fond embraces and kisses of love.

She was a faithful at her Sunday-school class, and had learned to sing sweetly; and not long before her eyes closed in death she sang one of the songs she had learned there—

> "Go work to-day in my vineyard,
> We hear the Master say;
> Go work to-day in my vineyard
> And I will lead the way.
> The fields are ripe for harvest,
> And harvesters are few,
> Oh! stand not idly waiting
> With all the work in view."

Oh! how those words ring in my ears, as a warning for me to live right, that I may meet my darling in the kingdom.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE Chicago newspapers were all burned out in the great fire. Many of them are already revived. We have noticed the Standard. Besides it, we have also received The Little Corporal, that excellent children's paper. Mr. Sewell, the Publisher, lost everything in his office, but retains his indomitable energy and perseverance. The Little Corporal will be published from December onward, and we take pleasure in commending it to our friends.

The Advance scarce ever published a better number than its resurrection sheet. Pluck, vim, and talent show in every column.

The Interior is to be revived, but we have not yet seen it.

The Western Rural, also, will be continued, but we have not yet seen its face since the fire.

THE Christian Weekly of New York really pleases us by its neat appearance, its strong common sense, its beautiful engravings, and price. To be sure it has an occasional dash of erroneous theology. But that can hardly be avoided in these days. Send a few stamps for specimen copies. It is published at 150 Nassau St., New York city.

THE Union Publishing Co. are getting out a history of the Great Fire. It is from the talented pens of Geo. W. Upton and James W. Sheahan, well known as editors of the Chicago Tribune, and eye witnesses of the conflagration.

The book will contain 600 pages, with illustrations, map, etc. Will contain a sketch of the rise and progress of Chicago, showing its condition and prospects at the time of the fire; but the bulk of the book will be made up of the story of the fire, with reliable incidents, etc., etc. In short, just the book the public now demand. Sold only by the Publishers, or by subscription. Price, $2.50. Address, Union Publishing Co., 168 Twenty-second St., Chicago, Ill.

Notice.

I will sell at a low figure, to any Advent preacher, who comes properly recommended, three lots of land —40, 80, or 120 acres. The land is 1¼ miles from the Railway station, and has buildings, orchards, and sufficient water. My object is to procure in our midst a man of God, who will preach the word, regardless of popularity, to the Advent church in this region.

Western Ministerial Conference.

This Conference, composed of ministerial delegates from the various Western Conferences (each Conference having the right to send three delegates), is to meet in connection with the Association meeting at Chicago, Dec. 5, and probably hold its first session on the 6th. Let delegates be appointed at Quarterly Meetings, or by the Conference Board, in cases where the Annual Meeting has omitted the selection of delegates. We meet, not as an authoritative, but as an advisory body of ministers, to act for the good of the body at large. Essays on different topics will probably be read by different ones, besides attending to business that may come before us. Particulars hereafter.

J. V. HIMES, President.

W. A. C. P. Association.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Western Advent-Christian Publishing Association, will convene in the Advent Chapel, Green St., Chicago, Ill., Wednesday forenoon, December 6, 1871. A full attendance of the members is desired.

The following amendments to the Constitution of the Association will be presented for action:

ART. XII. Sec. 1. The stock of this association is hereby made transferable, by the transfer of the certificate issued therefor, endorsed in blank by the original holder, his heirs, executors or administrators; and the entering of such transfer upon the books of the Association. The date of said entry of the transfer shall be the date of the transfer.

Sec. 2. This article shall take effect and be in full force from and after its adoption.

Amendment to Art. XI. To amend Art. XI. so that it shall read: "This constitution may be altered or amended at any regularly called meeting of the Association by a vote of *——— of the members present at said meeting: this amendment to be in force from and after its adoption.

Churches throughout the West are invited to elect delegates, selecting persons not already members of the Association. These delegates will not take part in the first meetings of the Association; but arrangements will doubtless be made to receive them to full membership at the earliest possible moment.

WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 39¼ down to 21¼. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh; it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive [illegible]. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

Usual price, $160; but the machine presented to THE TIMES office will be sold for ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY DOLLARS, if taken soon.

"Outer Darkness."

[The following article, by Eld. Saml. Tarver, we found in an Arkansas local sheet. While few of our readers will admit that he is clear on all his points, they will perceive that he wields a vigorous pen, and is traveling in the right direction for the clearest light. ED. TIMES.]

One may be cast into inner darkness and yet live, for all is not death in a dungeon. But to be cast into outer darkness is to be thrown beyond the pale of light, and where there is no light there is no life: this is known to your philosophy.

Mat. 8: 12 is not in favor of eternal torture, but constitutes one of a thousand intimations that the wicked cannot live forever. The qualification is this—"There shall be weeping and gnashing of death." Because "many shall come from the East and from the West, and shall sit down with Abraham Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness." What has happened? Jewish prestige and power have failed. Gentiles have prevailed. The marriage feast was spread, but criers had to leave the streets of Jerusalem, and proclaim upon highways. Jews "would not," Gentiles would: and their children have come from the east and the west and have sat down in the kingdom with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, because "the children of the kingdom" would not! For this refusal there has been for that people much "weeping and gnashing of teeth." Consider their history of incessant persecution, confiscation, banishment from that day of the crucifixion, down, down to this.

This text is claimed in support of ceaseless torture, and so perverted, because it stands connected with a list of parables intended to exhibit the immediate advantages resulting from a Catholic Christianity and the curses flowing from a bigoted sectarianism. But let it be interpreted nationally or individually, and it can signify nothing more or less than that nation or the man that will not sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of Christ must suffer and perish. But be sure we write it right: suffer and perish—not perish and suffer. For how can a thing suffer after it has perished, or ceased to be? That the wicked do perish, read this—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not PERISH, but have everlasting life." At what time they perish, read this—"punished with everlasting destruction—when the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven." (2 Thes.) When is he to be revealed from heaven? At his second coming to our earth "without sin unto salvation." From this programme, which no Bible student will dispute, we infer that the fatal execution of wickedness and the wicked will take place on the earth. And furthermore, that this execution will be "everlasting destruction," and not everlasting torture. Let us appreciate language. It's a good thing, and gives words their proper import; by this means they become the "signs of ideas."

We diverge a little by remarking that it must be after the millennium when Christ will come, because when the "thousand years" expire the nations engage again in battle. When Christ comes, he comes to destroy wickedness and the wicked, and so terminates war. Then will the following be fulfilled: "Every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and under the earth," heard I say "Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever." Therefore since this proclamation of "every creature" is universal, there can be no protest. Hence is it written, "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." But for what? Cast into the fire for what? Tradition says to live in ceaseless pain; but the Prophets say for destruction, the Apostles say destruction, and Christ says, "ye would not come unto me that ye might have life," therefore Paul says "the wages of sin is death," and reason says death is destruction; because to be "punished with everlasting destruction" is to be punished with a death which knows no life in any condition.

Why man cannot suffer always is because he is not immortal by natural descent. He cannot live always, only by accepting immortality. To be saved signifies not to be snatched from eternal torture, but to be regenerated or born into another life. Hence Job inquired—"If a man die shall he live again?" Answered by Christ, "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live."

We should know that man is not naturally immortal, because he was simply created a "living soul," which is a living creature. So were other animals created living souls, or breathing creatures. Why our translators rendered nephesh soul when applied to man, and creature when applied to beast was because of an opinion taken from papacy and by papacy from paganism, that man was originally endowed with an immortal spirit. The superiority of man over beast consisted in the truth that the privilege was granted him to become thus endowed. But did he so become? The Bible says not. But tradition and the schools of Plato say man is immortal. To these schools the apostle said—"Ye men of Athens, as I passed by and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription. 'TO THE UNKNOWN GOD.'

Before men kick too hard against the "new doctrine" as they term it, they should consider well what the serpent told Eve. You remember he made her believe she was immortal, that she might do what she pleased, she could not die. This at first may be thought a quibble, but it is the heresy that has overshadowed the church, and almost destroyed the world. It is worth studying attentively. If immortality comes of the second Adam and not of the first (and who can deny it), then Christ must confer immortality on the wicked, otherwise they cannot live in hell eternally (according to your reasoning.) But where do you get it that Father, Son or Holy Ghost ever confer immortality on the wicked? And if it is never conferred on the wicked, why can we not agree with Paul, that "the wages of sin is death," and that death is "everlasting destruction" instead of everlasting torture. Worldly minded men accepting what has been taught them concerning the destiny of the wicked have failed to comprehend the doctrine of endless torture, and have either discarded the Bible in toto, or invented subterfuges. Some of the subterfuges are purgatory, universal salvation, inevitable progression and spiritism. Let it be once fairly understood that the wicked neither get immortality by the first Adam nor by the second (unless applied for) and the above named subterfuges must vanish. Let us see: first then Purgatory, a doctrine by which so many silly preachers have been evoked and so much money extracted from the poor by "our Lord God the Pope." This doctrine is false, because when "mortality puts on immortality," "death is swallowed up in victory." So if any man get immortality he lives without purgatory. This is too plain a case to spend any more paper on.

Next universal salvation. This doctrine cannot be correct, for the wicked have no immortality by inheritance from the first Adam, and never having received this gift from the second Adam, cannot be saved from death: there is nothing to save—"no other name given"—and therefore "death hath dominion over them."

Next, Inevitable Progression, or that doctrine which assumes that man was created with an immortal spirit and can therefore never retrograde. This doctrine is false, because founded on the supposed incorrigibility or specific tendency of natural law. This law may be incorrigible, and its tendency specific, but its tendency is downwards. Hence is it written, "the spirit of man (the righteous man) goeth upwards, but the spirit of the beast (the wicked man) goeth downwards."

Next, Spiritism, or that doctrine which claims Christ to have been a good man, only as Shakespeare was great or Fulton ingenious. The advocates of this faith rest their belief upon assumed manifestations from the spirit world through intelligent media. But inspiration has written, "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." Furthermore, we are told that no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he [Christ] that came down from heaven." So we are constrained to inquire—how do you get your information? Even David who died—well, perhaps 900 B. C., had not ascended to heaven up to A. D. 33. (See Acts 1: 34.) The modern medium must be too fast by a car length or two. We are taught that when the righteous die they sleep, "Hid with Christ in God." So is it written, "when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." If there is any appearance or manifestation of them before the coming of Christ, where is the authority? Conferences with the spirit-world must be delusions, according to their own showing. (See 2 Thes. 2: 11.)

From South Carolina.

Br. Himes: I have been passing through a great deal of opposition and persecution. For what? For no other cause but for joining the Advent Church, and for preaching everywhere and all the time, that when man dies all life is gone forever without a literal resurrection of the dead, which will take place when the King shall come to make all things new, destroy the devil with all his subjects under the dark waves of eternal oblivion, and amid a new and lovely world, at the head of an immortal race set up a kingdom where all will be peace and joy and love and youth and beauty and life forevermore.

Now this is called (by ministers of the gospel) "New England gospel," "poison" "a curse," "the worst form of infidelity." These are some of the arguments used to banish these horrid evils from the country. Now let us look for a moment, at some of the fruits of this system of infidelity. I have been preaching here for nearly two years and it is the universal testimony of the oldest members of the Methodist Church, that the Bible has been more closely read and studied during my ministry, than it has been for the last fifty years. One young lady told me some time ago she had read the Old Testament through four times in six months. "I love the Bible more than I ever did before. I read it more than ever before because I understand it better than ever before"—are some of the expressions and blessed fruits and encouragements I meet with wherever I go. Was there ever such a system of infidelity heard of?

Well, glory to Jesus, the more I preach this "infidelity," the more my soul is weaned away from the present state of things and fixed on the coming kingdom and glory of the Son of God. It is spreading, and the people are embracing it. Last Sabbath five more united with us. I have a call from one of the wealthiest, most intelligent and influential men in his section, some forty miles distant, where I expect to be, God willing, the third Sabbath in this month.

Send me a plenty of Brn. Whitmore, Collins, and Sheldon's works, and others of a similar kind. Tell the brethren everywhere, to rise up in the strength of Almighty goodness and love, and do all they can to save a perishing race from perdition; for glory be to God, I believe we are on the margin of universal change.

PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

Evening Talks With My Neighbors.—No. II.

L. Good evening, Doctor. Have you read "Whitmore," that I left with you?

Doctor. I have; and I had a great notion to read it to an old Baptist lady to-day.

L. What do think of it?

D. It is incontroveritble if the Bible is true.

L. You, then, are not out of Doubting Castle yet.

D. How do I or can I know that the Bible is of divine origin?

L. Did you ever see a book written that has "turned the world upside down" as it has? Or any other ever see a book that will cause anger to arise in the infidel's breast, when asked as to its contents? You may on a journey fall in with half a dozen worldly persons, who are having a good social time in conversation. You call their attention by saying that you have just come from Arabia and wish to organize a Mohammedan church here, and would like for them to come and join—every one of the company will commence winking at each other as much as to say—"Now for fun!" And you go on in an eloquent description of the merits of the Mohammedan religion. They will at once put you down as a jolly companion.

Now change. Instead of first asking them what chance for organizing a Mohammedan society, ask them, whether either of them have embraced the Christian religion, and if it is not time for them to take it into consideration? And then go on and pronounce a eulogy upon the Savior. Their faces will show signs of anger, and they will pronounce you a monomaniac, or rude to introduce such a subject—can you tell me Doctor why this change in their feelings?

D. I cannot.

L. I can.

D. Tell us.

L. They know it to be true, and incontrovertible; and that where its golden and heaven-inspired rules are carried into practice, that it makes better men and women.

D. How can I know that it was written by divinely inspired men?

L. Bad men would not write a book condemning themselves and their evil ways. Good men would not write falsehoods and lies, for that would be an imposition. You know that good men would not do wrong; for if they did then they would become bad men. Therefore it is from above.

D. Well, you believe a man sleeps after death.

L. I believe the Bible; and my Bible teaches me that when I die that I am dead.

D. Do not all the different denominations believe this? They speak of people dying and being dead.

L. Yes, and at the same time they say he is gone to heaven, and is now singing there

"Thou minglest now in that bright throng
Around the eternal throne;
And join'st in the everlasting song
With those before thee gone!"

Does that sound as if they believed that a man is dead when he dies?

D. The body of course dies; but the spirit goes upward, according to Solomon.

L. Solomon asks, "Who knoweth?" Do you know? Solomon wished to find out. And if he was now living, orthodoxy could tell him all about what becomes of a man's spirit. So you see he was unfortunate in not living in the nineteenth century.

D. I have always heard that the good went to heaven and were singing praises to God.

L. Did they not leave their tongues in the grave?

D. Yes.

L. Well, then according to the rule laid down by a Disciple author in his work Immaterialism Against Itself (which by the by, is very coarse and vituperative), gives an analysis of the mind, and says: "The mind is properly divisible into ten parts, viz—five external and five internal powers. The external are the five senses: seeing, hearing, feeling, tasting, smelling, and judgment. The five latter are entirely dependent upon the former for support and action."

Now if his tongue is in the grave, how can he sing if the internal are dependent upon the external senses for support and action?

D. True, True! That is Immaterialism against itself, and simple nonsense.

L. Yes, immaterial nonsense, like the infidel who told me yesterday in reply to my assertion that there was nothing impossible with God. "Yes there is" said he. "He cannot make two hills without a valley." Good evening.

D. Good evening. Call again.

The End is Near.

Clouds of darkness gathering o'er us,
Awful tidings with them bear;
Scenes of misery spread before us—
Death, and pestilence, and war;
All in one loud, piercing chorus,
Tell us that the end is near.

Hearts of men within them failing,
For the coming woes they fear;
All their efforts unavailing—
No propitious signs appear;
Sin increasing—crime prevailing,
Tell us that the end is near.

Selfishness in all abounding;
Gold the idol everywhere,
Worshiped by a host, confounding
Gold for all that's good or fair;
Crowds the mammon-god surrounding
Tell us that the end is near.

Formal godliness increasing,
Power denied, and forms held dear;
Christ and fashion coalescing,
Forming now the character;
Rites so popular and pleasing
Tell us that the end is near.

Lawlessness so vastly spreading,
Void of reverence, awe or fear;
Sacred things beneath it treading,
Stamped with God's own signature;
Never once his vengeance dreading,
Tell us that the end is near.

War, the heaviest curse of nations,
Running on its dread career;
While the mass its desolations,
Listless, or applauding hear;
War, with its abominations,
Tell us that the end is near.

Saints of God all evil hating,
Faithful to the name they bear,
For their coming Savior waiting,
To be caught up in the air,
Hence their rest and blessing dating,
Tell us that the end is near.

Sinner, wouldst thou in the glory
Of that "cloudless morning" share?
Wouldst thou have this hope before thee?
Wear the crown saints then will wear?
Oh! believe redemption's story;
Look to Christ! the end is near.

Let not earth, thy thoughts engrossing,
Cheat thee of that portion fair!
Look to Christ! on him reposing,
Thou shalt happy be, nor fear;
Sinner, haste! the day is closing;
Look to Christ! the end is near.

The Duty of the Hour.

To the student of the "sure word of prophecy," the signs of the times indicate that we are living in the closing hours of the present dispensation. During the past few years, events of such startling character have occured as to alarm men of the world. "Signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath," cause savans to "wonder." That some stupendous event is at hand, seems to be generally believed; but as it regards the nature of the event, there is less unity of opinion. Some maintain that we are on the eve of the world's conversion, and the introduction of the so-called temporal Millennium. Others maintain that we are on the eve of the personal coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and the judgment of the great day. And this is "Adventism," so-called.

Now while "the signs of the times" fill our hearts with joy, as we "lift up" our heads, awaiting the day of redemption; and while we proclaim to the world the judgment at hand, may we not well inquire, what is the duty of the hour? When wise men become perplexed, and fail to account for various phenomena upon scientific principles, the remark is sometimes made—"Perhaps the Adventists are about right, after all!" Such remarks turn many eyes of observation upon us as a people; and the inquiries sometimes present themselves to the mind of the observer—"Do the Adventists believe what they profess?" "Do they act as though they believed the judgment at hand?" "Are they Christians?" "Or, are they, as some say, 'Adventists from pure contrariness?' "

Truly, as a people, we are as a "city set upon a hill." Enemies of the cross of Christ turn their eyes upon us with piercing gaze; and every consistency is duly noted, while every misstep is eagerly seized as a weapon to wound the cause of Christ. Sinners sometimes attempt—and it is only an attempt—to justify themselves for not becoming Christians by fortifying themselves, as they suppose, behind the misconduct of some inconsiderate and careless professor. Men sometimes with an air of seeming triumph talk thus: "Mr. A. is a member of the church, and I am just as good as he. If he can be saved in the church, I can be saved out of it; and I do not choose to belong to any church that will have such members as he." But such persons certainly forget that by such talk they virtually declare their intention to go to perdition because bad men sometimes "belong to church," or they would be more considerate. And, to be consistent, they should refuse to belong to the world, because there are bad men in the world!!

But men of the world are not the only ones that watch us. Our conduct is closely scanned by men professing Christianity. And we may rest assured that every inconsistency that they can discover will be used to the detriment of the cause we so much love. Let a misstep be made, and at once they cry, "That is the result of the doctrine!" I have heard such insinuations more than once. Let professed Adventists become a little indifferent to the spread of the truth; and men are ready to say 'they do not believe what they profess' or they would be more zealous to warn the world of impending judgment!

WHAT IS THE DUTY OF THE HOUR?

Oh! the importance of living so that we do not become stumbling blocks, instead of "the light of the world!"

God requires faithfulness upon the part of all his children. Each has a work to perform peculiar to himself,—a work that no one can do for him,—and unless that work is accomplished, he will fail to receive eternal life. Watchfulness is imperatively necessary. Without it, it is impossible to stand. No one can discharge the duties of the Christian without being constantly on his guard. Temptations are in the way that must be resisted and overcome. And there are duties to discharge that must not be neglected. Oh, for zeal in the cause of Christianity!

Personal holiness is indispensable. God accepts nothing short of entire consecration. "Ye can not serve God and Mammon." Hence you need not expect to be saved in a state of careless indifference. Remember that the promise is only to the faithful; and let the love of God stimulate you to watchfulness. Take up your cross daily. Walk in the valley of humility. Trust not in your own strength alone, but look to God in the hour of temptation. Neglect not the house of God. Attend the prayer meeting. Let no trifle keep you away. Be in earnest. Let your light shine; and, while you work out your own salvation, with fear and trembling, manifest an interest in the salvation of others. Let those around you know that you desire their salvation. Talk to them of the goodness of God—of a Savior's love, and invite them to journey with you to the "goodly land." In short, let your 'lives be living epistles, known and read of all men."

Do all you can for the support of a living ministry. Those that preach the word cannot live upon wind alone. Remember that they require food and clothing as well as other folks, and that their families must be maintained, also. Remember, also, that when a minister's family is in needy circumstances, he has upon his mind a load of care that often prevents his preaching the gospel with freedom. Remove this load of care and let him go forth in his work with joy.

Let the young preacher be encouraged. Remember all the old and able preachers were young preachers once; and remember, too, that unless our young ministers are encouraged, if time continues, the veterans must fall asleep in death, and the cause of Adventism must fall with them. Do not try to use the "big guns" to the disparagement of the "little guns." Remember that the "big guns" were once "little guns" themselves; and, if properly used, the "little guns" may in time become "big guns," too.

Do all you can, then, to encourage our young ministry. Gladden their hearts, in their efforts to proclaim the gospel, by your presence, attention and words of cheer, not forgetting to help them after a "godly sort," and send them on their way rejoicing, to proclaim the glad message to others.

But we cannot reach every one with the voice. We have not preachers enough to do this. What then? Set the Press to preaching, and keep it preaching. Scatter the books, tracts and papers like leaves of autumn. Send them far and near. Send them out, and let your prayers go with them. Have you no distant friends whose minds you would like to have enlightened in regard to the great truths we hold so dear? Then send, send them the books and tracts and papers. Do not sit down and whine over their "ignorance," but go to work to enlighten them. Show your faith by your works. Swell the TRACT FUND until it shall be able to supply all reasonable demands for tracts, and other publications; and you will find that the light will spread faster than it does now. We have tracts of sterling merit, that ought to be kept at at work all the time. Besides if the Tract Fund is kept supplied with means, I venture the prediction that new tracts will be written and published, as the times may demand them.

Not only should books and tracts be freely circulated, but THE TIMES and The Crisis should be more widely circulated, also. Let every reader make every possible effort to increase the circulation of these sterling journals by sending copies to distant friends, and by obtaining new subscribers. And if all will work with a will in this direction, who can tell the amount of good that may be accomplished?

Shall the light shine? Is the Master at the door? What is the duty of the hour? GEO. W. GREEN.

Stephen's Request.

I find the opinion prevailing among some that it was Stephen's enemies that uttered the expression—"Lord Jesus receive my spirit," and that they did it to deride Stephen. Nor can I see how it is mended by saying it was Stephen's request that the Lord would take his spirit (pneuma, breath) from him in order to relieve him from his sufferings. As these explanations never appeared satisfactory to my mind, I beg leave to lay before my brethren some thoughts in regard to the question.

We find that Stephen fearlessly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and while he threw his whole energy of body and mind into the work of convincing those about him of a judgment to come, still he combined with that same indomitable courage, the meek and quiet spirit of the dear Savior. He had learned of Jesus to pray for those that despitefully used him, and so he could exclaim, after asking the Lord to bear recognition (or "dexai, sustain") the spirit he bore towards his enemies, "Lord lay not this sin to their charge." He had truly the spirit of Christ; for, we find when our Savior he was crucified, after they had crowned him with thorns, spit upon him, driven cruel nails into his hands and feet, given him vinegar to to drink, heaped upon his devoted head all the sufferings they could invent; almost his last words were—"Father forgive them for they know not what they do."

Was it not this sweet spirit that Jesus showed those around him that won the heart of the dying thief? I think it was; and well might our dying Lord exclaim, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit." Yes, the Father and all the hosts of heaven took recognition of that sweet spirit that amidst all those cruel persecutions and bodily sufferings could pray, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." (Lk. 23: 33–43.)

Yes, Christ fulfilled every right action, satisfied the law of sin and death, and now "there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the spirit of life is Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 1–2.)

It is the same sweet spirit, that our Savior manifested toward his enemies and to those about him, that his believing children need to cultivate; always praying in the Spirit for help from God; then we may say with the Psalmist, "Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth." (Ps. 31: 5.)

Then if we are brought down to death we can exclaim with the good martyr Stephen—"Lord Jesus receive my spirit," for we shall have nourished the fruits of the Spirit, which "are love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." (Gal. 5: 22–23.) Then, truly, is God a God of the living and not of the dead; and if we are called to the cold silent tomb, before Jesus comes, we will live on in the memory of the Lord; for we have learned of him that was meek and lowly in heart. "Whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died, and rose and revived again, that he might be Lord of both dead and the living." (Rom. 14: 8, 9.) "So if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, because of his Spirit (margin) that dwelleth in you." (Rom. 8: 11.)

And now my dear brethren, while we see on every side those to bitterly oppose us in every way, can we not draw lessons of instruction from the spirit Stephen and our Savior exhibited under the most trying circumstances? And so Peter teaches us; for he says: "What glory is it if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if when you do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable to God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his style: who did no sin, neither was guilt found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

A Good Deed.

Br. Himes: As I feel a deep interest in the prosperity of THE TIMES, and that your Publication Society might be freed from debt and placed upon a sure footing, I will mention a circumstance which occurred here recently, hoping it will stir up others to lend a helping hand. If every brother and sister that takes the paper would do as this brother and sister did, your office would soon be freed from debt.

I mentioned to this brother, who is poor in this world's goods (and the past year has been very hard for poor people in this country), that Br. Fassett and wife would come to this coast to labor if the brethren could raise the money to pay their expenses here. He felt the need of more laborers here so much, that he came seven miles on foot to my house to bring $1 to help get him here, and then walked home with his wife and child, making a fourteen miles journey.

This same family since they embraced the truth, have discontinued many things which they formerly used on their table, in order to be able to pay for Advent papers and books, which they consider more to be desired than even some of the comforts of life.

And they are not of those who take the paper for years and neglect to pay, whilst they indulge in tea, coffee, tobacco and other things which are worse than useless. Who will go and do likewise, for the love of the truth? This man will be blest in his deed.

I enclose $2 for the debt on the fice, and hope others will be sti to do what they can. D. D. R

Millennium, Rev. 20 : 4.

By the request of many, I give the reason why I believe Rev. 20: 4–7 is an interpolation. That there would be some addition to, or subtraction from this prophecy, is evident from the words found in ch. 22: 18, 19: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." The same is said of those that take from this book. This is not said of any other prophecy in the Bible; which is conclusive evidence that some one would either "add to" or "take from this book."

There is no portion of this book that has caused so much controversy as the Millennium of the fourth verse of this chapter, which teaches that the righteous are raised at the commencement of this thousand years, and at the end the wicked will be raised, and the devil, their captain, will marshal them and surround the camp of the saints and the beloved city; and then fire will come down and destroy them. The absurdity of such a thing taking place is sufficient cause for rejecting it as a dream of some designing or fanatical man. No such doctrine is taught or even intimated in the prophets or by Christ and the apostles; but the reverse. The passages in the writings of the apostles, are too numerous even to refer to, that contradict such an absurd doctrine, and therefore I leave it for those who desire to compare Scripture with Scripture, that by so doing they may know the truth on this point.

There are those who would like to know what history says on this subject, and what are the opinions of the learned and critics respecting this Millennium controversy which has agitated the church for 1800 years. The controversy on this point so agitated the church in 1652 that the church of England added to their creed (41 articles) as follows: "They who seek to restore the millennary fable oppose the holy Scriptures and plunge into Jewish fanaticism."

It is generally agreed by historians that this addition to this book was made by Cerinthus, who was cotemporary with John, who declared that he was the enemy of truth. John entered the bath and discovered that Cerinthus was within, said, "Let us flee lest the bath should fall upon us while this enemy of truth is within." In another instance he calls him the "first born of Satan." Gregory, in his church history, says, "Cerinthus was a Jew by birth, and was one of the earliest and most distinguished seceders from the Christian church. His heresy was that Christ descended to earth and entered the body of Jesus, which was crucified; but that Christ had not suffered, but ascended into heaven. He also taught that, after the resurrection, Christ would reign upon the earth with his disciples a thousand years, which would be spent in sensual indulgence. This mixture of Judaism and Oriental philosophy was well calculated to make many converts." Eusebius, in his history, says, "Cerinthus, by means of revelations, which he pretended were written by a great apostle and also pretended to wonderful things, as if they were shown to him by angels, asserting that after the resurrection there would be an earthly kingdom of Christ, and that men again would inhabit Jerusalem, and would be subject to desires and pleasures for one thousand years." Dionysius says, "It is highly probable that Cerinthus, the same that established the heresy that bears his name, designedly affixed the name of John to his own forgery."

This apostate from the Christian church succeeded in making disciples to his heresy among Christians; even Barsabas, upon whom lots were cast (Acts 1), Eusebius says, "taught there would be a certain Millennium after the resurrection, and that there would be a corporeal reign of Christ on this very earth; which things he appeared to have imagined; yet he was the cause why most of the ecclesiastical writers (urging the antiquity of the man) were carried away by a similar opinion; as for instance, Irenæus or any others that adopted such sentiments." Theodoret says of Cerinthus, "He taught that the kingdom of Christ is terrestrial, or that he would reign on this earth; for he dreamed of eating and drinking, and marriage and sacrifices, and festivals to be accomplished at Jerusalem, and to last a thousand years; for, so long, he thought the kingdom of the Lord would endure." (Lardner's Credibility.)

It is generally supposed to be of Jewish origin; but was introduced into the Christian church as a doctrine by Papias, bishop of Hierapolis, in Phrygia. Prideaux, in speaking of the time when the Sibylline books or prophecies had their origin, to show that they could not have been written prior to the era A. D., as most writers contended, remarks, "Besides the compiler of these prophetic books speaks of Christ reigning here upon earth according to the notion of the Millennarians, which plainly prove them to have been written after the origin of that heresy, which could not have been till after Christ's time, neither had it till the second century, when it was introduced by Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia." (Vol. 4, p. 334.)

Here we perceive that Prideaux calls the Millennium doctrine a "heresy." He fully agrees with most writers on this point, that the definite time of the thousand years was fixed by an unwarranted deduction in reference to God's making the world in six days and resting the seventh; and that this world would continue six thousand years and the seventh would be the day of rest. (See Burnet's Sacred Theory, part 3, ch. 5.) Mosheim says, the doctrine had a Jewish origin; and he supposed the Christian doctors received, or, at least, tolerated it because they hoped by it to make the Jews more willing to embrace Christianity.

Dr. Walch says, "that the doctrine is of Jewish origin, and was derived from Jewish opinions." Lightfoot on Rev. 20 says, "The thousand years is of Jewish origin, and that the Jews applied it to the days of the Messias, which they understood to be a thousand years, and as proof they quoted the Babylon Talmud, which says, among other things, "It is a tradition of the house of Elijah that the righteous ones that he blessed, God shall raise from the dead; they shall no more return to their dust; but those thousand years that the blessed God is to renew the world, he will give them wings as eagles, and they shall flee upon the waters. The text indeed hath not the word thousand; but the marginal gloss hath it, and shows how to understand the thousand years. The Jewish writer, R. Eliezer, gives the days of the Messias a thousand years. Now the Jews according to their allegorical view applied these days of Christ thus: that first there should be a resurrection, caused by Messiah, of righteous ones; then he is to conquer Gog and Magog, and then must come the BRAVE world to come that they dreamed of. It is absolute Judaism which they held to be a thousand years of earthly bravery and pompousness." (Vol. 3.)

It seems useless to quote further on this subject. I could fill a volume with similar evidence from the most critical writers on this point, whose learning is world-renowned. When we turn to Encyclopedias, on this subject, there is an agreement on this point. I will quote a few on this point under the word "Millennium." "Millennium; a thousand years, generally employed to denote the thousand years during which, according to an ancient tradition in the church, grounded on some doubtful text in the Apocalypse." (Brown's Encyclopedia; Buck's Theological Dictionary.) "Millennium is grounded upon a doubtful text in the Apocalypse." (World's Progress.) Henry Dana Ward, after examining the Scriptures, and the origin of the Millennium, comes to the conclusion that the Millennium had but one end, and that was its commencement, which began after the righteous and wicked had been judged at Christ's appearing and kingdom. He says, "No eye can see beyond that kingdom however far-sighted it may be; and my own eye discovers no object this side of that kingdom which is not in the valley of the shadow and under the curse of death. It will be an everlasting kingdom whose sun shall no more go down, to which God shall be an everlasting light existing forever, even for ever and ever."

We see from these few questions that the doctrine of the thousand years is of Jewish origin, and first promulgated by a backslidden Jew from Christianity, whom John recognized as an "enemy of all truth," and the "first born of Satan;" who, by false pretensions, managed to have it introduced into the Christian church, and was tolerated in the church in hopes that it would be the door through which the Jews might be induced to enter. God's plan is the best, after all. Therefore, I say, let the Millennium begin and never end. Amen.

Notes of Travel.

I recently spent a few days among old friends in Macon Co., Ill. Here I spent two years in the ministry while I was a believer in the popular theology of the day. I attended the weekly prayer-meeting of the "Winebrennarian Society." Having heard by a friend that that society at its late meeting in Warren Co. had very kindly expelled me from the church of God, and decided to treat me as a "publican and sinner," it was a matter of considerable curiosity in my mind to know how the brethren among whom I used to labor would receive me and treat me at their prayer-meeting. Strange to say, I never had a more cordial and hearty reception in my life than I received from Br. Procter, the local elder of the church. He kindly invited me to take charge of the meeting, which I did with the greatest of pleasure. We enjoyed a pleasant and sweet gospel interview together. I was told afterward, if the pastor had been present I would have been excluded from any part in the meeting. No doubt it is so. But the laity are not quite so "hide bound" in their religion, to speak in common parlance.

Query: Why did not the Winebrennarians expel me one year ago when my case was up for trial? Why did they simply suspend me at that time, and one year afterwards magnanimously (?) expel me? What was the charge upon which I was expelled; was it the same or a different one from that upon which I was suspended? If the same one, why was I not expelled in the first place; if a different one, pray tell us what it can be? Marvelous as it may appear in the face of my late expulsion, yet it is a fact that not two months before it occurred I was very kindly invited by leading men in that denomination to return to my old place in its ministry with the offer of one of its best appointments. But when it was found out for a dead certainty that I was an Adventist, and had fully decided never to return to the mysticism of immaterialism, "the powers that be" very courteously expelled me. Thank you, brethren. I've no complaint to make of your treatment. May the Lord bless you in all of your work so far as it is in harmony with his will. I am an Adventist, and had been preaching in the Advent Conference of N. Illinois for six months before I was expelled by the Winebrennarians. Before I joined the Adventists I sent to the Winebrennarians a formal withdrawal of my membership. Why it was not recognized, I cannot tell, unless it was that the leaders desired to have the privilege of cutting me off from their fellowship by the vindictive and retributive application of the sharp lash of ecclesiastical excision. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Mat. 25: 40.)

The Skeels' neighborhood, Piatt Co. According to our appointment we reached this place and commenced the meeting Saturday, Oct. 28. This is a beautiful and fertile country. Six of the Skeels brothers located here in the same community, and are all "dyed-in-the-wool" Adventists. They have never had any Advent preaching here, and to many of the people the doctrine is entirely new.

We had an excellent meeting. The interest on the part of the people to hear was intense. Many questions were asked at the close of each meeting. Some were prompted by an honest desire to learn, others of course now asked simply to bring the cause we defend into contempt. The interest of Wednesday eve. is worthy of note. After preaching somewhat lengthily upon the "Immortal Soul," the opportunity for inquiry was most greedily accepted by about half a dozen intelligent questioners. Some of their strongest proof-texts to disprove the mortality of man were produced, such as the Rich man, Thief, spirit of the prophet, &c. And for over an hour after regular service, the crowded audience was held in silence, and the interest continued to increase until it became very intense, while by the Lord's help I answered the numerous objections presented, and showed the perfect harmony of these texts when not wrested from their natural sense with our view of man's unit nature.

Tuesday eve., in the midst of the drenching rain, we gathered at a private house and organized an "Advent Christian Church," of six male members. At the close of the meeting Thursday eve. four new ones made application for membership, and were received, making in all ten members. Several requested baptism, which would have been attended to if the meeting had continued over the Sabbath. We expect to attend to it at my next appointment, Dec. 10. There is a ripe field all through this country for the proclamation of the present truth, and we hope by the help of the Lord to improve it. Br. W. L. Skeels, the elder of the newly-organized church, has decided to devote himself as much as possible to the ministry. He has preached some, and has been cordially received by the people, and has been invited not only to continue his labors where commenced, but to extend them into the "regions beyond." This is a good indication. If God calls a man to preach, the people will desire to hear him preach. Br. Skeels is in full sympathy with us, and has applied through me to the Board of our Conference for a preacher's certificate. May the Lord bless him and give him success in winning precious souls to Christ, is my prayer. Amen.

The church made immediate application to the Conference to be received. We have no faith in the "own hook policy." We believe in uniting all the scattered forces possible. In union there is strength. May the Lord bless the truth and all who proclaim it, and save perishing sinners. Amen.

I would not neglect to say that the little church at Mansfield helped me after a godly sort, by bearing my expenses, and giving me a respectable donation besides. The liberal soul shall grow fat.

Which Do We Speak To?

A few days ago I was accosted by an elder of orthodox faith saying that he wished to ask me a question, and he asked what my mind was concerning it. To which I replied, I would endeavor to answer, if it were a proper question, and in accordance with the Bible. He, claiming it was, proceeded thus: "If you should chance to meet a man on the street and should speak to him, who would you be speaking to, the man or his spirit?

My reply was that I should speak to all that composed the man—body, soul and spirit. Would not that be correct? He thought not—he considered he would be speaking to his spirit, that which God breathed into man which is the immortal part of God himself.

Then my immortal spirit would speak to his immortal spirit would it not?

"Yes" was the reply.

When did man become immortal?

"When he (God) breathed into man."

What did God breathe into man?

"He breathed the spirit into him, etc."

What is the spirit; will you please tell?

"Why it is the breath of life; the thinking, active part that lives to all eternity."

What becomes of it when man dies?

"It goes to God, and"——

Well what do you do with the Scripture that says "the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything?"

"Oh! that means the body!"

But it says "the memory of them is forgotten; their love, hatred, envy, is now perished," etc.

No answer.

Again David says, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish;" and you say that the breath of life is the thinking, active part, that lives to all eternity, and is the spirit you speak to, in whoever you chance to meet.

"I cannot comprehend what David means, therefore I leave all such things with the Lord, for we read elsewhere, "great is the mystery of godliness."

But we are commanded to "search the Scriptures,"—to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth; for by obtaining a knowledge of God's word we are set at liberty, and our understandings will be enlightened.

It is strange we cannot all read the good Book and comprehend it alike. It must be from the want of care when we read, or else it is because of our early teachings that serve as a veil before our eyes, to darken and becloud our understanding. Oh! for greater care when we read the blessed word of God, that will enable us to know what is written.

ere but four buildings n the clearing—the mill, the general boardig house, a store, and the barn. Economy nd convenience, curious to say, had dictated e selection of this remote spot. The imber luxuriantly covered the place, and was of unequaled quality; a lazy little ream meandering through the gnarled roots [illegible] soil [illegible] a supply of water, enough th artesian wells to drive the mill machinery was cheaper to work the great logs into arketable shape here, where they were ght at hand, than establish the mills on the ke or bay and drag the immense timber over iles of wretched roads. The fiery experice of the west shore—of the whole North n Wisconsin, had been experience of this od-immersed hamlet. For weeks incessant, urious battle had been waged night and , reliefs of men, and even women taking ns in the exhausting contest. It was hophat all danger had been warded off when ide belt, fully a mile deep, had burned ward from the clearing. The serenity of red safety had come upon the people n this black circumvallation was com- —the very night before the calamity. at fatal Sunday morning the mill operasuspended, and the men who had homes neighboring towns of Big and Little on made an early start through the When night came, some kindly lence detained them, and the massacre touch less. The night came on tranthe humid air gave grateful promise of rain, and the last lingering distrust nished from the timidest inhabitant. n the night most of the little populathe hamlet were in-doors or in bed. still early when those casually astir saw a g[illegible]owing light shoot t the southw[illegible]y, and, spreading west and no[illegible]rd, continue with g brilliancy. Presently a slender of fire shot forward, and, caught by a ind, came plowing through the solid toward the mill. By this time the and all had rushed from the barrack ld, clamoring consternation. e brothers, Williamsons, owned the d had in the little colony mother, sisters, wives, and children. Hastily ng the women to care for themselves, others set about saving the property if le. But before the hose could be nt to bear, the saving of life alone be the stake in the dreadful encounter. others as proprietors, seen for a time e been full calm, brave discretion, and the full realization of the sudden danger e first rush of the tornado, attempted tic plans of preservation. The wowere directed, as far as possible, to put en's clothes throughout, as offering less e for the fire to catch. So far as known, woman heeded the advice. Had they so, their lives might not have been ced on that ignoble pyre. Even if life t been spared, the most revolting sights assacre would have been spared the heart-broken survivors. This was the last shred of coherent conduct among the frightened people. Swift whirling columns of flame had out through the intervening timber, and fell voraciously on the light frame buildings. The whirlwind lashing the trees into fragments caught the fire in roaring surges, and flung it about in billowy waves among the tree-tops. Slender tongues of fire falling from above played in malevolent currents across the clearing. A desperation of terror filled men, women and children—a terror as natural as fatal, for, had common fortitude led the group, not a soul need have perished. With one impulse the frantic mass, battling and crowding, rushed to the potato patch. Here a rising ground was crowned by a shallow pit, not six feet around, and hardly, at the deepest part, two feet below the surface of the ground. Men now living, who came almost unscathed through that night of doom, tell how before the evil time, when the fires were raging about, this spot had been fixed on as a place of safety, because, almost in the center of the clearing, with no inflammable matter near, it seemed to promise a breathing, in case of general conflagration. There had been constant jocosities and banter about this "center of salvation," and some one actually attempting to enlarge the cavity had been driven off by good natured ridicule. Even as late as Saturday it had been used as a place of refuge notwithstanding, and when the actual danger came, the credulous mass remembered the delusive pit. If that fatal had not been, if the whimsical belief had not obtained a firm hold, there is not the slightest doubt but the forty seven that perished would have escaped in neighboring woods. Into that cramped place, crowding, buffeting, begging, cursing, imploring, praying, shrieking, men, children, and women elbowed and fought in the frenzy of a hideous desperation and terror. Not large enough to admit a dozen by the closest packing, nearly fifty wrestled and crowded in and about the fatal spot. With ostrich instinct, in the abjectness of their unreasoning fear, men plowed their burning heads under the living pyre. An inextricable pyramid of bodies, in all sorts of conceivable postures, stood in the flame-swept place.

There were a few in this awful time that preserved an amazing equanimity. The engineer of the mill, Byron Merrill, a young fellow of marked character and intelligence, battled resolutely till the last chance to save his employers' property, and only when the futility of the effort and the danger to life became obvious, was his self-imposed duty resigned. A bit of romance tinges the glaring picture. His sweetheart was the relative of the mill-owners, Miss Maggie Williamson, a girl, it is said, of rare beauty and attraction. The young fellow, bright and cultured beyond his kind, regarded with favor and affection for many a mile around, had won her heart, and the two were to have been married. The girl with her kindred had fled to the potato patch, and here, suffocating with smoke, their garments in flames, and writhing in awful agony, the young fellow found the chief part of the people. He tried to scatter the infatuated group; with his hat pressed closely over his mouth and nostrils, he directed the group to break and take shelter in the edge of the timber. Hopeless! The roar of the hurricane, even the blood-curdling shrieks of the sufferers drowned his voice. He tried by main force to tear the hideous mass asunder, but the strength of a giant could not have broken the maddened clutch of the wretched sufferers. The group was immovably fixed to the fatal spot, and rose from burning sand a fiery Laocoon struggling with the coiling flames. Merrill, hastily fetching wetted blankets, threw them over the nearest sufferers, meantime shouting to them to break for the timber, not twenty steps away. Useless. With the skin hanging in shreds upon his hands and forehead, he carried water and poured it on the infatuated group, while the ignoble crowding went on madly among the swiftly roasting crowd. The tumultuous struggle had been from the first a loathsome, unreasoning fear; a moment's coolness, a moment's cessation of the frightful effort to wedge downward, would have given life to all. The time came, however, when the faithful Merrill, stripped almost of clothing and burned beyond recognition, had to give up the heroic effort, and plunging through the darting flame, dashed his burning body in the well. Earlier in the catastrophe a half a dozen heavy sleepers had found tardiness their salvation from the potato patch, and they darted into the timber belt, which had been carefully burned out long before to keep the fire from the houses. Here, prone on the ground, they protected themselves while the mad crowd not ten yards away roasted in their blindness. The falling trees could be guarded against, but nothing could save from the encompassing fire in the clearings. One came, too, whose frail chance of life the meanest creature, struggling in that pit, would not have refused, an old tottering, half blind, trembling woman, mother to the owners of the mill. She must have been forgotten in the first rush, for when she came toward the potato patch it was filled with a swarming crowd thrown prone upon their faces in the shallow depths of the potato pit. Seven of her kindred writhed in that hideous knot. Passing on with decrepit step, the venerable mother, whose eighty-four years had not worn out coolness and discretion, came upon a great bowlder near the edge of the timber. Climbing on this, although half suffocated, she covered her head with her skirts, and, with clothes carefully tucked up from the running flames, kept for hours on the back of this unique salamander. The only son that came out of the fire with his life, it is said, did not forget his duty, and aided his mother to this forlorn refuge. Be that as it may, with a thick blanket well wetted, over her body and her skirts out of reach of the hot incendiary sand, the brave old lady perched on that rock through the long night of agony, every shriek of her roasting kindred splitting her ears, and their burning bodies almost within reach of her helpless arms. Twice through the night she received succor, once from her son, who came up and wetted her covering, and once from the barn-master, Bush, who also bathed her head and gave her cool water to drink. Through the whole unspeakable tragedy of piteous cowardice ran this vein of simple fortitude and heroic endurance.

apply it to the subject before us,—"The Gospel in the Light of Human Nature,"—reverently accepting the testimony of heaven, both in relation to man and the gospel. Indeed we must do this, or we are utterly helpless; in the pathless desert without a guide, or on the dark ocean without compass, chart, or rudder; for no definition of man outside the Bible is reliable, and no description of the gospel equals in pathos, sublimity, and grandeur its account of itself. The "Man" of philosophy, metaphysics, idealism, or poetry may be profound, brilliant, and many-virtued; and we like to see all that can be truthfully said or sung about the human intellect in its vast and varied powers; but it is perfectly certain that, if we are to understand the gospel in its relation to man, we we must receive our ideas of him from it. The prepared remedy can only be intelligible in the presence of the necessity it is intended to meet; and in this case it is matter of profound thankfulness that he who knows all things has revealed both what man is by nature, and what he may become by grace.

That he is not by nature all that philosophy, poetry, and modern theology say, is very certain when you allow the Bible that authority to which it is exclusively entitled; and yet, remarkably enough, whilst the Bible denies to man the possession of certain qualities with which human teachers invest him, it freely offers him a far greater honor than was ever thought of by the most extravagant worshipper of the might and majesty of imperial manhood. This kind of hero-worship has exalted humanity to a position totally inconsistent both with the limits of creature-hood and the declarations of Scripture; but, upon the other hand, Scripture has announced a divine purpose which as far exceds in wonder and glory the claim in question as that exceeds the capability of mere natural humanity. Man, according to our human teachers, is naturally immortal, that is to say, a being that cannot possibly die, whatever the depth of his moral debasement, or the intensity of his sufferings in a future world of wo; the power of thinking for himself, if he can calmly contemplate the possibility of all this as true? With men who cannot or will not think for themselves, under the healthy consciousness of responsibility to the great Author of mind, I have nothing to do. An appeal to them on this, or indeed any other question worthy of a moment's thought, is simply out of the question. My appeal is exclusively to Christian thinkers, to men whose moral nature has been cultured within sight of the cross, and whose mental powers have been expanded in the light of the Redeemer's peerless character. It is vain to tell me that faith bandages the eye of reason, and makes investigation into the revealed will of God a sin. I protest against the priestly dogma, for I see through it, and rejoice that God is Light, that Christ is the Sun of Righteousness, that the illuminating Spirit is promised to them that ask, and that I am commanded to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." The deeper our reverence for God, the less will we care for any so-called authority that presumes to dictate articles of faith. The more we venerate pure revelation, the farther will we keep from unsupported tradition. If our love of truth be a holy passion, we will never rest satisfied until she is enthroned in the heart, and made the guide of faith and conduct.

But we have only stated part of the case—according to common theology—in relation to the lost. It were surely dreadful enough if immortality in guilt threw its dark shadow over the majority of the human race. This by itself gives us the distressing thought that God's master-piece in creation is a lamentable failure; that sin has triumphed prodigiously over all that law, and warning, and counsel, and grace, and compassion, and pity, and love have done; that God has been unable to root the accursed plant of sin out of his universe, or to crush the impious forces of rebellion that have defied his authority and defiled and marred the glorious work of his hands; and that the arch-enemy, the impersonation of all that is vile, and hateful, and false, has won the battle in spite of mnipotence, and will be able for ever auntingly to say that the victims of is malignity greatly outnumber the andful rescued from sin by all the ppliances of redeeming love! As if ll this were not enough to cast an wful cloud over existence, and make nen groan that ever they were born, re are further assured by the repreentatives of what is known as "orhodoxy," that God—the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—will e eternally employed in tormenting hese millions with every kind of exruciating agony in the fierce fires of ell! To enter into details on this nost tremendous subject is not my bject. You all know what dreadful hings are said in pulpits and books bout it; how every imaginable picure of torment, horror, and agony is ntroduced to highten the hideous efect; and how every epithet suggestive f duration is selected to assure us hat all this will be for ever and ever—the majority of God's human creatres weltering, and groaning, and hricking, and blaspheming under untterable torments as long as God imself exists!

That is the doctrine—the child and ompanion and logical sequence of the octrine of immortality out of Christ! ar too long has this amazing libel on e character of God poisoned the eology of Christendom; far too long as this infinitely black lie darkened e teachings of the pulpit; let us do OMETHING to drive it from the sanctury, from the press, from the world! will be no easy task to shake this ander on the divine government out f its strongholds. Priestcraft will ght to the last ere it surrender so otent a weapon of terror over conience; and even men who denounce riestcraft will be slow to admit the ct that they have hitherto been teachg a thing which the Bible declares ntrue, which the nature of man makes bsurd, which the character of God nders impossible, and which the rand gospel doctrine of immortality nly in Christ should remove at once nd for ever from every Christian ind.

As the last of these positions—immortality only in Christ—covers the whole field of argument, by embracing in itself the most conclusive proof, I respectfully submit it to your thoughtful consideration. If I fail to establish all that I have said, I pray you to lay the failure on me, and not on the doctrine; for I am morally, mentally, logically, and religiously CERTAIN that no human being that ever trod this earth will live for ever except he be a partaker of the divine nature by union with the divine Redeemer. On this I stake everything in this momentous controversy, which is destined to shake all the churches in the world, and to effect a doctrinal reformation equal in all respects, and greater in some, than that of the sixteenth century. May the Lord God of truth direct us!

What, then, is the gospel? and what do its announcements imply concerning the nature and condition of man? I ask not what say the creeds of Christendom about the gospel and man, for these, though containing much that is true and valuable, and which therefore we cannot possibly surrender, are merely human compositions, the expression of the belief of the compilers as they understood Scripture; but what say "holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost?" I cordially adopt the sixth article of the Church of England: "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought necessary or requisite to salvation." This is precisely the ground upon which I stand, and in vindication of this position I am prepared for all consequences.

For many ages the great fountain has been pouring out its treasures, and as we ascend the river we meet with disturbing and discoloring side rills from the mountains of tradition, scholasticism, and philosophy, which, as they have mingled with the holy stream, are supposed to be from the same source as itself; but when we reach the divine spring, its exquisite clearness delights the eye; we see the golden sands over which it flows, and we hear a gracious herald voice calling to the wayfarers, "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear and your soul shall live: and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David." What does this mean, but that durable life is the gift of God? What does it imply, but that death is the certain and inevitable lot of all who will not hear? There is no sustaining power, no life-giving virtue in the bread and the water that natural men covet; but those who hear the Savior get from him the water that springs up into everlasting life, and the bread of which if a man eat he shall never perish; implying, again, that without this water everlasting life cannot be possessed, and without this bread men must perish. What is meant by the phrase "the sure mercies of David" we are not left to conjecture. Paul is our trustworthy commentator. "We declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore he saith also, in another Psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption; but he whom God has raised again saw no corruption." Now what has this to do with our su[illegible]ply everything. Listen! [illegible] unto you therefore, men [illegible] that through this man is pr[illegible] you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." But death is the wages of sin, the penalty which the Lawgiver has attached to it—not agony, not torment, far less an eternal continuance of both, which would not be death at all, but life in misery: if therefore sins are forgiven through the risen Savior, the penalty is removed, so as to secure the resurrection to life; hence Christ's words, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he die, yet shall he live; and every one that liveth and believeth in me shall not die for ever," like the despiser of Christ, who is to wonder and perish. Moreover, justification is a step in that wonderful process which ends in glorification; and if believers are justified in Christ, it follows that the eternal life he came to bestow is theirs: whilst it is again implied respecting men not thus forgiven and justified, that they are still under the law which condemns the sinner to death. And above all, the resurrection of Christ, which is the central point of the apostle's argument, is at once the cause and pledge of the believer's resurrection to eternal life. It is through the risen Redeemer, who saw no corruption, that Paul preached forgiveness, justification, life, and incorruptibility. Let these priceless blessings be examined under the recollection that man is guilty, mortal, and corruptible, and they acquire a meaning and a force of transcendent value. If you say that the gospel is a system of sublime ethics, marvellous for purity and power; that Christ came to teach as never man taught; and that all who are spiritually under the influence of his doctrines are living witnesses that God has spoken by his Son; you speak truth, but it is far enough from being the whole truth. We must go much deeper than this if we would grasp the divine fact on which the entire system turns. It is not reformation, under the influence of pure teaching, but regeneration by the power of the Holy Ghost; not a change of conduct, through the force of truth, but literally a "NEW CREATION" in Christ Jesus. The reformation necessarily follows the regeneration as its external and visible fruit, just as the rich cluster in its season proves that there is healthy sap in the vine. The change of conduct is obvious, but it is because the man has been created in Christ Jesus unto good works to show forth the praises of him who called him out of darkness into his marvellous light. The indirect influence of the gospel, its reflected action upon individuals and society, has been inconceivably great. The amount of good it has thus achieved has been enormous. Its ameliorating spirit upon manners, customs, and legislation; its lessons of kindness, benevolence, charity; its continuous protest against injustice, fraud, cruelty, vengeance, slavery, tyranny; and the numberless gentle associations it has thrown around our English word "home," are so well known, that a mere reference to them is all that is necessary. But all this, useful and beneficial as it is, falls immeasurably below the direct and avowed object of the gospel. Its collateral benefits are very great; but its chief blessing, the boon it bears upon its heart from the very heart of God, is immensely greater. What is it? ETERNAL LIFE! How easily one pronounces these words! But their extent of meaning lies beyond our present capacity.

Now remember what man is by nature, and ask whether you have thought sufficiently of the grandeur and glory of the Redeemer's mission and work. The human race is mortal. Not once in the whole Bible is immortality affirmed of man as such. "The immortality of the soul" is a phrase of constant occurrence among philosophers, poets, and divines; but it is unknown to the long list of illustrious men from Moses, the great historian and legislator, to John, the venerable apostle and Apocalyptic seer. Statesmen, philosophers, poets, prophets, kings, orators, shepherds, farmers, artisans, fishermen, all wrote in this wonderful book; but not one of them ever hints that the soul is immortal. And yet they are constantly speaking about men. From Genesis to Revelation, individuals, families, tribes, kingdoms, empires pass before us. Marriages, births, and deaths innumerable are recorded; life and death are words which meet us at every turn; the music of the marriage feast, the joy when a man is born into the world, the wailing of the mourners when bereavement darkens the dwelling, are all sketched by these wonderful writers who under[illegible]ood human nature so thoroughly, and [illegible] not a word about inherent immortality. It is strange! If every man really has a soul that is to live for ever, it is perfectly amazing that a fact of such profound significance should have been passed over in silence. In silence, said we? Nay, that is not a fair account of the matter. Every where and uniformly the creature whose immortality is the boast and glory of song and sermon is spoken of by these writers as short-lived, feeble, mortal. The modern divine insists that man is immortal because God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul;" but an ancient divine, Isaiah by name, selects this very fact as a proof of his frailty and mortality. "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" David, too, no mean theologian, says, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth," —an evident allusion to "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return," —"in that very day his thoughts perish." Certainly it would be lawless logic that should affirm immortality of a creature whose thoughts had "perished." But now let us return to the gospel by way of contrast to these hints.

Paul, writing to Titus, tells him to teach his hearers the duty of loyalty to earthly government, and of gentleness towards all men. He then adds, stepping from civil to the moral, from the moral to the spiritual, and from the spiritual to the eternal: "For we ourselves also were once foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another. But when the kindness and love of God our Savior toward men appeared,"—literally, when the philanthropy of our Savior God shone forth—"not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior; that being justified by his grace, we should be made," or become, "heirs according to the hope of eternal life." Here the hope of eternal life is only for the "heirs," and they are heirs of this wonderful inheritance as the result of regeneration and justification; that is to say, the human being as such, the natural man, cannot live for ever; this special, splendid, godlike privilege is confined to those who have passed from death unto life by the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit, through Jesus Christ our Savior; and this distinguishing honor is not by human merit or works of righteousness, but of pure grace, of the divine philanthropy shining through the darkness of human demerit and mortality. This hope of eternal life through him who was "delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification," is the peculiar and distinguishing glory of the gospel. The very thought of any man living for ever, whether in the disembodied state, or after the resurrection, in soul and body, apart from the Lord Jesus, never entered the mind of any of the inspired writers.

They had to meet errors and heresies innumerable; but this would have been to them the most monstrous heresy of all; for Christ was to their loving faith not only the Mediator of the new covenant and the Messiah promised to the fathers of the nation: but the second Adam, the Life-giver, the Eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested in the fullness of time.

In harmony with this is the Lord's account of his mission. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me," said he, "and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out. For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will who hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day.... Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlasting life. I am the bread of life. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die. I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." In all this it is most unquestionably implied that immortality is no possession of men by nature; and that not to eat of this living bread is to perish. Again: "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, and none shall pluck them out of my hand." Can words make doctrine clearer? They, my sheep, my followers, believers in me, shall never perish, but all others shall; for the "wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." This vivid contrast between the future of believers and non-believers is assured, implied, or expressed throughout the Scriptures. Christ came that believers in him should not perish, but have everlasting life; to perish, die, cease to be, is thus broadly assumed as the unquestionable destiny of all merely natural men. The mortality of the race is never questioned or doubted; immortality only in Christ is ever affirmed as the grand doctrine of "the gospel of the grace of God." This is the record or witness that God hath borne concerning his Son, that God hath given to us eternal life, something which none of us had before, and this life is in his Son. It follows, therefore, that he that hath the Son hath the life; that is to say, the eternal life in question; and he that hath not the Son hath not the life. And it will be remembered that the wonderful prayer in which the great Intercessor speaks words of infinite love begins thus: "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." The full import of these words it is not for us to grasp at present, but that the great gift they speak of is confined to those who are Christ's is perfectly clear. In a word, mortality and immortality, —otherwise the wages of sin and the gift of God,—are the contrasts which give the Christian revelation its profound meaning, and make the incarnation, death, and the resurrection of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, such a marvellous illustration of the wisdom and love of our heavenly Father.

But the truth of life in Christ is not denied by our brethren from whom we have been obliged to part company on the great question of the future of the unsaved. They say: 'Yes there is eternal life in Christ, and in Christ only; but by that we mean an eternal life of happiness and glory; whilst the ungodly endure a life of misery and shame. The former are forever happy, the latter forever miserable, so miserable that the agony of remorse and torment is altogether indescribable. We hold that the woes of hell last as long as the joys of heaven; for both are literally without end.' To this, which will be accepted as a fair representation of the orthodox view, my reply is threefold, embracing doctrinal fact, creature capacity, and the character of God.

1. As a matter of fact, the orthodox view is not revealed in Scripture; it is no part of revelation; it is not in the record. We meet it with a firm and emphatic denial. If it be true, it is certainly not a truth of God's word; its truth must have been gathered from a source never recognized as authoritative by prophets and apostles; and which we, therefore, as grateful believers in prophetic and apostolic revelation, refuse to accept as authority. To inspiration we bow simplicitly, with a reverence as great as can characterise any Christian in Christendom; but for this very reason we will not receive as an article of Christian faith a doctrine unknown to the Christian Scriptures. We must take the liberty of testing this weighty matter for ourselves. To Church authority, tradition, and current theology we are obliged to say, though with all courtesy, Stand aside for a short time, if you please, until we take this tremendous question into the sunlight of God's word. It is too awful to be accepted as a part of our belief, except on absolutely overwhelming, inspired evidence. Well, what do we find in the book to which we thus avow unfeigned loyalty? Eternal life always implying blessedness, honor, glory; but endless existence in sin and misery never! There is great variety in the mode by which God's judgments overtake the wicked, but their end is always death, destruction, perdition. The judgment of the old world was by water. The rebels living on the earth when Christ comes will, like the sinners of Sodom, be destroyed by fire, everlasting, unquenchable fire, so that they must in the very nature of the case be destroyed; and this is the word which Paul uses when referring to this very time and these impious enemies of the Lord. He says, "They shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints."

2. Creature capacity makes eternal existence in pain impossible. We have seen that man is naturally a mortal creature, that the wages of sin is death, and that immortality is a grand supernatural gift bestowed only on those who are one with Christ. If it be true that all who are out of Christ must die, it is an outrage upon the meaning of language to say that their death means everlasting existence in torment. Besides, pain itself can be suffered only by mortal creatures: the possibility of physical pain is the proof of mortality, the herald of death. I say physical pain, for the judgment scenes of Scripture have to do with men, properly so-called, men in the flesh, not with what are called "disembodied souls"—a fact which of itself should settle the question. The action of fire upon bodies is too well known to need description, and the idea of human beings living in fire which shall not be put out could never have found a place in theology had it kept clear of the horrible legends of paganism, and the dismal traditions of the dark ages.

3. The Character of God makes eternal suffering on the part of any of the human race utterly inconceivable. He would not, could not decree any such fearfully appalling penalty as this. He has announced the dessert of sin—it is DEATH. There may be great variety in its forms and circumstances, but the penalty is DEATH. Transgressors, sinners, unbelievers are to be destroyed, consumed, blotted out of being; that is the righteous sentence of the Holy One. We recognize its equity, we bow to its wisdom, we see in it not only beneficence to the great loyal universe that is to be when the mighty undertaking of the Son of God shall have been accomplished; but deep in mercy to the sinners themselves. Yes, I repeat that; justice exacts the life of the transgressor, and there is mercy at the heart of justice in this very matter. The man was offered pardon, peace, justification, purity, immortality in Christ, without money and without merit; he would not accept the offer. Love sought him, followed him, entreated him to become an heir of God and a fellow heir with Christ, that he might enjoy the magnificent glories of the Father's universe; but he scorned her entreaties and turned to his corruptions with renewed zest. So the word goes forth, "Let him utterly perish in his own corruption!" It is a punishment, an everlasting punishment, for that man shall never see the ever-unfolding and ever-growing wonders and glories that God has prepared for his royal family. He shall have no part in the magnificent issue to which infinite wisdom is with majestic slowness conducting the affairs of the universal empire. He has no moral taste for the pure, the noble, the sublime, the holy. He does not appreciate Christ, he does not desire the Holy Spirit, he sees no overwhelming grandeur in the outstreaming of the Father's philanthropy. What is to be done with him? He is in the way of the loyal and holy, for they wish all men to be devout; he is in God's way, for he intends to purify the creation from every moral stain; nay, he is in his own way, for his corrupt nature makes it impossible for him to enjoy a pure universe. What then? He must die. I affirm that there is mercy to him at the very heart of the penalty. Capital punishment is the best thing that could befall a creature so unfit to have mental and moral sympathy with the inhabitants of the new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. The fact is, the character of God—that great character, to admire which is a holy luxury—shines with surpassing lustre in the revelation he has given. Seen in this light, the revelation becomes alive with wonders. Whenever a dark saying troubles us, or a proposition contains thoughts too large for our capacity, or our experience seems to come into painful collision with a promise, we fall back with calm assurance upon the glorious character of God. When mysteries baffle us, when our skill in interpretation is exhausted, and when our wisdom and learning are at their wits' end in the presence of one of those moral riddles that roll across our path, reminding us of our feebleness and dependence, we pillow our aching head upon the ineffable character of God and find repose. He cannot, he will not act contrary to himself. He will solve the difficulties that perplex the understanding and try the faith of men, in a manner gloriously in harmony with his essential character. He will be a consuming fire to all the workers of iniquity. "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." But he will not continue them in being, for that were to act in opposition to his declared purpose of purifying his universe, and to perpetuate the sin that he loathes. Come what will, we must vindicate our Father's peerless character, especially when we find in it the eternal spring of that blessed evangel which offers the gift of immortality to every creature of a mortal race who will accept it at his hands, and on his own generous terms through the Son of his love, our glorious Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; to whom be glory through all the ages. Amen!—Rainbow.

Br. M. McCulloch has baptized seven at Hampshire, Ill. this summer, and the prospect is good for more similar burials.——A late San Francisco paper says: "Mrs. Fassett, an Eastern lady, occupied the pulpit at George's Place and addressed, both morning and evening, very large audiences upon the Second Coming of the Lord. Whatever her views, she supported them with quotations of chapter and verse from the sacred text. The effect of the logic and text combined was very great, and the audience from time to time marked their approval of the point to be established by the greatest attention."——Br. J. H. THE TRAGEDY AT THE MILL.

AHNAPEE, Wis., Oct. 28.—My pilgrimage toward "Death's Door" ended in the north among the same terrific evidences that marked the beginning in the neighborhood of Green Bay. The waste and ruin of that depopulated the western shore were fully matched by the elaborate and finished picture of devastation presented on the entire peninsula. The loss of life, though not so great in the aggregate, was fully equal in proportion, and almost eclipsed the first in circumstantial horror. The evidences of destruction, though very similar in the main, were by no means unvarying or monotonous. From the desolated hamlets of Brussels to the straggling deaths in the Northren Neck the horror is sustained and horribly picturesque. Volumes could not tell the awful significance of these ravaged acres; volumes cannot exhaust the dramatic terror and incident crowded into that wild Walpurgis night. When the picture of the awful catastrophe at Peshtigo was thought complete, wan specters stole in from the neighboring morasses to add more shuddering last touches to the lurid horror. So it is here. When the list of death is closed, new names are added, and when the total seems complete new figures change the reckoning. Every mile of waste is alive with the unrecorded romance of individual heroism.

Human annals do not surpass, in equal time and space, the immensity and intensity of suffering and death crowded into the meager epitome of one frightful hour. The scene of a thriving industry, and the home of nearly a hundred people, the place, though isolated from any human vicinity, had maintained a flourishing and tranquil vitality. The shingle mill, with its coadjutant industries, gave employment to the entire people, women and children dividing the easy labors of shingling and binding. There were but four buildings on the clearing—the mill, the general boarding house, a store, and the barn. Economy and convenience, curious to say, had dictated the selection of this remote spot. The timber inexhaustibly covered the place, and it was of unequaled quality; a lazy little stream meandering through the gnarled roots and soft soil offered a supply of water, enough with artesian wells to drive the mill machinery. It was cheaper to work the great logs into marketable shape here, where they were right at hand, than establish the mills on the lake or bay and drag the immense timber over miles of wretched roads. The fiery experience of the west shore—of the whole Northern Wisconsin, had been experienced of this wood immured hamlet. For weeks incessant, laborious battle had been waged night and day, relays of men, and even women taking turns in the exhausting contest. It was hoped that all danger had been warded off when a wide belt, fully a mile deep, had burned outward from the clearing. The serenity of assured safety had come upon the people when this black circumvallation was complete—the very night before the calamity. On that fatal Sunday morning the mill operations suspended, and the men who had homes in the neighboring towns of Big and Little Sturgeon made an early start through the woods. When night came, some kindly Providence detained them, and the massacre was so much less. The night came on tranquilly, the humid air gave grateful promise of coming rain, and the last lingering distrust was banished from the timidest inhabitant. Early in the night most of the little population in the hamlet were in-doors or in bed. It was still early when those casually astir outside saw a great glowing light shoot athwart the southern sky, and, spreading rapidly west and northward, continue with dazzling brilliancy. Presently a slender column of fire shot forward, and, caught by a whirlwind, came plowing through the solid timber toward the mill. By this time the sleepers and all had rushed from the barrack in a wild, clamoring consternation.

Three brothers, Williamsons, owned the mill, and had in the little colony mother, father, sisters, wives, and children. Hastily charging the women to care for themselves, the brothers set about saving the property if possible. But before the hose could be brought to bear, the saving of life alone became the stake in the dreadful encounter. The brothers as proprietors, seem for a time to have been full calm, brave discretion, and with the full realization of the sudden danger in the first rush of the tornado, attempted systematic plans of preservation. The women were directed, as far as possible, to put on men's clothes throughout, as offering less chance for the fire to catch. So far as known, not a woman heeded the advice. Had they done so, their lives might not have been sacrificed on that ignoble pyre. Even if life had not been spared, the most revolting sights of massacre would have been spared the heart-broken survivors. This was the last shred of coherent conduct among the frightened people. Swift whirling columns of flame had cut through the intervening timber, and fell voraciously on the light frame buildings. The whirlwind lashing the trees into fragments caught the fire in roaring surges, and flung it about in billowy waves among the tree-tops. Slender tongues of fire falling from above played in malevolent currents across the clearing. A desperation of terror filled men, women and children—a terror as natural as fatal, for, had common fortitude led the group, not a soul need have perished. With one impulse the frantic mass, battling and crowding, rushed to the potato patch. Here a rising ground was crowned by a shallow pit, not six feet around, and hardly, at the deepest part, two feet below the surface of the ground. Men now living, who came almost unscathed through that night of doom, tell how before the evil time, when the fires were raging about, this spot had been fixed on as a place of safety, because, almost in the center of the clearing, with no inflammable matter near, it seemed to promise a breathing, in case of general conflagration. There had been constant jocosities and banter about this "center of salvation," and some one actually attempting to enlarge the cavity had been driven off by good natured ridicule. Even as late as Saturday it had been used as a place of refuge notwithstanding, and when the actual danger came, the credulous mass remembered the delusive pit. If that fatal had not been, if the whimsical belief had not obtained a firm hold, there is not the slightest doubt but the forty seven that perished would have escaped in neighboring woods. Into that cramped place, crowding, buffeting, begging, cursing, imploring, praying, shrieking, men, children, and women elbowed and fought in the frenzy of a hideous desperation and terror. Not large enough to admit a dozen by the closest packing, nearly fifty wrestled and crowded in and about the fatal spot. With ostrich instinct, in the abjectness of their unreasoning fear, men plowed their burning heads under the living pyre. An inextricable pyramid of bodies, in all sorts of conceivable postures, stood in the flame-swept place.

There were a few in this awful time that preserved an amazing equanimity. The engineer of the mill, Byron Merrill, a young fellow of marked character and intelligence, battled resolutely till the last chance to save his employers' property, and only when the futility of the effort and the danger to life became obvious, was his self-imposed duty resigned. A bit of romance tinges the glaring picture. His sweetheart was the relative of the mill-owners, Miss Maggie Williamson, a girl, it is said, of rare beauty and attraction. The young fellow, bright and cultured beyond his kind, regarded with favor and affection for many a mile around, had won her heart, and the two were to have been married. The girl with her kindred had fled to the potato patch, and here, suffocating with smoke, their garments in flames, and writhing in awful agony, the young fellow found the chief part of the people. He tried to scatter the infatuated group; with his hat pressed closely over his mouth and nostrils, he directed the group to break and take shelter in the edge of the timber. Hopeless! The roar of the hurricane, even the blood-curdling shrieks of the sufferers drowned his voice. He tried by main force to tear the hideous mass asunder, but the strength of a giant could not have broken the maddened clutch of the wretched sufferers. The group was immovably fixed to the fatal spot, and rose from burning sand a fiery Laocoon struggling with the coiling flames. Merrill, hastily fetching wetted blankets, threw them over the nearest sufferers, meantime shouting to them to break for the timber, not twenty steps away. Useless. With the skin hanging in shreds upon his hands and forehead, he carried water and poured it on the infatuated group, while the ignoble crowding went on madly among the swiftly roasting crowd. The tumultuous struggle had been from the first a loathsome, unreasoning fear; a moment's coolness, a moment's cessation of the frightful effort to wedge downward, would have given life to all. The time came, however, when the faithful Merrill, stripped almost of clothing and burned beyond recognition, had to give up the heroic effort, and plunging through the darting flame, dashed his burning body in the well. Earlier in the catastrophe a half a dozen heavy sleepers had found tardiness their salvation from the potato patch, and they darted into the timber belt, which had been carefully burned out long before to keep the fire from the houses. Here, prone on the ground, they protected themselves while the mad crowd not ten yards away roasted in their blindness. The falling trees could be guarded against, but nothing could save from the encompassing fire in the clearings. One came, too, whose frail chance of life the meanest creature, struggling in that pit, would not have refused, an old tottering, half blind, trembling woman, mother to the owners of the mill. She must have been forgotten in the first rush, for when she came toward the potato patch it was filled with a swarming crowd thrown prone upon their faces in the shallow depths of the potato pit. Seven of her kindred writhed in that hideous knot. Passing on with decrepit step, the venerable mother, whose eighty four years had not worn out coolness and discretion, came upon a great bowlder near the edge of the timber. Climbing on this, although half suffocated, she covered her head with her skirts, and, with clothes carefully tucked up from the running flames, kept for hours on the back of this unique salamander. The only son that came out of the fire with his life, it is said, did not forget his duty, and aided his mother to this forlorn refuge. Be that as it may, with a thick blanket well wetted, over her body and her skirts out of reach of the hot incendiary sand, the brave old lady perched on that rock through the long night of agony, every shriek of her roasting kindred splitting her ears, and their burning bodies almost within reach of her helpless arms. Twice through the night she received succor, once from her son, who came up and wetted her covering, and once from the barn-master, Bush, who also bathed her head and gave her cool water to drink. Through the whole unspeakable tragedy of piteous cowardice ran this vein of simple fortitude and heroic endurance.

Correspondence

From Day Conklin, Moscow, Mich.

The first Q. M. for the Southern District of Michigan, held at West Moscow, was attended with considerable interest. Two were baptised and received into the church. We thank the good Lord that a good impression has been made. Br. Babcock preaches here once in two weeks. We ought to feel very grateful to him, for he has labored long and faithfully here. Wherever he may go, may the Lord be with him and crown his every effort to do good with success. May we also be faithful, that "when Christ who is our life shall appear, then we also may appear with him in glory." (Col. 3: 4.) If we love Jesus we shall also love his appearing, and love to obey him in all things. He says, "If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and he will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (John 14: 23.) Can it be possible that we can be made so unspeakably happy as to dwell with God and Christ in the new earth, after the curse is removed? Can we hear the welcome plaudit—"Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world?" (Mat. 25: 24.) How cheering to know that we may be heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. We also read, "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." (Ps. 37: 34.) All this I believe.

From O H Sawin, Worcester, Mass.

Who can estimate the grace and goodness of God, when we can inscribe, our sins forgiven! Who would not be "a prisoner of hope," especially "that blessed hope!" We are looking for the glorious appearing of our Savior. He is one I love the most, and I hope to enjoy his companionship on the new earth: I rejoice to see the bright omens of his soon coming. The war excitements in Europe and peace movements in America harmonize perfectly with the prophetic announcement of the last days. Every thing in these last days is pushed ahead with lightning speed. The news of the recent great fire of Chicago seems to have spread at least over one fourth part of the globe in less than a week. It has reached England, Germany, Austra, and probably all civilized Europe ere this time.

The good Lord seems to have moved upon the hearts of the citizens of our country to send them immediate relief for their wants. But another class, ruffians, desperadoes, and incendiaries also exist, filled with mischief and crime, and will continue, despite of all governments, till the Lord comes and destroys them as he did Sodom and Gomorrah. The increasing signs are an evidence that the word of the Lord must be fulfilled. Our trials are but short. Be patient. Be of good cheer. "Fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

From G W Hurd, Hopper's Mills, Ill.

On Saturday Sep. 9, left home to fill my appointments in Hancock and Brown counties. Arrived that eve at Br. Knott's pilgrim home where I was greeted with a hearty welcome. On the morrow spoke at Antioch chapel, where there is a band earnestly striving for a place in the kingdom of God. Br. Larkin Scott, a veteran and pioneer, is still residing here, and preaching as the door opens. They desire a special protracted effort this winter. In the evening went about four miles to West Point, a village on the Burlington and Quincy R. R. where we had on overflowing house. This is the place where Br. Grant held his discussion with John Sweeny. A good interest to hear the truth is found, and good hope that a church will be raised up. Monday came to Clayton. Here there are a few left, looking for the Lord. On Tuesday came to Mt. Sterling. Am to commence a meeting some three miles from town in a neighborhood where our views have never been preached. Attended the weekly union prayer meeting, Tuesday eve. and felt blessed and refreshed in taking an active part with them. Our meeting commenced Wednesday eve. Thinly attended at first, but after this the house was well filled, and all seemed desirous of understanding the reasons for our hope. Openly avowed infidels confessed that we surely preached the truth of God, and that the doctrine showed God a being of love and justice, instead of a tyrant and monster. There were many who had formerly opposed, who confessed that the view looked reasonable and Scriptural, and a feeling favorable to us as a people seemed to pervade the minds of the community. At the close of our meeting, on Monday night we were helped on our way in a very liberal manner. Br. Richard Bush, although almost alone, is trying to let the light of gospel truth shine in this region. The friends desire me to return this winter and hold a long meeting with them, which, the Lord willing, I shall do.

In company with Br. Bush took the cars for Winchester, on Tuesday a. m. This is an old place, and indeed old in sin. In all my travels in the west, I have not found an equal to it in the sale of intoxicating drink. The Presbyterians very kindly opened their splendidly finished house to us, which we occupied six evenings and one Sabbath. But, though we posted notices over the city, yet there was quite a small turn out, until Saturday eve., after which the house was tolerably well filled. In such places as this, nothing but a long protracted work will do much good. There are a few dear ones here that know and love the Lord. They are trying to live religion. The Lord remember and bless them. Before I left them, they helped me on my way.

After returning home and staying one night, I took the cars again for Brown Co, to hold a meeting with Dr. W. G. Gray, who had held our views for some years and preached them with some success, but has not as yet connected himself with our Conference. After enjoying his hospitality for a night and day we passed on to the place of meeting. Here we found a strong "Age-to-come" community. Some of these people have embraced the view that there will be no resurrection of infants and children, and many other things contrary to sound doctrine. I had a free time here, and was blessed in preaching the whole gospel. The word was well received by many, although some considered us as being too formal, because we insisted on singing and prayer in the public congregation. The dear ones were very much refreshed, and will try to build a good chapel the coming season, the Lord willing. The church with their pastor have expressed a desire to be connected with the Illinois Central Conference. I have promised to hold a protracted meeting with them this winter, when we hope to see a goodly number embrace the gospel hope. I do believe that prejudice against our views is wearing away, and that people are generally more willing than formerly to listen to our views. Hence I feel like pressing the battle to the very gates. Received a very liberal donation from brethren and friends, and again took my way home. I shall be confined closely at home for about one month in making preparations for winter, and then, if health will permit, will hold protracted meetings in various localities for the next four months. Pray for me, that I may be a polished shaft in God's hand.

From J W Cummins, Forest Bay, Mich.

We are still holding on to the blessed hope—and are without much else to hold on to. We were planning a response to your late appeal, but the fire has prevented us from carrying them out. It came upon us like a storm, in a manner terrifying to behold, sweeping everything before it. Within few miles of us four persons (one child) were burned to death; in other parts many more have fallen a prey to the flames. Myself and family escaped with only the clothes on our backs, and of my books I saved only my concordance. My Bible was burned. Surely fire is not a preserving element! Br. Conner lost his barn and all his crops. Brs. Potter, Snyder, Nidow, and Lister suffered the same loss. Sr. Lee, a widow with seven children lost house and barn and crops.

Now you will know what to do about our papers. We do not feel that we can do without them; but we cannot pay at present.

[We shall credit each one a year in advance. Some one will pay for them. Ed.]

From P Kingsley, Thayer Co, Neb.

I have never yet seen a preaching brother of the Advent faith. It was by seeing a few copies of The Times, and some tracts handed me by a believing friend and neighbor, that I came to see the truth now so clear to me. My father was a preacher and belonged to the Christians (not Disciples.) He was killed, by an accident, nearly seven years ago. Four years ago I became a believer in the truth taught by the Adventists. My mother was very much prejudiced against these people then, but now she thinks very much of my paper, and I am sure she sees some parts of the Bible in a very different light from what she used to do. Pray for us, that we see, believe and live in accordance with the teaching of Jesus.

From M A Tomlinson, Montgomery Co, Iowa.

We are among the unfortunate ones that had their crops destroyed by hail. Our loss by the hail is fifteen hundred dollars. Still we do not feel to complain, but to put our trust more implicitly in "him who doeth all things well," believing that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord." I feel to renew my covenant with God, and by his grace I am going to live more faithful, nearer to him than I have been living. I know it is my privilege. It is now two years and more since I have had the privilege of hearing an Advent sermon. I wanted much to attend the camp meeting near Villisca, but could not, because of poor health. But I believe the time is not far distant when all the faithful will be gathered in one great meeting around the throne of God. That time will be "when he cometh to make up his jewels."

The One Thousand Years of Rev. 20.

When we examine the suject of the one thousand years of Rev. 20, it is not only necessary to "search the Scriptures," but to compare Scripture with Scripture, and in doing so we will examine some of the promises of Jesus; and his promises will not fail, unless conditional. Here is one promise of his that is not conditional, which is in answer to a question asked by Peter. (Mat. 19: 27): "Then answered Peter and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee, what shall we have therefor?" Jesus answers (v. 28): "And said unto them [the apostles], Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration [resurrection] when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Here Jesus tells his apostles that they shall sit upon thrones; but not before he shall shall sit upon the throne of his glory; not before the resurrection of the just. And now at this point of the Revelation, Jesus does not see fit to reveal to them the period or duration of time, that they shall sit upon the twelve thrones, but in his pleasure to reward his followers, he has reserved the further revelation until some other time; and now we will take our standpoint, when the beloved John was on the Isle of Patmos, when he was tarrying for his Lord, to receive a further message. (John 21: 22.) Jesus said unto him [Peter], "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." Although Jesus did not come at that time, in the manner prescribed that he shall appear at his second coming, he nevertheless did come unto John with a glorious message, for the further information and consolation of his followers; and in that message he further reveals to John in regard to their sitting on twelve thrones. And in Rev. 20: 4, John says: "And I saw thrones and they that sat upon them; and judgment was given unto them. And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands." Well, what of it, John? "And they lived, [Praise God! they are alive, again,] and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Hallelujah! That must mean in Christ's kingdom. "But the rest of the dead [wicked] lived not again until the thousand years were finished." "These two verses, amongst other things, settle three points. (1) The reigning with Christ for a thousand years; (2) That the wicked dead do not live again, until one thousand years after the first resurrection; and (3) If there is a third resurrection when Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven, there will, also, be a second resurrection at the end of a thousand years.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Why? "On such the second death had no power; and shall reign with him [Christ] a thousand years." "And when the thousand years are expired, Satan, shall be loosed out of his prison. [not destroyed, only confined in prison." That is a good place for criminal.]

Please read vv. 8, 9, and 10, and at v. 11, after those events described in these verses have their fulfillment, then what does John see? "And I saw a great white throne, [not thrones] and him that sat on it, from whose face, the earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them."

From v. 12 to the end of the chapter is a recapitulation of the judgment scenes, commencing with the second coming of Christ, and ending when the last enemy is destroyed, which is death. Next what does the beloved John see? He says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, and I John heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." Amen. O God! help me to be one of that blessed company. And dear brethren and sisters, such are some of the blessed promises and things prepared for those that love Jesus. Will you be there?

Much more may be learned from God's word, to understand his wonderful plans; such for instance as Peter's evidence upon the one thousand years (2 Pet. 3: 8): "But beloved be not ignorant of the one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." When Peter declares the above, his subject had just been the day of judgment, and I believe that he intended that we should understand (and not be ignorant) that the judgment day or scenes will continue just one thousand years.

Peter W. Matts.

An Extract.

CONTAINING SOME ERROR AND CONSIDERABLE TRUTH.

We are told that Christ ascended to heaven the moment he expired upon the cross. The words he spake to Mary, in the garden, on the morn of his resurrection (John 20: 17), "I am not yet ascended to my Father," have been instanced to prove the contrary; and it will require a great deal of sophistry, and many new translations, to set aside that point-blank evidence. But there are many other passages that give evidence to the same effect. In John 14: 2, we read, "In my Father's house are many mansions;....I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

If, then (as the teachers of these new doctrines assert), Christ ascended to heaven the moment he expired upon the cross, he must have gone there, according to his promise, to prepare a place for his disciples. That he "came again" when he rose from the dead and showed himself, from time to time, for forty days, it is presumed these teachers will not deny. Granting, then, these things to have happened exactly as they state, we ask, Did Christ in that case fulfill the promise made to his disciples? Did he take any of them with him when he ascended from the mount at the end of the forty days? Not one! According to their own statement then, he had gone to heaven to prepare a place for his disciples, under an express promise that when he came again he would take them with him; and had come again; and returned to heaven again, and yet had not performed his promise!! Can we admit this? Nay, verily; "Let Christ be true and every man a liar." It follows, therefore, that Christ did not ascend to heaven from the cross, and had not "come again" when he rose from the dead, and that the time of his coming to receive his people to himself is still in the future.

One of these teachers says: "From the lowest depth of human ignominy he" (Christ) "went up with his cross-scarred, and once buried body, to the highest glory of heaven;" from which we are compelled to infer that he ascended the first time, from the cross, "out of the body," and the second time, from the mount, "in the body." Yet the inspired writers mention but one ascension—that from the mount! In Heb. 9: 28, we read "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Now, beyond controversy, his first appearance was, when "for us men, and for our salvation, he came down from heaven, and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, and was made man, and was crucified for us under Pontius Pilate."

He was once offered, he shall die no more. He has borne away the sins "of all," and what he has done once, shall stand forever. Yet he will appear a second time without sin; i. e., without any further offering for sin: that he has already made. At his first appearance he was our sacrifice for sin: but at his second he shall come to bestow that salvation which the sacrifice of himself, at his first coming, purchased for all that trust in, and expect it from him; to deliver the bodies of believers from the empire of death, reunite them to their purified souls, and bring both into his eternal glory. This is salvation.

But mark the saying, "he shall appear the second time." Does it not mean that he had not appeared the second time when the epistle was written? Assuredly it does. But if he ascended to heaven from the cross, as our new teachers assert, he must have appeared the second on time the morning he arose from the dead, and the author of the epistle should have written, "He shall appear the third time without sin unto salvation." The two statements are irreconcilable; which shall we accept? As the epistle was composed by an inspired apostle, our new teachers must pardon us if we accept his statement in preference to theirs; and in so doing we must necessarily reject the idea that Christ ascended to heaven from the cross and returned to the earth on the morning of the resurrection. We are taught to believe that the Son of God is "perfect God and perfect man. Equal to the Father, as touching his Godhead; and inferior to the Father, as touching his manhood. Who, although he be God and man, yet is not two, but one Christ." I doubt then if we are at liberty to imagine that Christ ascended to heaven "out of the body," as he must have done if he went up from the cross. I challenge these new teachers to point out any passage in the Scriptures that would justify such a belief. When he ascended from the mount he went up, the Godhead and manhood united—one Christ—and we have no account of his having ascended at any other time.

They say Christ's promise to his disciples did not mean that he would "come again" visibly, and "receive them to himself" openly. Not at all! but that he would send a messenger to call them! "On some day," says one of them, "the message will come to each disciple from his ascended Lord: 'To-day you shall be with me in paradise.'" Very beautiful and poetic, certainly!

> "Hark, they whisper; angels say,
> Sister spirit, come away!"

But where are the grounds for all this in Scripture? When Christ said, "I will come again," we have no authority to say that he meant, "I will send a message."

We, who have been educated by old school teachers, cannot accept this sending "a message" in a secret manner, by an unseen messenger (even admitting that such message be sent "to each disciple," which may well be doubted), as the fulfillment of his promise that he would come again and receive us unto himself.

According to his promise, and the teachings of his apostles, we look for a glorious appearance—a personal coming—with "power and great glory," and all his holy angels with him; and then, and not till then; do we expect the promise made to his disciples to be fulfilled: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you."—Prophetic Times.

Theological Machinery.

What ails the theological machinery of these times? It seems to clash. It appears evident to me that the cause can be ascertained by adhering to the Scriptures. In the beginning, when man was innocent, and ignorant of evil, the devil, or his agent, the serpent, told Eve of other gods that knew good and evil, and she might be like them if she would disobey the one God. The gods here referred to by the serpent, I think, were the fallen angels, or demons, that kept not their first, or good estate. By disobedience they fell into sin, and then knew evil. Facts connected with this class of fallen beings will account for many strange things acted out by the family of man.

The gods, or demons, have operated against the one true and living God, and his people, since the family quarrel between Cain and Abel. As Cain had the spirit of the wicked one, it shows he knew evil. He was under the influence of the gods, or demons, and Abel was not.

I propose saying a few things that will wake up some one competent to write more fully and correctly. We see the actions of the Cain family taught by demons, who claimed to be wise, knowing good and evil, but always doing evil. This class had a mystery connected with their operations: and they claimed that they came from the one only true God. This mystery was revealed to all who desired it, without restriction or law of penalty. This was so well adapted to fallen, mortal man, that a great effort was made to introduce it before the world, and it was sought by kings. The first we will mention, were the so-called wise men of Egypt, found in Gen. 41, who pretended to foretell future events, and interpret dreams. See their failure and imposition exposed by the king of Egypt, who then sent for one of God's men, Joseph, the son of Jacob, who gave the king what the wise men could not give with the help of the fallen angels, or demons, called the gods. But this Joseph had resisted the influence of the "wise" men and a wicked woman, which usually go together.

Two hundred and twenty-seven years after, another king reigned in Egypt, who knew not Joseph, or his God; he also had a class from the old serpent's school for his cabinet, or lords. This class had the power to work miracles by their enchantments, or help of demons. (See Ex. 7: 11.) Clarke gives them the name of teachers of Moses in his youth, while studying in Pharaoh's court, preparatory to taking the kingdom when Pharaoh left it; but God took him in hand, and spoiled him for the use of demons. This is what Paul cites us to in 2 Tim. 3: 8, as coming in the last days, withstanding the truth, which will be noticed hereafter.

We will follow this class of deceivers by their works, instead of their names and uniforms. Their work was so subtile, that all nations sought them as divine beings. They opposed God's people. The old serpent's scholars spread their knowledge among all nations, and in many cases overcame God's people by leading them into worshiping idols, or other gods, that the nations worshiped; when the machinery of God would not work until there was a clearing out and confessing, and turning unto the Lord their God, who brought them out of Egypt, from the wicked overbearing power. As good a man as Aaron was overcome by this spirit, and submitted to the wishes of the church, or people, and made an idol of gold to worship, after the form of a calf. Then the machinery stopped working by God's power, and the devil ran it until Moses got down from the mount, when the work went back into God's order. Aaron learned a good lesson. We see these demons following God's people, introducing their gods, and taking advantage of weak minds.

We will notice another of the old serpent's scholars, referred to in Lev. 20: 6. Here the Lord's people are warned against those that have familiar spirits. Under the law none of this class of witches—woman necromancers, or oracles—were suffered to live. (See Lev. 20: 27.) Twenty-eight years later, we find them still at their wicked work, following up God's people. Balak, a servant of the gods, so influenced Balaam that he hired him to curse Israel. By reading the account in Num. ch. 22, you will learn that Balaam lost his sight, got his foot crushed against the wall, and was reproved by the jackass, and then died for his sin. Thirty-three years later, God warns his people against the old serpent's scholars, nine in number. (Deut. 18; 9–14.) These were all servants of the gods, instead of the true God. See Bible dictionary.

We again find this class in Deut. 32: 16–18. Here Israel got to worshiping the gods of the nations, and sacrificing unto devils, or demons, and the machinery stopped working until repaired, as in other cases. Twenty-four years after, Joshua (ch. 24: 14–16) marks this same set of deceivers that deceived their fathers by their gods, on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; so we are warranted by inspiration in calling them the same class, belonging to the old serpent's school. Bp. Newton looked at this text in the same light. Three hundred and sixty-seven years later, we see Saul going to the old witch in Endor to divine unto him, and talk with dead Samuel. We have a decision from Scripture what divining is with this class, educated in the old serpent's school. The witch told three things that deceived king Saul, and he lost his kingdom, as other kings have for the same cause; and a second punishment was due to him, for he was once a prophet, and God had previously said if any of his people consulted a witch, or divine, or either of the old serpent's scholars, they should die for that sin, which was visited upon Saul. See 1 Chron. 10: 13–14. The machinery would not run with that kind of power to do God's work.

The devil has tried many times to go in company, and work wonders by getting some machine that God had turned by his power, and getting the same engineer to try his magic power; but the machinery would always rattle out of gear, and stop, and the engineer would run away or hide.

A majority of the theological books are spiced with this old serpent's wisdom, and the writers think Saul saw Samuel. Such a position gives the power to demons to raise the dead, as they claim; but the machinery of a Bible resurrection will not run with this power. Still every effort is made to work the dead in with the living. Three hundred and forty-seven years later (Is. 8: 19, 20), this class were still trying to get the living to go to the dead for wisdom. God says it is because there is no light in them. To the law and testimony for light. In Is. 41: 21–24, God gives this same class of knowing gods a challenge to produce their strong reasons, and demonstrate their power to tell things to come.

One hundred and eighteen years later, Ezekiel (ch. 20: 8–11) marks this class as possessing the same power to turn the people from serving God as in the days of their fathers, when in Egypt. Read this account, and you will see the track of the old cloven foot. Other places can be found, but wishing not to be too lengthy, I omit many references, it being the main object to track this devilish wisdom from the gods, or demons, down through the world to our day.

We will call attention to the first king of Babylon. Like the king of Egypt, he was really following this same class, doing the same work, only under a different name. See Dan. 2: 27. Here the machinery had stopped, and God's engineer, Daniel, had to start with another power. Twenty years later, his son Belshazzar relied upon the same class of pretended wise demons, and all stopped until the old engineer started it again. See Dan. 5: 7–12. He lost his kingdom and life. There is "death in the pot" where it goes.

Thirty-one years later, Daniel's last battle was with this same class that got fat positions with the king of Media and Persia, Darius, who got deceived by them. (Dan. 6: 13–15.) Still later, the oracle of this same class got Xerxes to go to war with the Grecians, and deceived him, and he lost his army, money and reputation, and was so poor when he died, that he was buried at the public expense. See Rollin. This was the rich king of Persia, spoken of by the angel Gabriel, in Dan. 11: 2. No one ever prospered under the dictation of this class of beings. Still later, we find Darius and Alexander inquiring through their oracles what the spirits of the dead said about going to war. See Rollin's account. They were both deceived, and Darius was killed in battle—exactly contrary to what the oracles said. This is the very power that all worldly wise men have depended upon, and by which all have been deceived.

The Romans had their oracles to consult. Demons caused Christ to die after he had shown up their devilish work, reproving them at different times, and telling them to be still and come out of their oracles, or mediums. He gave the apostles the same power over the unclean spirits, or demons. We have abundance of proof that this same class came down to the gospel dispensation, and was the power of Pagan Rome, until A. D. 519, when it sold out to Papal Rome, which put a new dress on the same old deceiver, and introduced it into the church of Papal Rome, and gave as a substitute for worshiping the gods made with hands, the souls of Peter, James and John, and other apostles, and Mary, the mother of Christ. Here transfer was made legally and naturally.

For the benefit of those sympathizing with Spiritualists, who deny the Bible account of demons, we will give facts from a few historians. Dowling and Gavatia, p. 128, say the Pagans believed demons were gods that had power to talk with the dead. Kitto says demons deceived the pagan kings by talking with the dead. Plutarch says demons envy God's people, and by a form of worship have deceived many, and were worshiped for bringing news from the dead to the living. And this heathen doctrine has been highly esteemed by the ungodly and popular class of unbelievers. Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Plato, Socrates, Cicero, and others of the old serpent's school, have had their books and writings accepted and read in the Protestant churches, as well as the Catholic, which is as contrary to the Bible doctrine as the teachings of the gods spoken of in the Bible Dictionary, of which I will mention a few: Ashtareth of the Zidonians (1 Ki. 11: 33), Baal of Tyre (Jud. 2: 13), Baalpeor of the Moabites (Num. 25: 3), Baalzebub of Ekron (2 Ki. 1: 2), Bel and Nebo of Babylon (Is. 46: 1), Dagon of the Philistines (Jud. 16: 23), Milcom and Molech of the Amorites (1 Ki. 11: 5–7), Nibhaz of the Avites (2 Ki 17: 31), Nisroch of the Assyrians (2 Ki. 19: 37.) There are many more not mentioned here, all made with hands for the people to worship. The wise men so called, or demon's, mediums had charge of the worship.

But some say this was before the gospel day. Yes, but they were brought down to Paul's day. See Jupiter and Mercurius of the Romans (Acts 14: 12); also Diana of the Ephesians. (Acts 19: 24; 16–24.) Paul and Silas got into trouble for attacking a demon in a sooth-sayer, who pretended to tell fortunes by talking with the dead. No doubt she was a harlot, and her master who kept the house lost money in her when the devil was cast out.—(To be Concluded.)

Conference Minutes

Indiana.

NORTHERN DISTRICT, Q. M.

By appointment the Advent Christian Conference of Indiana held a Quarterly meeting at Union Mills, commencing Thursday Oct. 26. The following churches were represented: Union Mills, by the pastors and members. Sand Hill, I. E. Andrus, S. Ball, Jas. Nafe, and R. Doolittle. Big Indian, S. C. Andrus and G. D. Andrus. Stillwell Prairie, J. M. Winchell. Sumption's Prairie, Jacob Rupel and T. H. Rupel. Buchanan, D. R. Mansfield and Jas. Ferris. Br. and Sr. Palmer from Illinois were also present. And Br. Eli Burkholder and Fred Myers from Pettisville, Ohio, cheered us with their presence.

The church at Sumption's Prairie was received into the Conference.

The gospel was faithfully preached by Elds. Mansfield, I. E. Andrus, Ferriss and E. C. Andrus. God blessed the labors of his servants. The church was built up in their most holy faith. Sinners were pricked in their hearts, and three started for the kingdom. One was reclaimed. Three were baptised. Two added to the church.

At our covenant meeting on Saturday the Spirit of the Lord was present in mighty power. Forty-seven testified for Jesus. One dear child came out on the Lord's side, and put on Christ by baptism on Sunday. Two came out Sunday evening and were baptised Monday morning. One young brother traveled over 250 miles in order to be buried with Christ in the symbolic watery grave.

The brethren and sisters covenanted anew with the Lord and each other to seek a closer walk with God, and a more perfect consecration to him. On Sunday the dear saints to the number of eighty came around the table of the Lord. It was a blessed season; a foretaste of the blessing promised in the kingdom, when Jesus will gird himself and serve his saints.

We have had large and attentive congregations, and may the seed sown spring up and bear fruit unto everlasting life. Let us all keep the great truth before the people, that Jesus is coming, and that none but overcomers will enter the kingdom.

Our meeting was a perfect success, spiritually. Harmony prevailed throughout, and the interest increased from the beginning to the end. Praise the Lord. How good it is for the friends of Jesus to work together for the salvation of poor mortals.

What a contrast when we compare the present condition of things with us, with the same two years ago! To God be all the glory!

DEEP CREEK DISTRICT.

Met at Toronto Oct. 29.

J. M. Grover received license to exhort, and improve his talent as a preacher of the glad tidings of salvation and the soon coming Jesus.

Brn. Pitcher, Buck, Adair, Grover, and Mullet were appointed as committee to solicit donations, in their several localities for the purpose of helping pay for The Times Press. We hope the friends will respond nobly to the call and thereby lighten the burden of our friends at The Times office, who are laboring for God and for the right. Let us assume the obligation. Divide it up amongst ourselves, and we will find that it will take but small payments to cancel the debt, and do a vast amount of good. And let The Times find its way into every locality in the land. Let tracts be sown broadcast, and knowledge be increased, and truth prevail.

Now dear friends to carry out this good work we must furnish the means. We cannot all preach; we cannot all exhort; we cannot all print papers and tracts. But we can all give something to carry on this good work of spreading the truth. Let us commence the next New Year with our debt all paid up. Then we may say that truly we live in a day when the poor have the gospel preached to them, and the blind, thank God! are having their eyes opened.

WINONA DISTRICT, Q. M.

The third Q. M. of the Winona District for 1871, convened at the Nichols S. H. in Canton, in Fillmore Co. Minn. Friday eve. Oct. 20.

Officers present: Eld. Wm. J. Bursell, Pres.; S. C. Wellcome Sec'y.

Preachers present: Wm. J. Bursell, Peter Mitson, T. K. Allen, S. C. Wellcome.

During the session on Saturday the following business was transacted: A partial report of Committee on Preachers was given. On motion the Committee was given an extension of time to next Q. M. to make full report.

The Campmeeting Committee were also requested to report at the same time.

Voted, That when we adjourn it be to meet at the time and place where the next session of the Annual Conference shall be held, if it shall be in this District.

It being a busy time of the year among farmers, we did not have so large an attendance as we should like to have seen. Yet it was an occasion of deep interest to those that attended. Some of the brethren came quite a distance, and seemed well repaid for the sacrifice. And some of the brethren in the vicinity of the meeting made quite a sacrifice to attend, and enjoyed it, probably all the more.

On Friday eve. the writer preached from John 3: 16, showing the love that God manifested to the world in the gift of his Son and the greatness of his salvation.

Saturday afternoon we had a conference meeting—a heavenly season, truly. In the evening Br. Mitson preached from Mat. 24: 45–51, showing the difference betwen the faithful and the unfaithful servants, the necessity of giving meat in due season, the present truth, the last warning cry, etc.

Sunday morning, a goodly number gathered in love feast. Quite a number spoke of their lacking in power. Many of the brethren had been deprived of religious privileges, and we fear have got off their watch. Oh! that we might feel the awakening power of God in these perilous times, which should rouse us up, and keep us awake, ready to work. God help us to make an entire consecration of all we have and are to him, and then keep all on the altar.

At 11 o'clock Br. Wm. J. Bursell gave us a stirring discourse from Jesus' words—"Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" giving a graphic picture of our proximity to the judgment. He spoke of the state of the nations, their lack of confidence in each other, and in the same lack in the churches, and individuals; the love of pleasure, etc. What a fearful picture is before us?

In the p. m. Br. T. K. Allen gave us a good discourse from Ps. 15, showing who should abide in God's Tabernacle; the upright, the righteous, the truthful, the one who does not put his money to usury, etc. He dwelt at some length upon the evils of backbiting, that prince of evils which causes so much discord in the world.

In the evening preaching by the writer from 2 Cor. 13: 15, giving [illegible] exposition of "the faith." God's word is the standard. Abel showed his faith in a coming Messiah by offering a lamb. Abraham showed his faith by obeying God. And so of others in ancient times, who have vindicated faith by their works. In this gospel dispensation we give evidence of faith by obeying Christ, being buried in likeness of his death and living new lives etc.

At the close of the services a goodly number sat down around the table of the Lord in commemoration of his death and sufferings. A solemn season was enjoyed. We then took the parting hand. God bless the scattered ones and go with them. The brethren and sisters in the vicinity kindly cared for us who came from a distance.

S. C. Wellcome.

ST. PAUL DISTRICT.

The third Q. M. convened at Millersburg, Nov. 26 closing on Sunday the 29th. The church at Minneapolis was received, with eight members.

The district feel the need of a general meeting once a year at some convenient point. Castle Rock was talked of, but no definite action was taken.

Elders present: Collins, Miller, Himes and Sr. Dubey, with friends from Castle Rock, High Prairie, Faribault and the immediate vicinity.

At the close of the love-feast Sunday morning the Methodist preacher came in and took his place in the desk. The school-house being packed full by those assembled at the Q. M. it was supposed as a matter of courtesy he would give way, there being no other public place to hold a meeting. He however felt it was necessary for him to preach and refused to give way, very much to the dissatisfaction of the people, who immediately vacated the house, and removed to a private dwelling near by, kindly offered for the continuation of our morning service. A congregation of about seven persons was left at the school-house. The evening meeting and closing services were well attended, and some new interest awakened, resulting in the organization of a class.

That Reaper.

Will not the ministry call the attention of farmers to the fine chance we offer them to obtain a good Reaper at a low price? Help us to sell this machine, and you will help the cause in so doing.

Prophetic Chart.

Shall this projected Map of Symbolic Prophecy be published? Turn to the description of it in late numbers of THE TIMES, and see if it is not just what every church and minister needs. Will you take one? ONE HUNDRED subscribers are wanted to ensure success.

Ready—Ready.

We have a new edition of the Minstrel about ready, and shall be able to fill orders in a few days for copies in paper covers.

The cloth-bound (flexible) Minstrels will be ready soon.

We anticipate liberal orders, and shall be able to fill them promptly after this week.

To Correspondents.

ANN BOULT. Both letters were rec'd....T. W. PEASE. It was rec'd. Sickness keeping some of our hands away has delayed our filling orders....C. W PITCHER. Both were received. Thank you.

The Proposed Chart.

We confess to but little faith, at first, that our ideal of a complete prophetic chart could be realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, and so made the proposition to publish if a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. The response is encouraging. Shall we have the other needed names?

Pledges.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000) whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

H. Hubbard, $5.00; S. Pike, 10.00; R. P. Betts, 5.00; Thos. Davidson, 5.00; J. E. Merrill, 5.00; H. W. Norville, 5.00; F. A. Childs, 25.00 (pd); Jas. P. Morse, 1.00; A. C. Huetson, 4.00; A Brother, 5.00; A Brother, $100; A Friend of THE TIMES, $45; V Hunt, 5.00.

It does seem to us that this list of pledges does not grow as fast as it should. We are doing something toward extinguishing our debt, but not enough. Seven more "hundreds" would wipe it out. Many are doing nobly. Will not others respond soon?

(Concluded from p. 125.)

was a man of gigantic figure and grave, rough reserve. When the danger came, he gathered his three children and baby in his great strong arms, and with his wife strode to the center of the clearing, where he calmly placed them on wetted blankets, and, covering them with his coat, quietly brought water in buckets and saturated the frail protection. The flames hissed and roared about him, but he never desisted. Resisting the hot torrents with wonderful endurance, and even when his hair was ablaze, his hands fleshless, and the coals eating into his flesh, continued his efforts for wife and child. The young engineer and the barn-master shouted to him to fly to the woods. He seemed to hear them, but calmly shaking his head remained at his post. As his strength and sight began to fail, he looked with unutterable yearning toward the helpless group at his feet, then glanced anxiously toward the wood. Whether he saw the better chance of safety can never be known; he reeled suddenly, and dropped like a shot in his tracks. When help came to that group the next day, an unscarred babe lay in the arms of its dead mother, the father's arm about both. They were, of course, all dead, but the father alone, with one arm burned off, was unrecognizable save by his giant frame. Even the dog that howled, smothering in the hot air and kept in an ecstasy of restless motion to prevent being roasted on the hot sands, seemed impressed by this man's devotion. Wagging delirious inquiry with his tail, and interjecting sharp barks, he seemed to plead with his obdurate master. Hopeless of recognition, then he would poke his nose under the wet blankets, and after a thorough cooling, emerge dejectedly as though depreciating the weakness while his master stood exposed. Sands growing hotter and hotter, the forbearing brute made for the woods, but in mid-career, and almost in performance of a jig—his legs were kept moving so briskly to keep his feet from burning—he turned longingly as if reminding the man that this was the way to safety. No heed was paid to him, and with painful limps and pitteous whines he returned, and setting his feet on the blanket, starred eagerly at his master. His poor singed body was found in that attitude of love and duty.

At the well, which stood nearest the house, a wretched group had taken refuge—not only at, but in it. Six people flung themselves into this last resort, counting confidently on it as a place of security. Finally, when crippled by the fire, and exhausted by his long efforts, the young man Merrill threw himself into that crowded pit also, the place was packed. Even here his presence of mind was all that saved a life where life had very little chance. The frail wooden curbing above the mouth had taken fire, and the flames began to run downward fiercely. The paralyzed group dared not put out their heads, lest the flames should smother them. But Merrill, without a moments hesitation, uprose and flung the dangerous thing away, and the barn-master, hovering about the edge of the woods, presently refreshed the victims by a bucketfull of water. The well was, notwithstanding a place of death. The flames sweeping savagely over the clearing, lurched and spit down hatefully into the crowded pit, and soon the steady blaze from within indicated the fate of its inmates. Merrill still held his mind, and resisted the flames. In this he was aided by Bush, who helped him to his final deliverence. He aided all who would listen to him manfully, and to him the few that were saved, in a large measure owe their lives. He brought water from the creek to aid the group on the potato patch, and kept the sheltering blankets saturated as long as he dared venture inside the line of fire. It must not be supposed that outside the clearing stretched a solitude of safety. On the contrary, ceaseless explosions of breaking trunks and splintered branches were so terrific mingled with volumes of flame in the tree tops, that the great part of the people preferred to risk the dangers of the open ground. But the thick wook had its security, and with care the people that lay down near the edge found themselves, when frightful morning came, substantially uninjured.

Here the climax comes; the tragedy is complete in this one terrific picture; the light of the new day revealed only the machinery of the horrid masterpiece. The red glare of night had changed into the bleak dawn, and the dawn had changed into high noon before a helpful hand broke into the black Golgotha. The barnmaster Bush when silence had fallen upon the place an hour or two before dawn, took horse and attempted to make his way to Litt's Sturgeon; as well try to ride through a stone wall, his horse behind, he struggled by the bright light of the burning pines, and after incalculable trouble in the way and out of the way, some time about daylight he came upon the ruins of a lumberman's cabin, which by the regular path was not more that two miles from the mill. He had been hours in reaching it, and worn out by the labors and agony of the night, he sat down to rest. Presently the owner came, and the two started back to the settlement. They came first to the well. Merrill, apparently quite dead, was taken out first. Six more came after, all dead, save a child, crowded below its mother at the bottom. Merrill soon gave feeble evidence of life, and was cared for at once. Bush ran to the stone to aid the old woman; the blankets were rolled away. The stone was bare, but no vestige of Mrs. Williams could be found. Then they came upon the pit. An indistinguishable heap of arms, legs and bodies, perfectly still and wholly naked, was all that remained of the mass that came there in abundant life a few hours before. They were all dead, and few of them recognizable. Seven Williamsons perished in the group, among others the young girl, whose long black hair was found clutched in masses in her uncharred hands.

The darkness of a new night threw a pitying vail over the scene when the first relief from the outside had succeeded in cutting a way through. The work of burial began the next morning, and fifty-nine were accounted for in the fatal clearing. The venerable mother was found on the road to Big Sturgeon the day after her terrible exposure, very feeble, and worn out. She was tenderly cared for, and is in a fair way to regain what she can count but little—her health. One son out of three was spared. Her husband laid his gray hairs in the terrible holocaust; her whole kindred passed away in the ravages of that deadly night. To this day the woods are not clear of their dead. Bodies in every stage of decay are constantly brought in by the committees, and until that is ended the grand total can only be a matter of conjecture.—N. Y. Tribune.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that Eld. James H. Whitmore has accepted a unanimous call from the Rochester Advent Christian Church to become its pastor, and will enter upon his labors here about Dec. 1, 1871. Preaching brethren who desire to make appointments for Rochester, will please correspond with him after that date.

H. McCULLOCH.

Notice.

Myself and wife are making arrangements to travel, and preach the word of life more extensively the coming winter than usual. The preliminaries of the great day of the Lord are so manifest at the present time, we are more than anxious to do all that we can for the salvation of a perishing world; and would say to brethren and friends in Michigan, Northern Ohio, and Indiana, that if any desire series of meetings in their localities, please inform us by letter at Reading, Mich.

Notice.

I will sell at a low figure, to any Advent preacher, who comes properly recommended, three lots of land—40, 80, or 120 acres. The land is 1½ miles from the Railway station, and has buildings, orchards, and sufficient water. My object is to procure in our midst a man of God, who will preach the word, regardless of popularity, to the Advent church in this region.

Western Ministerial Conference.

This Conference, composed of ministerial delegates from the various Western Conferences (each Conference having the right to send three delegates), is to meet in connection with the Association meeting at Chicago, Dec. 5, and probably hold its first session on the 6th. Let delegates be appointed at Quarterly Meetings, or by the Conference Board, in cases where the Annual Meeting has omitted the selection of delegates. We meet, not as an authoritative, but as an advisory body of ministers, to act for the good of the body at large. Essays on different topics will probably be read by different ones, besides attending to business that may come before us. Particulars hereafter.

J. V. HIMES, President.

W. A. C. P. Association.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Western Advent-Christian Publishing Association, will convene in the Advent Chapel, Green St., Chicago, Ill., Wednesday forenoon, December 5, 1871. A full attendance of the members is desired.

The following amendments to the Constitution of the Association will be presented for action:

ART. XII. Sec. 1. The stock of this association is hereby made transferable, by the transfer of the certificate issued therefor, endorsed in blank by the original holder, his heirs, executors or administrators; and the entering of such transfer upon the books of the Association. The date of said entry of the transfer shall be the date of the transfer.

Sec. 2. This article shall take effect and be in full force from and after its adoption.

Amendment to Art. XI. To amend Art. XI. so that it shall read: "This constitution may be altered or amended at any regularly called meeting of the Association by a vote of *——of the members present at said meeting: this amendment to be in force from and after its adoption.

Churches throughout the West are invited to elect delegates, selecting persons not already members of the Association. These delegates will not take part in the first meetings of the Association; but arrangements will doubtless be made to receive them to full membership at the earliest possible moment.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis. was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 38½ down to 21½. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh; it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

Usual price, $160; but the machine presented to THE TIMES office will be sold for ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY DOLLARS, if taken soon.

For any further information, address J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 21, 1871.

The Harmony of Scripture on Future Punishment.

Our subject is the ultimate destiny of those who receive in vain the grace of God manifested in the gift of his Son. I use this definition in order to exclude any question as to the future prospects of those who have never heard the Gospel, or never had sufficient light to bring them under the condemnation of unbelief.

THE CONFLICTING VIEWS.

Now, there have long prevailed in the church two very opposite opinions, with which the names of Augustine and Origen are usually connected. The first is, that they who leave this world impenitent will continue so for ever, and consequently live forever in misery; the second is, that they will ultimately be brought to repentance, and live forever in blessedness. The ideas of different persons as to the proportion of misery or of happiness that will enter into the lot of those who are not saved in this life may vary so indefinitely as sometimes to make the opposing principles practically coalesce. But theoretically they are distinct, and form two distinct schools of opinion.

THE COMMON POSTULATE.

On examining these positions we find them, somewhat remarkably, resting on one and the same fundamental postulate; that all men must live forever in some condition or other—that this mortal will put on immortality in all cases. And it is just that postulate which subsequently leads them into diametrical opposition. Each side, as Mr. Constable has well shown, lays hold of a revealed truth, and connects it with their common postulate. The Augustinian sees that some sinners will incur a doom which involves utter and irremediable ruin; that their end is destruction—of some kind. If, therefore, they are to live forever, their doom must be an everlasting life of misery. The Origenist sees that sin and suffering are to banished from the universe, that all things are to be reconciled by Christ, and that God is to be all in all. If, therefore, every man is to live forever, every man must be brought into a mortal condition which will fit him to share in that universal blessedness.

EACH POSITION UNASSAILABLE FROM THE OTHER.

In this controversy, from their common standing point of necessary human immortality, each side is utterly unable to answer the other.

If any one wishes to see how hopeless is the attempt to evade the force of the texts which threaten destruction to the wicked by explaining it to mean the destruction of the evil that is in them, and not of their persons, let him read Mr. Constable's reply, in the Rainbow, to Mr. Birks and Mr. Jukes—the former of whom maintains a partial, the latter a complete, moral renovation of all men. My present limits will allow me to notice two texts in this connection.

The first is our Lord's declaration concerning Judas, "Good were it for that man if he had never been born." If Judas is to enjoy an everlasting life of even such partial blessedness as will make existence to him "better than non-existence," how could it have been good for him never to have commenced that existence? Any preliminary suffering that he may have to endure for a limited time must be infinitely outweighed by the eternity of bliss which follows it.

The second is Matthew 10: 28: "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but fear him who is able to destroy both body and soul in Gehenna." If it could be shown ever so conclusively that some future punishment will be remedial, here at least is something threatened which cannot possibly be so. Without insisting upon the contrast of man's power to kill the body, which is certainly not supposed to be for any remedial purpose, our Lord defines precisely what it is that will be destroyed—not man's sinfulness, but the component parts of his being, his body and his soul, the whole man; and the figure employed to illustrate this is utterly irreconcilable with the idea that the destruction is intended to have a beneficial tendency on the person so destroyed. Gehenna was not a reformatory; it was a place outside the walls of Jerusalem, where the refuse of the city was consumed. This burning had undoubtedly a beneficent purpose toward the inhabitants of the city, namely, to prevent them suffering from the accumulation of corrupt matter; but it had no restorative effect upon the things consumed—it simply put an end to them. The Augustinian holds that, as man cannot be put an end to, he must forever be undergoing a process of destruction, without ever being actually destroyed. And to the Origenist, who admits his primary postulate of human immortality, his position is absolutely impregnable.

On the other hand, the Origenist can show, quite conclusively, that the final extinction of all evil, moral or physical, by the Divine Redeemer, is the great revelation of Scripture; it is revealed there with a fulness and clearness that could scarcely be exceeded. Time again almost restricts me to to the consideration of a single passage—the well-known words of Paul in Col. 1: 16-20; "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have preeminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell: and, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." Ta navra—"the all things"—which were created, and which will be reconciled by Christ, can mean nothing less than the universe of being—and that regarded as a whole. The apostle, you will observe, takes the scriptural and philosophical view of creation; not as carried on in every fresh development of being, but as accomplished once for all when the germs of the several orders of beings were called into existence: "By him were"—not are—"all things created." In each case, therefore, he speaks of the universe as a whole. And the reconciliation of all things is, not the restoration of every particular form of life that has ever been developed out of the original creation, but the restoration of perfect harmony to creation as a whole; so that, when it is accomplished, all shall again be "very good." We are told nothing of the changes that will have previously taken place in the various kinds of being, how many creatures will have come into existence, lived their little life, and passed away forever; but we are assured that whatever forms of existence are found throughout the universe "in the dispensation of the fulness of times" will be "gathered together in one" (literally headed up in Christ);" and according to their several capabilities, made eternally at one with their Creator.

The truth thus carefully elaborated by Paul is in full accord with the general teaching of Scripture, that Christ was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and that God will, through him, make all things new; so that there shall be no more more curse, neither sorrow nor sighing, but he himself shall be all in all. The statement bars the possibility of any single creature remaining forever in a state of sin or suffering. And when the Augustinian concedes the fundamental postulate, that all men must live forever, his strongest arguments will fail to shake the Origenist's position, that they must all, sooner or later, be brought to holiness and happiness.

CAN THE POSTULATE THEN BE TRUE?

He, therefore, who has any faith in the Holy Writ, is compelled to ask, whether this theory, which puts Scripture in such direct opposition to itself, can really be as certain as both sides take for granted. If it be not—if man be not absolutely indestructible, or if God has not declared that he will never destroy him, the difficulty is at once removed. For everlasting, that is, irremediable, destruction would satisfy the declarations of Scripture as to the impenitent sinner's final doom; and at the same sime be quite consistent with its equally plain declarations as to the universal blessedness which is to follow that destruction.

MORTAL MAN.

We need not stay to discuss the metaphysical speculations which Socrates, Plato, and others have drawn from our own inner consciousness. Those great men themselves felt the insecurity of their foundation. And surely nothing could be more precarious than to argue that because some men are conscious of craving for an immortality of happiness, all men must obtain it; or, according to Augustinianism, must possess the immortality whether they obtain the happiness or not. Well would it have been for the church if she had attended to Paul's warnings against philosophy and vain deceit, instead of accepting as revelations from heaven the necessary defective, though, with the light they possessed, noble endeavors of some of the Greek philosophers to "feel after" the truth.

Our appeal is to the Scriptures. But the first thing which strikes us is the entire absence of any single word which attributes immortality to the immaterial part of man's being. It is spoken of, under the name either of soul or of spirit, more than SIXTEEN HUNDRED times, and NOT ONCE is it called immortal, deathless, never-dying, or anything of the kind. Scripture abounds in warnings and entreaties, urging us to save our souls; but it never pleads with us, as popular preaching so constantly does, to save our immortal souls, to have pity on our never dying souls, or to consider where we shall spend eternity. Nay, by beseeching us to save our souls alive, it implies that they will not remain alive forever, unless we save them from death. For instance, to make Ezekiel's warning agree with the Augustinian theory, they would have to be expressed thus;—"The soul that sinneth it shall miserably live forever....He shall surely live happily forever....Shall he then live happily. He shall not live happily. He hath not done all these abominations; he shall surely live forever; his blood shall never be shed....He shall live forever in his iniquity....He shall surely enjoy endless happiness, he shall not suffer endless misery....Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should live miserably forever? saith the Lord God, and not that he should return from his ways and live happily forever?....In his trespass, that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he live forever....He shall save his never-dying soul, that cannot but remain alive forever, from endless wo....For I have no pleasure in the everlasting misery of an immortal being who can never die; wherefore turn yourselves and be happy."

It is alleged however, that the fact of man having been made in the image of God rendered him indestructible. If so, it must have conferred indefeasible immortality on his whole being, and not merely on one part of it; so that there could be no need for him to eat of the tree of life in order that he might live forever, that being already secured by his having been made in the image of God; and the appeal of Eliphaz, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" should have been, "Shall man, though as immortal as God, be more just than he?" But how did his likeness to God confer upon him divine immortality, any more than divine omnipotence, omniscience or omnipresence? Was he made like God in everything? If not, to adduce this fact as proving his immortality, is palpably begging the question. Paul evidently regarded the moral image of God as that in which we were created, when he spoke of our being renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created us, and of our being created after God in righteousness and true holiness.

The text is also adduced, which says, that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul, But the beasts are also said to be "living souls" (Gen. 1: 30, margin); and even inanimate things are said to have been created by Jehovah's breath, "All the host of them by the breath of his mouth." And if the breath of life having been breathed into his nostrils be insisted on, it will be well to remember that an inspired prophet makes a somewhat different use of the fact—"Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?" (Is. 2: 25.) There is nothing here from which we may infer that God will never terminate man's existence.

Again great stress is laid on what I readily admit to be a revealed truth, namely that the human soul can retain its consciousness after the death of the body; indeed, this is not unfrequently spoken of as if it were tantamount to the soul being immortal. But surely the fact of its living for a time without the body, cannot prove that it must live forever; the fact of its surviving the first death, cannot prove that it will survive the second death—that it must and will live through anything: the fact that man is not able to kill the soul cannot prove that God is not able to kill it—especially when Christ has pointedly contrasted man's power to kill the body only, with God's power to destroy both body and soul in Gehenna.

No: Scripture lends no countenance whatever to the philosophic fiction of an immortal soul in a mortal body. Paul closes his great argument on resurrection with the words, "Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor shall not be in vain in the Lord." If there were any security for human immortality, apart from resurrection, his "therefore" would be needless: for our labor in the Lord might be abundantly recompensed in the eternal happiness of our disembodied spirits.—(To be Continued.) *S. EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We hear that Br. S. K. Gibson has been holding a debate with a Methodist minister near Corydon, Iowa. After three days his opponent asked an adjournment; but the people insisted upon the completion of the discussion then and there. The results are quite favorable.——The meetings at Auburn, Ill., after the dedication were of deep interest for some days, with a large attendance. But Br. Calkin's voice failed, and Sr. Prescott was unable to preach, and the meetings were necessarily discontinued. However, five persons were baptized.——Br. Calkins commenced meetings in new fields in the extreme southern portion of Illinois last week—a new field.——A brother in New York (Greene Co.), writes that he has received light on the nature of man through THE TIMES and tracts; and, moreover, that there are a number of Adventists at heart among the Presbyterians, who do not dare to let their light shine. We are sorry for them: they had better be without the light.——A friend in Bates, Ill., says a Presbyterian minister there is preaching upon the Lord's coming, and the people think, or pretend to think, that he is 'going crazy.' Of course.——Br. R. B. Dutton has settled in Linn Co. Iowa, fourteen miles North of Marion and three miles east of Center Point. His address will be Center Point Linn Co. Iowa.——We observe that Br. R. R. York has removed from Portland to Yarmouth, Me.——In another column our readers will find an item of interest concerning Br. D. T. Taylor. He will be heartily welcomed to active labor among us.

He Is Coming.

In all things it is necessary to have a standard. Webster is considered to be a standard of the English language. And the Bible ought to be a standard of Christianity. It contains enough for all to understand what must be believed to be saved. It is not necessary to believe any "creed" or tradition of men; neither will any man be required to give an account to the Judge of the "quick and dead" for not believing the traditions of men. The question is, do men believe the direct testimony of the Holy Scriptures that Jesus is coming. Oh! yes! says one, I believe that Jesus once came; but I do not believe that he will ever come again the second time. What say the Scriptures? "And while they [the disciples] looked steadfastly toward heaven as he [Jesus] went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, who also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up into heaven, shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1: 10-11.)

Can any one in the face of this testimony reject the glorious doctrine of the second personal advent of Jesus the Christ, and at the same time look to him for life and salvation? If you believe that he has already come once you must believe that he will come again in power and great glory. (Mat. 24: 30; ch. 16: 27; Mark 13: 26; John 14: 1-3.) For the Scriptures are just as plain that he will come the second time, as they are that he came the first time. There is no middle ground: you must believe both or reject both. I believe that he once came and offered himself a sacrifice for sinners. I believe that he will appear the second time, in power and glory, as the king of Israel, and rule the earth in righteousness. A. G. GREENE.

Theological Machinery.

This kind of work had maintained its popular and political position from Egypt to A. D. 53, when this class was in sympathy with the magistrates of the law. (Acts 16: 20.) That old Pagan machine got into a terrible fix. Paul started God's work that night, and a reformation began in jail. Who don't see that the devil had power up to this time to work in the same way as formerly with the authorities of earth. Seven years after, Paul had another battle. (Acts 19.) Here we find a god made with hands was worshiped in A. D. 60. Paul attacked it in the name of God, and made a terrible stir among the craftsmen, and the old Pagan church. The officers accused Paul of coming out against the goddess Diana, made with hands. They said, "whom all Asia and the world worshiped." (v. 27.) So we see the same class alive yet. They went perfectly crazy. Some said one thing, and some another. They caught Gaius and others, and cried two hours to their heathen god to deliver them. The town clerk got frightened and ashamed, and interfered, and dismissed the meeting. Please read the nineteenth chapter of Acts, and see if we have not proved that this devil worship has come down to Gentile times, among the pagans of Rome. But the apostle's preaching had such an effect, that there was a division among the Roman churches, and a confused state of things existed until a reformation was made, and they came into an orderly compact. In 306 Constantine undertook the job. After founding Constantinople, in 306, he took a trip into Italy to regulate things concerning their religion. He pretended to see the signs of the cross in the heavens. This oracle manifestation was a new era in the Roman church. Some believed his vision, and some did not; and not until 325 was the Romish church united. It yet had its pagan form, until the papacy began to rise into notice. Papacy seized upon that portion of the pagan worship brought about by Constantine's cross; made a bargain, or compelled the Pagan Romans to give up the gods in their temples, dwellings, and on their persons, making it a crime to worship an idol. They enforced obedience with much trouble. They subdued the Pagans, took the religious throne, and instituted the worshiping of the souls of the apostles, Mary, and other saints. Thus Paganism was grafted into Papacy, and bore the same devilish fruit as the old serpent's gods; i. e., hatred to God and his people. See the book of Martyrs. The grafting was in immortal-soulism, as sure as you live; and this devilish fruit will grow as long as this error of the old serpent is kept alive.

Let us see the old serpent dressed up in his new papal suit, running the old pagan machinery, with the new patent cog wheel of papacy—immortal-soulism—which doubled its power. See Tetzel, claiming to do what no other gods had done before, even the God of heaven. (2 Thes. 2: 4.) Here we have the prophetic power exalted, spoken of by Daniel, Christ, and Paul. See his great teeth, ready to devour his opponents. Said he, "I can save more souls by my grant of indulgences, than Peter can by his preaching in heaven." So he claimed Peter was then in heaven preaching to save souls. See the old serpent's doctrine. Christ told Peter he could not go there until he came again. The Pope, says he is there preaching. Can the Protestants run this cog-wheel in their machinery?

Hear him again. Says the Pope, "My red cross," the one he got from Constantine, "has as much efficacy as Christ." "Draw near, and I will give you leave to commit any sin, by paying me so much money. I can remit sin." Again. "My indulgences can save the immortal souls of the dead, as well as the living; and if you have friends in hell, or purgatory, as soon as your money clinks in the bottom of the Pope's chest, the immortal soul flies immediately up to heaven." Pope Hildebrand claimed the same power. Here is the ripe fruit of the new papal graft into the old Pagan stump. This is what opened Martin Luther's eyes, and he came near breaking up the devil's old machinery, and commenced setting God's to work. The reformation began, and the old pulleys and crooked shafts lay scattered all over Germany. This engineer got one man to work that took an old shaft from Koran of Mahomet, another general of the immortal-soul tribe; i. e. the decrees preached by Calvin. See Buck's Theological Dictionary on decrees. This always was a crooked shaft, and never would run in God's work of free moral agency. That and the pagan and papal gearing of immortal-soulism has been rejected by Luther, Wesley, and others. See Wesley's sermon, Luke 16: 31. He says the doctrine of the soul's going to its reward at death has not the least foundation in the oracles of God; and the thief did not go to heaven with Christ that day, if at all. They could not make the machinery run with this gearing of the Catholic church. It has worn their old machinery out, so that it has become almost ineffectual. It has been running down fast since 1798.

In 1840, the Mohammedans' prophetic time had come, spoken of by the Revelator, and the devils, or demons, started on a new and more lenient plan; i. e., we will take in such Protestants, although our enemies, as will let the old immortal-soul machinery come into the building. A new company was formed of Protestant church members, mostly called Spiritualists, and for the last fifteen years they have done much to entice and decoy people to renounce the Bible, for they see their works must run without it, if at all, which is the fact. To run these gears together is as impossible as to run a miter geer with a bevel, and this is the trouble in our days. There is a clashing with the machinery. They cannot get in the Bible resurrection to run with this old pagan shafting.

A preacher said, "Br. Munger, how do you get hold of the resurrection to make it agree with the Bible? We have had it up in a ministerial class for discussion, and if we admit the thief is safely in heaven, and all saints that have died, we get against a stump. How do your people get along with the clashing?" My brother you have got the devil's old mitre gear in the Lord's word; i. e., immortal-soulism, which the devil, through the serpent, presented in the garden; then it was urged by the Pagans, next by the Papists, and now by their descendants, the Spiritualists, [illegible] we deceiving the kings, and t[illegible]'d; and as you are still [illegible] is old gear rather than [illegible] away, your theological mill [illegible] alway clash with it in. "One Spiritualist, or one Second Advent man," [illegible] he, "will throw a clog that will [illegible]ur whole debate."

This honest confession is a fact in almost ever church in the land. Some are trying to get at the true cause of the clashing; while others are full of vanity and pleasure, which take God's power off; and dead formality, with crooked shafting, unmatched gear, cracked pulleys, and worn-out india rubber belting, with so little power, will never run the theological machinery. This is what's the matter. It is becoming popular again among kings, and others, who are coming back to the old heathen oracles, trying to talk with the dead.

This seeming new to the kings of this generation, they take hold of it, instead of admitting the infallibility of the Papacy, which is now upon its "last legs," and under the "strong delusion," because they have not obeyed the truth, but have loved unrighteousness. (2 Thes. ch. 2.)

What a delusion has fallen upon the "Mother of Harlots." She supposed she could regain her lost power, even after God's professed judgments began to be inflicted, in 1792. Ever since she has been losing ground. Her own children, or supporters, begin to hate her. Italy, once a papal stronghold, has now deserted and turned upon her. France has also left her to shift for herself, as have Austria and Spain. The French government advised the Pope not to accept the dogma of infallibility, even should the Council vote it; but he was under "delusion," and carried away by it; and thus fulfilled the words of Daniel the prophet, who spoke of "the great words" this "little horn" power should utter, against God and his truth and his people. This is the very character named by Paul, who should exalt himself above God, etc. (2 Thes. 2: 4-12.) Verse 12 ends this subject. The rest of the chapter is upon another topic. And we are here reminded that the division of the Bible into chapters and verses was the work of a Popish monk. And in many instances the subjects are so divided as to confuse the mind of any but a careful reader. See chs. 4 and 5 of 1 Thessalonians; where the apostle's discourse upon the Lord's coming is broken in two.

Oh! what a wicked power the Papacy has been! No wonder Paul called it "That wicked!" He said it should be revealed: it has been; and has accomplished its wicked work; and has now gone into the prophesied position—on the waters, or at the mercy of the people. (Rev. 17: 15.) There is no beast, or political power, to carry the Scarlet Lady now. She is on the waters, ready to sink like a mill stone, very soon. What a sign of the times is thus plainly before us!

Since this power began to wane, another, of the same stamp of immortal-soulism has come up, in proportion as the first has failed. I mean Spiritism—pretended talking with the dead. See this child of the Mother of Harlots. It has a new dress but cannot hide the family characteristics. It cannot deceive God's people, who walk in the light of his word; but those who reject this, will walk in darkness, and adopt the popular view of communication with the dead. See the Beechers, and others fanning the popular flame. This is why ignorant people are honestly fulfilling Peter's prediction. (2 Pet. 3: 1-4.) We see a fulfillment—scoffers asking—"Where is the promise of his coming?" on every hand. "They are willingly ignorant," just were the people of Noah's day. And Peter says it is just before the burning day that these scoffers should appear; and he also implies that at the same time there would be a class proclaiming that that day was coming; for unless some were saying, "It is coming!" there would be no force in the scoffing inquiry, "Where is the promise."

All the anti-christian principles are being gathered in one host. And when Christ comes, I think there will be only two classes—the literalists, and the immortal-soulist, who in all their combined forms of error, will be the anti-christ. Yet many involved in this error will see the delusion; and indeed, many are receiving the true light. Some will come out for the Lord, and others will draw back into darkness. In such, God will have no pleasure, as he says.

This talking with the dead, is becoming popular with the kings of the earth, and will result in bringing on the battle of the great day of God Almighty. (Rev. 16: 12-16.) The sixth vial was poured out in 1840, undoubtedly. Since then Spiritism has come up, and its votaries have gone forth working their false miracles. What follows next? "Behold I come as a thief!" says Jesus. We are, then, driven to the conclusion that Christ is very near, at least.

The unparalled wickedness, licentiousness and treachery among the people, denote the coming again of the days of Noah and Lot, that Christ gave as a sign of his return. Again we see the lukewarm state of the church, which was predicted of the last days. (2 Tim. 3: 1-8.) The mould of prophecy is filled exactly. And all this class hate the coming of Christ, of course; as a guilty bride would a virtuous, absent husband.

The great battle of opinions is to be over this question of immaterialism. And the longer time continues the more visible, the more marked will be the division among those who receive evidence of the Scripture. But the masses will disregard God's word, and reject it; and there will be but little faith on the earth when Christ comes. There is a growing disposition to seek new revelations, instead of adhereing to the old. These pretended new revelation are the productions of morbid minded men and women; persons subject to mesmeric influences. Of this sort are the Shakers, the Mormons, and other followers of "visions" in these days, including the Spiritists who make the largest and loudest claim of any. I believe these all are under the influence of demons. And if I can but get the people who read this to investigate the subject, my object will be accomplished; and you can expect to receive more light from the pens of competent writers.

HIRAM MUNGER.

On Discerning the Signs of the Times.

It is natural for men to act in view of some future glorious development of the society to which they belong. The old Romans in the meridian of their [illegible] anticipated for the Eternal City endless dominion over the nations. Other cities, in the day of their ascendency, had also done the same. The hundred-gated Thebes, in the culmination of her glory, dreamed not of coming desolation; nor did Nineveh, Tyre, or Babylon. Yet to them the day of judgment and retribution came. There is but one Power whose future is surely and endlessly glorious. It is that kingdom the fiery splendors of which rose before the [illegible] of the captive prophet in Babylon, many centuries ago, and the coming of which was the bright vision of the age when our Savior appeared. The error of men of that age was that they did not understand its nature and so failed to discern the signs of the times.

We are exposed to a like error. There is before us a future of that kingdom greater and more glorious than we can conceive. But Christian teachers do not agree in their conceptions of what that future is,

In the result, in general terms, they agree. God is to be victorious, his foes destroyed, his kingdom established and all things reorganized. But in the process through which these results are reached they disagree radically and fundamentally.

There are those, and they are the majority, who anticipate a renovation of all things by the preaching of the gospel, attended by the power of the Holy Spirit, pervading every department of society, government, commerce, education, the arts and sciences, social life are to be thoroughly pervaded by the spirit of Christ, and he is to reign over a reorganized world. These results will not be gained without a conflict. Opposition will arise from error and sin. The foundations of society will be assailed by pantheism and infidelity; systems of atheistic materialism will exert a fearful power; sensualism and luxury will corrupt society and hasten its degradation and ruin. But out of every controversy and co[illegible] the truth will come triumphant and purified from all forms of errors; h[illegible] and more powerful developments of God will be made; error and corrupt organizations will be exposed by their evil results; till finally Christ will prevail, and renovate the world and make all things new. Providential judgments and retributions will be employed; but the victory will be gained by intellectual and moral power, and to this issue all things tend.

Those who anticipate such a future will read the signs of the times accordingly. They will expect developments of evil and fearful conflicts; but will not be afraid. The tendencies of the age to scientific atheism will not terrify them. They will expect a higher inspiration of God in the sphere of Christian scholarship, more thorough and radical investigation, and final victory. That evil should put forth all its power will not surprise them. They will only see that the final conflict and victory are hastening on. They will be ever elastic and joyful, and see in the events of the age the signs of the near advent of the great day of victory. The gospel will be proclaimed in every land, and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

But there are not a few of those, and their number is increasing, who look for no such intellectual and moral victory. They look for a visible and personal revelation of Christ, to defeat his enemies, to raise and glorify the saints of past ages, and with them to judge the nations. After defeating and destroying the organizations that have desolated the earth and debased and corrupted the nations, he will reorganize society under the rule of the risen saints, and with them reign at head of a universal empire. In the details of this empire they differ. But in one thing they agree: that it will be a theocracy, administered by permanent rulers, not chosen by the election of the nations, but ordained for the great work by God. They do not agree in the details of the physical changes to be wrought in this world at the coming of Christ; but they all concede that they will be vast and stupendous, fitting the world for its final and highest destiny.

Those who anticipate this future entertain no hope of the universal conversion of men and the reorganization of society by the preaching of the gospel and the spiritual power of the Holy Spirit. Such influences and all missionory enterprises will but take out the elect of God from an unbelieving world, before Christ shall come to redeem his saints and destroy his foes, treading the great wine press of wrath, from which shall flow blood to the horses' bridles.

The holding of such views, of necessity, effects the power of discerning the signs of the times. All that denotes increase of wickedness and tends to produce despair of success until Chrift shall come in person will be noticed and magnified. Some will even go to the extreme of declaring Christianity, with its present system of effort, an utter failure, so far as the enterprise of converting the world and reorganizing society is concerned, as was done by the president of one of our New England colleges.

Even if it is God's purpose to convert the world by the preaching of the gospel and a great increase of moral and intellectual power, those who hold the views that we have set forth will not be likely to see any signs of it.

They will rather note the increase of scientific atheism, the power of that infidelity that professes to aim at a moral standard higher than that of the Bible, the extensive corruption of schemes of social reform in the Old World and the New, the increase and spread of every form of sensualism, the extensive and intensified corruption of governments, the fearful extent of bribery in legislatures, and the power of wealthy corporations and political rings to shape legislation at their pleasure, in spite of honesty and justice. And, as they gaze on such fearful forms of evil, they will have no faith in possibility of intellectual and moral developments that shall paralyze the power of error and sin in in every form, and triumphantly effect the regeneration of human society.

The present missionary enterprise was not originated with any such view of the future destines of the kingdom of God. Such were not the views of Edwards, Bellamy, Hopkins, Fuller, Cary, Ward, Brainard, Martyn, and others great pioneers in the work of modern missions. Those who now sustain the work of missions, as a general fact, do not hold these views.

And yet, as we have said, their power seems to be increasing. The more recent commentaries, that are tending to supersede Scott, Barns, and others of that school, are tending to undermine the views on which the missionary enterprise now rests. This is true of Alford, Ellicott, Lange, and his colaborers—especially Dr. Lillie, Auberlen, and Riggenbach. To this we must add the writings of English and American millennarians, the older and the more recent. Brown, in England, has written an able work in defense of the spiritual coming of Christ; but there is at present no adequate counterpoise to the weight of the authority of the leading commentators, whom we have mentioned. This state of things is not salutary or safe. There is gradual process of undermining going on in our young men and theological students, which will in time show its results. We call it a process of undermining because we believe that the principles on which the missionary enterprise rests are true, and the hopes it inspires well-founded.

At all events, if it is not so, we need to know it. The fundamental thing at this time is to have a true conception of what God intends to do, and in light of this to study his providence, in order that we may truly discern the signs of the times.

What are the professors of our theological seminaries intending to do on this matter? What our leading divines and pastors? Do they not see the current of which we have spoken? Have they nothing to say about it?

It is not a mere question of prophetical interpretation, though it involves it. But it requires a thoughtful analysis of the existing system of this world as presented in the Bible—a system composed of successive generations of depraved men, exposed to temptation, and able to revolt from any standard, however high, even as, in fact, they will revolt from the millennial standard. The advocates of the personal reign of Christ raise the question. Can permanent governments be organized from such materials? Can there be a perfect state of society till there shall be incorruptible governments; and can this be till the risen saints reign? Is not society based on successive generations of men who are wholly depraved at the outset and need regeneration, too unstable in its elements ever to form a social organization perfect, permanent, and free from decline? Nothing like it has been seen. New England has had declines, and does not even now hold her own. Nor does any part of Christendom do better.

Think of New York and her corruptions. How is this great commercia metaopolis ever to be made thoroughly Christian? Think of the controlling forces at Washington, and at the state capitals. Think of the bribery of legislators, and the purchase of judges, and the frauds in elections, astounding and undeniable. Look at the increasing tendencies to the various forms of sensualism and self-indulgence. Look at the extent to which the spirit of the world pervades and paralyzes the churches. Consider the assaults of error on the very foundations of society. If, then, Christendom has not as yet been able to hold her own, how can the elements of society in idolatrous nations, debased by the evil influences of past ages, be so elevated as to furnish the materials of a true and stable social system? Is not a new dispensation needed? Are not higher and personal revelations of God indispensable? Are not perfect and permanent rulers, organized under Christ, the only hope of the world?

That these questions cannot be truly answered in the negative we do not say. That there are not intellectual and moral forces that can meet all the exigencies of the coming ages we would not imply. But we do not affirm that the views of the future renovation of the world by moral power commonly entertained are not sufficiently profound and radical. The magnitude of the forces of evil to be encountered and overcome is not thoroughly estimated, nor the degree of intellectual and moral power needed by the church to solve the great problem of the renovation of human society, and the introduction of the reign of the saints on the earth with Christ.

To answer the questions of those who teach the personal coming and reign of Christ, we must, at least, carefully consider their full import, and gain truer and more thoroughly developed ideas of what is involved in the perfect renovation of human society, and by the forces by which it is to be produced. By this, as well as by a more profound study of prophecy, we may, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, be enabled truly to conceive of the glorious future which lies before the mind of God, and in sympathy with him truly to discern the signs of the times. Shall it be done? —Edward Beecher, in N. Y. Independent.

Our Pulpit.

Sermon.[1]

BY O. R. FASSETT.

"Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God." (Rom. 5: 1, 2.)

The Christian Adventists are regarded by many as the most foolish, inconsistent, undeserving and least to be considered of all classes or sects of religionists of the present day. And why? Because of our faith and hope. And because that faith and hope, too, is the very same as in the text is set forth by the apostle! Well, be it so then. It shall not drive us from our position, nor destroy our faith and hope, nor mar our peace. It does not harm us. Those who are in the light and knowledge of the truth, and in the experience which such light and knowledge affords, can well bear the sneers, and contempt and ridicule of those less favored, and greatly pity them in return.

What we regret is, the effect on others in deterring them from coming to the light and truth by the manner in which those who have the truth are treated, and the disesteem in which the truth of God itself is held; as well as the formidable barrier which such ignorance and prejudice erects against the progress and advancement of the truth throughout the world.

What though we be thus disesteemed? Others, and better, and wiser men than we have been so regarded in former ages and generations by the men of their day. The holy prophets, and the apostles of the Lamb; the glorious company of the martyrs of Jesus, "of whom the world was not worthy;" the bold, and intrepid, and fearless reformers. Jesus, himself, was accused of having "a devil!" And they "called the master of the house Beelzbub!" Those Scribes and Pharisees said, "We see!" and considered Jesus and his followers in the dark, and in error irredeemable, while they themselves were blinder than bats, and Jesus said to them, ["Ye blind guides!" "There are none so blind as those who will not see!" is a true saying, and proved true in the history of the men of that generation who despised Jesus and his sayings, and the doctrines he taught, and afterward crucified the Lord! "If [they have done these things in the green tree, will they not in the dry?"

One thing is apparent, and that is, Christian Adventists escape the wo denounced against a certain class: "Wo unto you when all men speak well of you." For it is certainly not true that we have much flatteringly said of us; and it is well for us that it is so in the weakness of human nature. May we not lay claim to the promise: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." (Mat. 5: 11, 12.)

But let us paraphrase the text, and see what light and truth there is in it for our edification.

"Being justified by faith."

"Faith:" What is it? It is belief. It is crediting testimony or truth, with facts or evidence in proof, and upon which to base such belief. In a theological sense, it is a cordial assent of the mind to the truth and doctrines of divine revelation, or the Scriptures. It is not merely intellectual conviction, or belief in the head without the heart being interested; but it is a belief of the mind with the affections of one's being enlisted. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. ch. 10.) It is said of the holy man and woman in the past respecting their faith in "the promises;" being "persuaded of them," they "embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." (Heb. 11: 13.) A true living faith then, is that which, with the conviction of the mind, leads one to heartily embrace the truth of God and identify his whole being with that truth, and thus become a living witness to the world of it. "Ye are my witnesses."

"Justification:" What is it? It is a state of pardon, and when one is forgiven all his sins through the atonement in Jesus. It is absolution from all sin; and a condition wherein "the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.) It is a state where sin is not imputed, but "the righteousness of God," which is complete, is imputed to the believer. "Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." (Rom. 4: 6-8.)

"Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds."
—Milton.

In this state of justification, one, though he has been a sinner of the deepest dye, crimsoned in guilt and crime, "the chief of sinners" yet is regarded in the sight of even the Holy God pure and spotless as an unfallen angel! And ultimately the church "washed," "cleansed," and "sanctified," will be "presented blameless and faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

"Being justified by faith:" What faith? What belief? Anything which the imagination conceives to be true, or artful men, or deceived men may teach or require us to believe as true? Certainly not. There is a saying: "No matter what a man believes if he is only honest." But never was there a more untruthful or soul-destroying sentiment than that. According to it a person may as well believe in any of the idol deities of the heathen world, as in the living and true God. Or in Buddha, Zoroaster, Confucius, Mohammed, the Pope of Rome, Joe Smith, Ann Lee, Andrew Jackson Davis, Theodore Parker, or any other name, as in the name of Jesus our Lord! According to that sentiment a man will be equally justified if he believes in the Zendavesta of the Persians, the Hindoo Shasters, the Koran, the Book of Mormon, or the modern revelations of Spiritism, as in the Bible, the Book of God! Away with the false statement. If we are to be "justified by faith," something is necessary for us to believe, by which we are to be justified.

What is it? I answer; that which Abraham believed; for he is "the father of all them that believe." (Rom. 4: 11.) And "they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham;" and "are blessed with faithful Abraham." (Gal. 3: 7, 9.) "For what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was accounted [imputed] to him for righteousness." (Rom. 4: 3; Gal. 3: 6.) "Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us, also, to whom it shall be imputed if we believe." (Rom. 4: 23 24.) Believe what? What Abraham did, "Who is the father of us all," and by which he was justified.

What then, did Abraham believe? "Abraham believed God." Concerning what? That he should "have a son," "Isaac," the child of miracle and of promise. "Who against hope believed in hope," and staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able to perform." (Rom. 4: 18-22.) Was this all? No. He believed in another "seed," God's Son, God's Isaac, of whom his own son Isaac was a figure or type. The promised "seed of the woman" was to come through him, and his son Isaac by lineal descent, in whom all the promises concerning the future life, and the future and eternal inheritance centered; therefore "the gospel" was preached unto Abraham: in thee shall all nations be blessed." (Gal. 3: 8.) Furthermore, "to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." (Gal. 3: 16.) Hence says our Lord, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad." (John 8: 56.) Abraham saw in his son Isaac the figure of him who was to come as well as by faith in the promises relating to that coming Redeemer.

Isaac, carrying the wood upon which he was to be offered as a burnt offering, up the mount, was a type of Christ bearing his own cross to Calvary. Isaac, the only son beloved, laid upon the altar, a sacrifice, with the Father standing by to witness and execute the decree, was a lively type. Of God's only beloved Son made an offering for sin, with the Father (for the sake of the human race), saying, "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the man, that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts." For "it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief, when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." Isaac saved from death, and "the ram caught in the thicket" offered in his stead as a substitute, typified the true sacrificial offering: "The Lamb of God." And when in the mind of Abraham, Isaac was dead and burnt to ashes as a burnt offering, yet escaped and was alive, "he received him in a figure," and saw the resurrection of the true seed. Righteousness will be imputed to us, also, "if we believe on him that raised our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." (Rom. 4: 24, 25.)

What more did our father Abraham believe? He believed in the resurrection of the dead, and in the redemption of the purchased inheritance. He believed not only in the promises contained in the typical covenant, that his "seed" by lineal descent through Isaac should "inherit the land wherein" he dwelt as "a stranger:" "all the land of Canaan, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates," and that "in the fourth generation" under the law. (Gen. ch. 15.) But he also believed in the promises contained in the antitypical covenant, "the covenant confirmed in Christ," that he himself and "his seed," "Christ," and "all them that believe," "of all nations," should inherit "all the land" included by the four cardinal points of the compass, and bounded only by the limits of the globe itself; and that under grace: the grace which would redeem him and all "his seed by faith" from the dead. (Gen. 13: 14-17.) For this promised inheritance "confirmed of God in Christ," was to be possessed by him after his own death and burial. (Gen. 15: 8, 15), and after his lineal descendants had under the law possessed the land. (vv. 13-16.) Such is the interpretation Paul gives to the covenant promises made to "the father of the faithful," as will be seen by the following Scriptures:

"For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." "It is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed (as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations), before him who quickeneth the dead, and calleth these things which be not as though they were." (Rom. 4: 13-17.) "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty-two years after, cannot disannul that it should make the promise of more effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise." Those who are to be inheritors with Abraham and Christ his seed, the apostle declares to be "they which be of faith:" for they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. ch. 3.)

It is apparent from these Scriptures that this covenant promise anticipates the resurrection from the dead, and the final restitution of the earth, as declared by all the holy prophets and the sacred writers. And Stephen affirms that Abraham himself died without inheriting "a foot's breadth" of the territory promised him. (Acts, ch. 7.) So does Paul speak of many of the heirs of promise—"these all died in faith, not having received the promises." (Heb. ch. 11.)

If therefore we would be justified, and have in possession the fruits of the Spirit in full enjoyment, with the blessed hope the gospel affords, we must have the same faith in the same promises which God has given; and thus believing God, we please him, as did Abraham, and it is counted unto us for righteousness.

"We have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Quietness and tranquillity pervade the bosom. At reconciliation with God no alarms or fears agitate the breast—all's well. Present communion with God is secured, and an everlasting dwelling place in the presence of Immanuel anticipated. One is at rest within. "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." Peace as a flowing stream and as the waves of the sea pass through and overflow the soul. And believers in Jesus experience the truth of the promise, "In me ye have peace." "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." (John 14: 27; 16: 33.) Though in the world they have tribulation, yet this peace reigns within amid the tumult and war of human passions, and they are of good cheer, as Jesus says to them, "I have overcome the world," giving them hope of final victory, too. And "mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace." (Ps. 37: 37.) Oh! how calm his setting sun! As the unclouded sun serenly sets behind the Western horizon on a calm Sabbath evening, to begin its circuit in the morning of another week; so do the believers go to rest till the morning break, when they shall awake from the slumbers of the grave to see an immortal day!

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
Is privileged beyond the common walks of life:
Quite on the verge of heaven."

"By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand."

All the divine blessings of God's grace flow through this channel to the human race. "Our Lord Jesus Christ" is "the way, the truth, and the life." He is the "door;" and it is by him we have "access" to the inexhaustible treasury of God's "grace." Oh! what riches, and wealth, and abundance are in store; from which to draw constant and unremitting supplies for all time and eternity! "Faith" gives boldness to approach unto Jesus in our poverty, and ask him to request this abundance to be given us according to our needs; and it is granted without a scornful look, an upbraiding word, willingly and cheerfully ever more, and as often as we desire to come! Thanks be to his blessed name!

In this grace "we stand," and have found firm and sure footing at last. From the "horrible pit, out of the miry clay" he brings the believer up to set his "feet upon a rock," and "establish" his "goings." And how many can say: "And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God: many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the Lord." (Ps. 40: 2, 3.)

"And rejoice in hope of the glory of the Lord."

The children of God having received the spirit of adoption, cannot fail to be joyful. They rejoice in both what the Lord has done for them, and in what he will do for them in the eternal future. "And more particularly "in hope of the glory of God." Hope is made up of expectation and desire. "We are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for. But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." (Rom. 8: 24, 25.)

The infidel's charge against Christians is: "The Christian's Christ is a dead savior. Christians receive all their inspiration from the past." It is to be regretted that this charge is too true respecting modern Christians when they dwell so much, and contend that we must dwell alway upon a crucified Christ! "Christ crucified," it is maintained, should be our constant theme. This was not true of apostolic times, nor apostolic churches. Had it been, the Jews, who crucified the Lord, and the Gentile world would have desired nothing better, and would not have marred the peace of the church. They would have said, "We know he is crucified—thank God for that! But they preached "Jesus and the resurrection," and proclaimed "through Jesus the resurrection of the dead;" and this "grieved the people" and disturbed their peace, that Jesus was alive. By his resurrection from the dead the church was "begotten again to a lively hope," and that is "the resurrection from the dead at Christ's second appearing," which Paul declares to be "that blessed hope." Hence he says: "The grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in the present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." (Tit. 2: 11-13.) It was for this hope he contended world-wide among Jews, Greeks, and barbarians; with Jewish councils, and Gentile powers and kings; for it he was "bound with chains," which hope he affirms to be "the hope of the twelve tribes" before Agrippa, as he made his appeal, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 26: 68.)

From this it will be seen that Christians, contrary to the infidel's charge, "draw their inspiration" not "from the past," but from both the past and the future: "the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow:" embracing the two comings of our Lord. "Now we are the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3: 2, 3.) This attitude of hope believers occupy, reliant on the fulfillment of the "exceeding great and precious promises" revealed and made to Abraham, which constitutes "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Brethren, your faith and hope, as Christian Adventists, is the same as that set forth in the text this day. You have the peace and joy which justifying faith brings to the hearts of true believers, and you do this day "rejoice in hope of the glory of God," soon to be revealed, in the glorious appearing of Jesus, your Redeemer and King—the resurrection of the just to an immortal life—the restitution of the earth to its Eden beauty, and the restored Paradise of God in the descent of "the heavenly city, whose builder and maker is God;"—together with the re-establishment of the kingdom of God on earth under the dominion of "the Lord from heaven, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."

Let me finally say to you, that heaven regards you with special interest now as you wait the near advent of the Coming One, and as you love his appearing; and those of you who have suffered for your faith and hope in the several churches to which you have belonged, and some of whom have been turned out of these modern synagogues, rejoice that you are counted worthy thus to suffer. "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, and that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." (Is. 66: 5.)

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 21, 1871.

IN Br. Barr's sermon, in TIMES of Oct. 31, for "Christophia," read Ethiopia.

PRESSURE of duties in other departments has prevented the preparation of much editorial matter for the last two papers. But the space is well filled by other and able pens.

WE trust none of our readers, will fail to read Edward Beecher's article upon the signs of the times. The spiritualizing theory must have been thoroughly shaken to have called forth such an appeal to its friends from such a source.

WE are happy to be able to state to our readers that in a meeting of Br. D. T. Taylor with the Castleton (Vt.) church, and others interested, held some time last month, he was fully restored to the confidence of his brethren, and by them "commended to the fellowship of the flock of God." We could scarcely chronicle better news. He has our cordial sympathy, and we heartily welcome him to new and wider fields of usefulness.

OUR ANNUAL MEETING.

It will be remembered that this is primarily a business meeting. We want our business men, men who love to do business for the Lord to be present, that we may have their counsel and advice upon questions of perhaps vital moment to our cause in the West.

We also wish our ministers to be present. They are better acquainted with the wants of the people than any others can be. Let all who can of these classes come.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The church in Chicago will do all they can to entertain those who come. But in order to render the burden as light as possible for them, it has been decided that those in attendance should get a portion of their meals at some public house. The friends in Chicago will furnish lodging and breakfast to their guests; who will provide their own dinners and suppers. We shall make arrangements so that this can be done at an expense of about fifty cents a day—a sum much less than would be entailed by extra traveling expenses, were we to meet at any other point than Chicago.

Let this be understood: the church at Chicago cannot provide for us at this time in any other way than this. Let us all go to see them, and to attend to our own high duties; and at the same time help and encourage the society there.

There will probably be preaching every evening and most of the afternoons.

DISCUSSION WITH ELD. BRADEN.

After a long delay, arising from causes neither of the parties could easily control, we have at last definitely arranged for the discussion with Eld. Clark Braden. It will be published simultaneously in THE TIMES and The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, Ohio, commencing with the first issues of these journals in January 1872, and continuing about six months, each week's issue containing an article from each of the debaters. The subjects of discussion will be the nature of man and the future state of the righteous and of the wicked.

Eld. Braden has an established reputation as a scholar and debater, and the more popular view of the questions in dispute will not suffer in his hands. And if he can prove that the prevalent notions are right, and that we are in the wrong, we shall be happy to abandon error, and feel sure that the mass of our readers will go with us. However, we do not anticipate any such result. We have no doubt we are right in our doctrine of the nature of man and the future punishment, and expect to show that our teaching upon those points is in exact harmony with the sacred Scriptures. Meanwhile our readers cannot fail to be interested and benefitted by a perusal of the latest orthodox ideas upon what Eld. Braden truly designates as one of the "vital issues" of the age.

AN EXPRESSION OF ORTHODOX INDIGNATION.

Our three months list, or copies of THE TIMES sent on trial for that term, brings us some interesting correspondence. Sometimes it is the expression of joy over newly found light; and again it is the out-flow of evidently honest and zealous, but certainly misguided indignation. Last week brought the following missive, which will not fail to interest all our readers. We hope yet to shake hands with the writer as a full-blown Adventist. He says:

MR. EDITOR, Sir: I have received and read your paper labeled THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, which I suppose my son of Clinton, Iowa, has signed for and sent to me. But I am sorry he has been led away by such nonsense; for by close investigation and comparing it with the divine Scriptures, such I find it to be: for in your writings you deny the immortality of the soul; also, you deny there being a place of future and eternal punishment for the wicked, and labor to do away with it. By so doing you condradict Christ to his face. You are going about the world leading astray silly women and men also, that must be of a weak mind; men that do not understand nor believe the Scriptures; or else, you have deceived them by your blind infatuation and your deception into your unscriptural nonsense. It is true you have some truth with your error. The devil, also, will tell a little truth in order that he may the better deceive.

I shall not attempt to enter into argument with you at present. I don't wish to offend, but I can maintain my statements by the Scriptures. And if you have any true Scripture knowledge you may deny my statements if you can.

—It will be seen that our good brother fails to understand us. We do not deny future eternal punishment: we do deny eternal conscious punishment, or the everlasting duration of evil. As to offence, we have been called by too many hard names to take offence at this honest out-break of feeling. And now we have one favor to ask of our brother; that he will at once proceed to look up the passages of Scripture that satisfactorily demonstrate to his own mind the immortality of the soul. We would not have him believe anything simply because we teach it, but would like to have him look over this subject—not with his recollection of how the Bible reads, but Bible in hand, comparing Scripture with Scripture. Our word for it he will realize the truth of the language of a late writer—"I defy the most prejudiced man in Christendom to shake himself free of the central doctrine of Life in Christ when once he has fairly looked it in the face!"

From Our Letter Box.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

A correspondent writes:—

"Elder O. R. Fassett's congregations in San Francisco exhibit a regular increase in numbers, and he himself appears to have gained in pulpit freedom and emphasis since his first Sunday's experience in California. Sunday morning, Nov. 5, the Elder preached a running commentary discourse on 1 Thes. ch. 1—a sermon full of meat for those who are disposed to understand and digest the solid things of the word."

Our correspondent farther says:

"Sacramento, the capital of this State, should be made Advent missionary ground this winter. The Legislature meets the first or second week in December, and continues in session for four months, or more. There will be a great opportunity to meet many leading men from all parts of the State, and let them know what Advent truths are. I understand that Eld. Grant thinks seriously of coming out here this winter. It is to be hoped that he will repeat his missionary visit. If he would spend a week in the Capital, in discussion with some orthodox minister—the only antagonists that could be sought—he would disturb the common-wealth.

And still farther, from the same letter.

"Two deacons for the Advent church were ordained yesterday (Sunday) by Elds. Howell and Fassett; the ceremony simple and impressive. Eld. Fassett briefly set forth by Scripture reading and plain comment the office, the duties and responsibilities of deacons, and then the prayer of invocation and ordination was made by Eld. Howell.

"An invoice of 100 copies of Constable's 'Duration and Nature of Future Punishment' has been sold by one of our leading book firms. Ten thousand advertising bills, like the one enclosed have been scattered throughout the city.

"It is reported on pretty good authority that there are two and perhaps three Episcopal ministers in this city who discard the doctrine of eternal torment—so stating to their more intimate parishioners. It is a singular fact; but if you'll take note you will see that the English church clergy are most open to conviction on 'the Life and Death question.' I have known three leading Episcopal ministers in the East, one a D. D., who are outspoken, in their parish talks on the subject,—saying nothing of their new views, however, in the pulpit! I cannot believe otherwise than that 'all of a sudden'—as the rushing of a mighty wind,—there is going to be in this country an almost entire sweeping away of the eternal hell-fire dogma. That will not be the conversion of every body. Oh! no! But under the truth more will be converted—many more—in proportion, than hitherto. I think the eternal tormentists, who excommuicate men who do not agree with them on this point will be 'shamed' before the GREAT DAY.'"

From Mary A Tibbetts, Volga, Ind.

After an absence of four weeks visiting the dear friends of Cincinnati and vicinity, I was permitted to return home in peace and safety, though feeble in body, through the fatigue attending the mission in which I was so much interested. I spent a pleasant season in the home of my dear children, who I am happy to say are with me "in like precious faith," and then in good earnest set about the work so dear to my heart, that of soliciting the aid and sympathy of those who are living and waiting for the coming of our Lord and Savior from heaven to set up his glorious kingdom upon the new earth. I found a number of this class at Cumminsville, who rejoiced with me in the prospective "restitution of all things spoken of by all the prophets since the world began." And when I told them it had become our duty to build a house of worship to the Lord from which should go forth the promulgation of these glorious truths so sadly ignored by the different denominations of the land, they were glad, and not only gave me their sympathy and prayers, but also material aid to help forward its erection.

Next, I proceeded to Cincinnati, where also I found warm and loving friends ready to receive me and cooperate with me in my work, among whom the person from whom I received the largest amount, was Br. Edward Harwood, a most benevolent man and faithful steward over the large investment the Lord has committed to his trust. Also Prof. Brown comforted me much, and with his good wife helped me on my way rejoicing. Others whose worthy names are not here recorded made my heart glad by their good words of gospel cheer and help so far as the present demand for help in other directions permitted. For while thousands are left homeless and destitute by the devastations that have swept over portions of our land, carrying destruction and death in their path, I felt to only ask the crumbs of their benevolence, while the loaves might be given to the surviving sufferers.

We all feel exceeding grateful to our friends for what has been done for us, and yet much more will be required before the building is completed. But we are trusting the Lord to open the hearts of other friends to aid us a little in the future as these have done in the past. Those who can not be a window or a door in this house devoted to the second coming of our Savior, can at least be a few pounds of nails, all of which will be equally acceptable.

We wish it known that we believe in but one more coming of our Lord, according to the declaration of the angels, "this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." The Bible account of this subject, is very different from that of modern theologians round about us. They preach the Lord comes every time one is converted, every time one dies, every time they have a good meeting; he came at the day of Pentecost. Then, I would like to ask for information, which of all these is the second coming? We read of only of two in the sacred oracles. How surprising it is that so many are yet willing to take human tradition for their faith and practice rather than the plain declarations of the word of God.

But while this is sadly the case, I do rejoice that thousands are breaking away from these trammels and turning to the testimones of him "who spake as never man spake." We expect as Adventists to suffer for the truth's sake, at least until the public mind will become willing to search the Scriptures, with a view to take them as they read unbiased by early training or former prejudices. I trust the day is not far distant when this will be the case with many noble minds now in error concerning what the Scriptures do teach. Our infant membership is still happy in the truth and love of God, and disposed "to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints" according to the injunction of the apostle.

We as a church are still searching the Scriptures, hoping thereby to "grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth." We receive no teaching that is not founded on "thus saith the Lord." Should any dear friend feel disposed to send us a token of their interest in our noble undertaking, they will please address myself or the treasurer Samuel Tibbetts, and they will have the united thanks of the church.

As usual, while in Cincinnati, I visited the Widow's Home, and held meeting with the dear old ladies, many of them mothers in Israel: I talked to them of Jesus and his glorious coming and read many beautiful portions of God's word; especially tried to lead their thoughts from their present elegant and comfortable home to the New Jerusalem, when it would come down upon the new earth. They seemed to enjoy it very much, also, the beautiful hymn, "The happy time is coming," which is so descriptive of what awaits the saints at the coming of our Lord. The matron is a most devoted Christian, and makes those aged ones happy under her care. It was a most interesting occasion, but like all other earthly enjoyments, the time for parting came, and I left them with the promise of seeing them again next year, if the Lord would permit.

From John M Snook.

According to an appointment I went to help Br. A. E. Babcock in a meeting at Millville, Ohio, some forty odd miles S. E. of Columbus. Owing to circumstances that I could not control, I did not get there till Thursday morning, when I found the brethren feeling very sad and heavy. Two days previous, Br. Troxell, who was highly esteemed by all, met with a terrible accident by the falling of a sand bank upon him, breaking his leg and crushing him badly. One lump of gravel weighing several hundred pounds was found on his back and shoulders. But very little hope of his life was entertained; yet the church cried to God earnestly for him. On the following Monday consciousness returned, and with it strong hopes of his recovery.

The brethren there have met with much opposition, and just previous to this meeting the elements had been stirred to the core on predestination or election; so much so that we felt it necessary to take the matter up and meet it, which we think we did effectually. But time alone can declare the complete results. The apparent effects of our labors at this time were an addition of nine to the church, and we think that others will follow soon. One young man of promise and of good report for morality, who was baptised and united with the Baptists at the age of ten years, but had backslidden, stated in effect as follows:

That having been taught the Calvinistic theories of election, yet if one could backslide, and he knew he had done so, it was impossible for them to be renewed; and having been taught the immortality of the soul, and the eternal torment of the lost, he had concluded there was no hope for him. The devil had many times of late pressed him to curse God for giving him an existence, only to be continued in a state of conscious torment to all eternity; and so he was driven to the very verge of infidelity, the very opposition stirred up against us had caused the entrance to his heart of God's word, which giveth light and joy. Like the prodigal he has returned to his Father's house, only to find a hearty reception and the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. Bless God for truth!

This church has a pleasant chapel, mostly paid for.

On Saturday, Nov. 11, I went to Cecil, Ohio, to fill an appointment for Br. Babcock. I enjoyed a good free time with that dear people, whom I had not seen before. They have a very convenient chapel, which, when completed and seated, will be very pleasant. The brethren both here and at Millville were liberal in helping to meet our expenses. God bless them. "God loveth the cheerful giver." They seem to think it true that "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Envy.

Envy is a feeling that is universally abhorred. Even those who are subject to it, will not own it, thus showing that they too are ashamed of it.

Envy is a discontented brooding over another's success, mixed with a malicious desire to see evil befall him. Such thoughts and desires come not from above, but are "earthly, sensual, devilish."

When one who is envious of another, hears the other one praised, although he may have no just reason to infer the praise unmerited, he stands ready to insinuate evil with his suspicious "yes, but"—

If an envious person attains what he has sought, he can't enjoy himself if he sees the subject of his envy enjoying himself also.

Haman was invited to attend the royal banquet, and he was elated thereat; "yet" said he, "all this availeth me nothing so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the King's gate." (Est. 5: 13.)

What a selfish heart that must be, that can only feel contented when it alone is happy! How far from that Spirit which leads us to "rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep!" (Rom. 12: 15.)

If an envious person has the love and confidence of others, he wants it alone. Let them who love him, also love another, and at once his evil passions are aroused, and from henceforth the innocent object of his envy, is treated as a trespasser upon his rights.

Of Joseph it is recorded, "when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him." (Gen. 37: 4.)

And how many times that scene has been repeated by others since—and repeated too, by them who profess to be brethren in Christ. Oh, shame! that such wicked feelings are ever indulged for an instant by those who say they are "followers of that which is good." (1 Pet. 3: 13.)

Are any who read this, inclined to be envious? Does another's prosperity detract from your own enjoyment? Are you unwilling for them to enjoy the things which please you? When you hear your brother or sister commended, do you ever drop any insinuations by that suspicious "but" or "if," as though you could tell a few things which would lead them to entertain another opinion?

Do you ever do so? And is this the manifestation of the golden rule? Is this the way a Christian should feel and act?

I pray thee, let such evil thoughts have no longer a dwelling-place in your hearts. Banish them at once, and if ever they knock for admittance, give way to them not for a moment. Let nothing have a lodgment in your heart but pure and loving and holy thoughts.

Pray with David—"Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me." (Ps. 51: 10.)

Head and Hands.

Don't you think Elder A. is a little lazy, in that he never works at any kind of business with his hands?

Well I do not know about that. Is he not a good preacher? and does he not write interesting articles for the paper? and does he not preach on an average three and four sermons a week? and are they not always fresh and full of instruction?

Oh yes: but I have heard of his poverty; and I think a preacher who has a family; should look after their interests, and work a little with his hands, if need be.

Yes but head work is very exhausting to ones physical forces and a man that studies hard cannot work at the same time with his hands; and a public speaker will exhaust as much vital force in two hours, as a farmer or mechanic will in a much longer time at ordinary labor. There are men who preach, and work with their hands; but they do not do justice to either preaching or working. Concentration of power is what is needed to develop the genius of a man.

Let an ordinary gift be centered upon any one feature of business, and you will find perfection in that branch developed. Take a man of twice the natural power and divide his efforts and he is not proficient in any branch of business. Let the preacher preach and the farmer plow and reap, and the mechanic attend to his occupation, and each do their duty as servants of the Lord and the car will move.

Delinquency in the finances of the church stops the wheels of progress as readily as to hold the preacher from his duty. Let each gift and calling be active, and the church of Christ becomes invincible and bids defiance to the gates of hell. Muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn and very soon there is no corn for either ox or owner.

Pervert the plan of God and forbid the preacher of the gospel living of the gospel, and you defeat the object of the gospel scheme at once.

Shoulder all the burdens to be borne off upon the preachers back, and you will kill him—and yourself too.

Let your preacher do all the sacrificing in the church, and you will soon discover the fires of the altar are extinguished.

Let the preacher do all your praying and exhorting, and you will find yourself prayerless and without a warning voice.

All hands at work, is the way to put up the building, and make the work light. Do what you can, and let others do what they can can. All will then be at work, and some thing will be accomplished. W. A. FENN.

The Black Year.

The year 1871 will hardly be considered in history a year of grace. In point of fatality to human life, and destruction to material values by extraordinary natural causes, no year in the history of the world can equal it. Overwhelmed as we are by our own disaster, we have given little attention to what has been transpiring abroad, and have almost come to consider ourselves the only sufferers. The retrospect, however is a terrible one. War, famine, pestilence, fire, wind and water, and ice, have been let loose and done their worst, and with such appalling results, and with such remarkable phenomena accompanying them, that it is not to be wondered at, men have sometimes thought the end of the world had come. We have seen our own fair city laid in ashes, throughout almost its entire business limits, and seventy thousand people left homeless. On that same night, the conflagration swept through Northern Wisconsin and Michigan, sweeping village after village with horrible loss of life, and ruining thousands of acres of timber, the cutting and milling of which formed the main industry of that region. Illinois, Minnesota, Indiana, New York, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Missouri, and California, the Alleghenies, the Sierras, and the Rocky Mountains have been ravaged by fire, destroying immense amounts of property and entailing wide-spread suffering. Chicago is not the only city which has suffered. Peshtigo, Manistee, Cacheville and Vallejo, Cal., Urbana, Darmstadt, and Geneva, under the Alps, have all been visited by terrible fires; and the torch of the incendiary has been applied successively to Louisville, St. Louis, Toronto, Montreal, and Syracuse.

The pestilence has walked at noonday. The cholera has steadily traveled from Asia westward through Europe, and our despatches of yesterday announced its arrival at New York Quarantine. One of the most appalling plagues of modern times, arising from yellow fever, has swept over portions of South America, and, in Buenos Ayres alone, 28,000 bodies were buried in one cemetery. Persia has been almost depopulated by the plague, which has been rendered all the more terrible by the added horrors of famine; and now, in our own country, small-pox has appeared as an epidemic in nearly every large city.

Storms, in their various manifestations, have never been so destructive before. In one night, a river in India suddenly rises, swollen by a storm, and sweeps away an entire city, destroying 3,000 houses, and utterly prostrating the crops. The little French seaport town of Pornic has been almost utterly destroyed by a tidal wave. The icebergs of the Arctic have caught and imprisoned within their impassable walls thirty-three whalers, inflicting a loss of a million and half of dollars upon the city of New Bedford, and seriously crippling an important branch of industry. St. Thomas has been devastated by a hurricane which left 6,000 people homeless and strewed its coasts with wrecks. A typhoon, of terrible power, has swept along the Chinese coast, destroying everything in its course,—towns, shipping, and life. A hurricane at Halifax has inflicted a severe blow upon English shipping. The storms on the English coast have never been so severe before, nor so fruitful in maritime disasters. A tidal wave at Galveston swept off all the shipping in port. A tornado has swept through Canada, doing serious damage in Toronto, Montreal, and Quebec. The island of Formosa has been nearly destroyed by an earthquake.

Add to these the unusual crop of murders and suicides in this country, the alarming increase of railroad and steamboat disasters, the monstrous villainies which have been brought to light in public offices and private corporations, the French-German war with its attendant horrors, and the statement of the astronomers that there has been an explosion in the sun, and that two or three comets are just now in danger of losing their tails by their proximity to that orb,—and we may be justified in assuming that the year 1871 will be known in future calendars as the Black Year.—Chicago Tribune.

The Attitude of Russia.

The attitude of Russia becomes each day, so far as Europe is concerned, more alarming. Sixteen years have sped since the Emperor Nicholas lay a dying, disappointed man, having lived just long enough to see his dearest projects thwarted by the events of the Crimean war. His last hours on earth were almost exclusively passed with his successor, whom he had for years been assiduously instructing in affairs of state. Several times during their parting interviews, the Emperor Alexander left his father's bedside to write down his exact words. What passed on that occasion he alone knows, with the exception of the very last articulate words of the dying man, which were uttered in French in the presence of others. "Dites a Fritz (the King of Prussia) de rester le meme pour la Russie, et dene pas oublier les paroles de papa." "Tell Fritz to remain the same toward Russia, and not to forget his father's words."

From that hour the policy of Russia seemed, so soon at least as the Crimean war was ended, to be one of devotion to recovery of forces and internal improvement. Six years after, on the 3d of March, 1861, was promulgated that act indicative of such stupendous individual power—the emancipation of forty millions of beings by a stroke of the pen. By September, 1863, the emancipation of the serfs on the crown lands was all but accomplished; land was granted to the peasants on the estates of the crown, which they were to pay for in forty-nine years by instalments, each being equal to the poll-tax formerly yielded by them. At the end of this period they become freehold land-owners. In March, 1863, serfdom was abolished throughout the Empire; the serfs being compensated on a scale of payment by which their previous labors was estimated at a yearly rental of six per cent.—so that for every six roubles that the labor annually earned, he had to pay one hundred to his master, as his capital value, to become a freeholder. Of this sum the serfs had to give immediately twenty per cent. while the remaining eighty per cent. was disbursed as an advance by the Government to the owners, to be repaid at intervals extending over forty-nine years by the free peasants. Contemoraneously with the completion of this vast measure, various other reforms of the most important character were begun, and have since been brought into operation. The old Russian bureaucrat, with his itching palm ever in need of golden ointments, is almost a nuisance of the past. In the courts of justice salaries have been immensely raised, and competent persons appointed to high judicial position.
